Mr. BYRNES. I know the Senator would not consume 10 hours. On the other side of the Capitol, if the time is equally divided, and if the Senator from Maine were there, and placed in charge of dispensing one-half of the total time, or 10 hours, he would not use the whole 10 hours himself, but would divide it among a number of those who wished to speak. That would be the action taken in the House. I think the Senate would be equally courteous. If the time were in charge of the Senator from Maine in the Senate he would permit others to speak. Only now and then does a Senator demand to be recognized to consume all the time. It is not generally done.

Mr. WHITE. The only thing I wanted to make clear was that there was no provision in the resolution as to the effective control of that time.

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. WHITE. And it may be that there should not be. I am not finding fault.

Mr. BYRNES. I say there is no provision as to the House. This is as to both House and Senate. Of course, I agree that in the House, by agreement between the parties, there has never been any trouble because it has been divided, and one man in charge of the bill is placed in charge of the time, whether it be the chairman of the committee or the ranking member of the committee. There is no reason why the same thing could not be done in the Senate. The same provision applies as to both Houses.

Mr. President, I desire to consume no more time.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to ask a question for my general information. During the last few years a great many special bureaus have been set up and corporations formed by Executive orders. I assume that the President has full control to abandon or shuffle any bureaus or instrumentalities that have been created by Executive order regardless of any legislation; is that correct?

Mr. BYRNES. That is my understanding. In section 2 appears the following language:

The term "executive agency" means any executive department, commission, independent establishment, corporation owned or controlled by the United States, board, bureau, division, service, office, authority, or administration in the executive branch of the Government.

I want to say to the Senate now, because one question was raised in discussion as to the use of the term "executive agency," that the draftsman of this bill used that phrase merely for the purpose of designating all of the agencies which were subject to reorganization. There is no question in my mind that they were absolutely right and that there is no conflict in it. But just because some gentlemen who are sincere about it are fearful that by using the words "executive agency" in section 2 that it might be argued earnestly and sincerely by people who are interested in the departments that that phrase was intended to include some of the independent agencies; therefore at the proper time I intend to offer amendments to strike out "executive agency" wherever it occurs and use the word "agency" instead.

The word "agency" was used in the bill considered in the Senate at the last session. I think it is fully comprehensive, and it would remove any discussion as to an independent agency being held to be an executive agency, because it is so referred to in the bill.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I know the Senator's great familiarity with the structure of the Government. The thing I am inquiring about generally is whether or not there is a vast sector of the Government structure which the President can reorganize today, if he wishes, without any additional legislation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I do not think so. I have called attention to the right of the President to move statistical and scientific bureaus into the Department of Commerce. He can do that without sending any message or order to Congress.

Reference has been made to the Budget and Accounting Act. The Budget and Accounting Act of 1921 provides that the Director of the Budget shall, when directed to do so, submit to the President a report as to possible reorganizations and mergers in the Government. The language of the act is that the President may submit such reports to the Congress, but he would do so merely by way of a message to the Congress. The Congress would have to act upon it. The President nowhere has any absolute power that I know of which would enable him to merge, except in the respects to which I have called attention.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me give the Senator an example. This may not be a particularly important example, but it will illustrate what I have in mind. The Department of the Interior set up an experimental colony at Matanuska, Alaska. Subsequently, in the presence of a considerable failure of the experiment, it was transferred to a Government corporation which was organized to run it. I think it is called the Alaska Rehabilitation Corporation. Since that was a creation without benefit of legislative action, would it not still be within the President's control, regardless of any legislation, to do what he pleased with it?

Mr. BYRNES. It is now a part of the Department of the Interior. There is no question about that, is there?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I do not know whether or not there is any question about it.

Mr. BYRNES. Where does the agency obtain its funds?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I cannot answer that.

Mr. BYRNES. I must say that I am not familiar with that particular development, among the many which have taken place. I do not care where it is established; it must obtain its funds from one of the departments. It is covered by the bill, whether it is in one of the departments or in one of the other agencies.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator thinks that after the President has created a Government corporation by Executive order, he lacks the power to reach into the Executive order and do something else with the corporation?

Mr. BYRNES. It depends upon the source of his authority to issue the Executive order.

Mr. President, I wish to answer a question propounded by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone]. He asked if I would state the difference between the bill as it now stands and the bill as it passed the House. I have just said—

Mr. BONE. I meant the bill voted upon by the House

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator meant the bill voted on by the House last year. There is a great difference. First, I intend to offer an amendment to change "executive agencies" to "agencies." The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] called attention to that matter in the committee, and offered an amendment. I am glad to see the Senator from Virginia in the Chamber. My objection to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia was that it would prevent the transfer of a bureau or an office to one of the independent agencies. The bill provides that nothing can be taken from them. However, if the President saw fit in an Executive order he could transfer some activity to the Federal Trade Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, or any one of the other independent commissions.

I hope that what the Senator from Virginia has in mind can be accomplished. I hope to have an opportunity to talk informally to the Senator as to the amendment which I intend offering at the proper time changing "executive agency" to "agency."

Mr. BYRD. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that I have offered my amendment, and it is now on the desk.

Mr. BYRNES, I think what I had in mind can be accomplished.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] asks me to state the difference between the present bill and the bill which was defeated in the House last year. In the first place, the bill which passed the Senate and was defeated in the House provided for a revision of the civil-service organization, calling for one administrator instead of three members of the Commission. That provision is entirely out of the bill.

Mr. BONE. I am not thinking of the bill in the form it left the Senate. I am referring in this question to the bill in the form in which it was when it was voted on in the House. Its final form represented a drastic change from the bill upon which we voted.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator has not been correctly informed. It was not so drastically changed. However, I will answer the question in this way: The provision as to the civil service, whether or not it was changed after it left the House, is entirely out of the bill. The provision as to the General Accounting Office, regardless of how it was changed, is entirely out of the bill. The provision as to the Welfare Department, which was in the bill as it passed the Senate, is out of the bill. The provision as to the National Resources Committee is out of the bill. There is nothing left in this bill except the provision as to reorganization, and the provision for six assistants to the President.

As to the provision regarding reorganization, that has been changed so that any order signed by the President can be vetoed by concurrent action of the Senate and House, without regard to the President, whereas in the former bill it had to be done by joint resolution, requiring a two-thirds vote in the event of a Presidential veto. Boiled down, it means that a majority, instead of two-thirds, is all that is required.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Before the Senator takes his seat, has he referred to the fact that the bill which was passed by the Senate eliminated the power to abolish functions?

Mr. BYRNES. I did.

Mr. BYRD. The present bill does give the power to amend or abolish functions of the Government.

Mr. BYRNES. I discussed that matter a while ago. On the floor of the Senate an amendment was offered, which was agreed to by me, eliminating from the bill the power to abolish functions for the reason which I stated at the time, which reason I believe is right: So long as the bill required that there should be a two-thirds vote-and it did require it, for all practical purposes—the power to abolish functions should not be in the bill. In this bill it was determined that inasmuch as a two-thirds vote was not required. and the action of the President could be disapproved by a simple majority, it was not necessary to eliminate the power to abolish functions. That is important for this reason: Without that authority the mere power to transfer some employees from one department over to another department, and leave the functions untouched in the first department, would not accomplish any saving. Take, for example, the Alien Property Custodian. I am not making a reorganization plan, but merely citing an example. If we transfer the employees of the Alien Property Custodian over to the Department of Justice, and still leave in the Alien Property Custodian's office the function to carry on its duties, and the function is not abolished in the order submitted to the Congress, what happens is that at the next session Congress would be again asked to provide money for that office.

We used to talk about 14 departments making maps. If by an order the power to make maps were taken from the Department of Agriculture, or from the Department of the Interior and placed in one department, and the function were not abolished, in those departments, at the next session of Congress estimates would be presented.

Under the organic act they would have the right to do that. If the money were provided, the office would go right back into the map-making business. If we want to achieve economy, there must be the power to abolish functions. The situation is safeguarded because of the right of the Congress, by a majority vote, to disapprove any order that we think is wrong. So far as I am concerned, I believe that when we state in the bill that one of the purposes is to reduce expenditures, we should not take from the bill the power which would enable the executive department to reduce expenditures in that department.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator a question: He has personally agreed with the view that the power proposed to be given should not be delegated to the President of the United States or to the executive branch without some power of veto by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. BYRNES. We will agree on that; yes.

Mr. WHEELER. Very well. Now the Senator says that in this bill there is a power on the part of the Congress, a majority of the Congress of the United States to place a veto. I challenge that statement of the Senator, because if one House votes in favor of a plan and the other House votes against it, it still becomes effective and the law.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. So, consequently, it is not the action of the majority of the Congress of the United States at all.

Mr. BYRNES. Perhaps the Senator misunderstood me. I know he would not misquote me. I never did say "by a majority of both Houses sitting in joint session."

Mr. WHEELER. No; it is not necessary for the two Houses to sit in joint session.

Mr. BYRNES. The plan cannot be made effective against the Congress.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not understand the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. I say that if both Houses of Congress disapprove a plan it is gone.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but it is necessary to have both Houses act.

Mr. BYRNES. If one House disapproves a plan, it is not gone; it is effective.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. No one House should have the right. Congress speaks not by one House but by a concurring action of both Houses.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, that is so when they are acting affirmatively. But where did the Senator ever learn or where did anybody else ever conceive the idea that in a parliamentary government a law could be passed by negative action of one branch of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. BYRNES. When the two Houses of Congress adopt a resolution disapproving a plan it is disapproved just the same as when Congress repeals a law. That may be called negative action, and if a law is repealed, that is the will of the two Houses of Congress acting and not one.

Our minds go back, when the Senator refers to this matter, to what happened in the Hoover administration, when, after much ado. Congress passed a reorganization bill under which one House would have the power to put to sleep any plan proposed. The fact that the Democrats were in control makes no difference to me. They were wrong, in my opinion. I have never seen any excuse for partisanship in a matter of this kind. Republican and Democratic Presidents alike have urged some plan of reorganization. Every one of us, when asked the question, "Do you believe in reorganization?" says "yes." If you will ask anyone in the executive departments, "Do you believe in reorganization," he will say "yes"; but he will qualify the statement by saying "do not touch me." When it comes to the Senate and House, those bodies are in favor of reorganization, but some Member says, "I have a friend who is on this commission or that commission; do not touch him; everything else is all right, but leave him alone." Every time we have tried to do it, from the administration of President Taft to this day, that is what we have met. The passage of the pending bill may not accomplish great things, but at least I want to hope that something may be done under it to save some money.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I am glad to hear the Senator admit that under the Hoover administration the Republicans provided that if either branch of Congress disapproved of a plan proposed then it should not become a law. At the last session of Congress, when legislation similar to this was pending, it was repeatedly stated to Democrats-to some of us who were opposing the bill-"But you gave this power to Mr. Hoover." Let me say we did not give this same power to Mr. Hoover under the bill which was considered at that time, nor did we give him the same power that we are proposing to give the President of the United States by this piece of legislation.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the history of it is known to the Senator from Montana. In June 1932 we put through a plan which gave to either House the power to kill any plan which was proposed. Then in February 1933, from the Appropriations Committee I offered an amendment, and, instead of this mild and moderate measure, it provided for no concurrent resolution of any kind but provided that the order should become effective in 60 days. The Senate adopted the proposal unanimously. That was during the Hoover administration, but only a few days remained, and, therefore, it would not be fair to say that President Hoover had any opportunity to act. The Democrats came into control of the administration 30 days later and we removed the provision that the 60 days could not run unless Congress was in session. I provided in my amendment that the 60 days had to run during a session of Congress, so that the Congress would have time to enact legislation disapproving the orders. An amendment was adopted which removed that safeguard from it; and, as a result, the 60 days ran whether the Congress remained in session or not. They just made it effective in 60 days. That is the history of it.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I see that the bill as reported by the Senator's committee has eliminated the Tariff Commission from the list of agencies to be exempted under the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator who is a member of the committee, that I have not had a chance to talk to him this morning, but I have talked to other members of the committee: and when that amendment is reached. I intend to ask that it be not concurred in.

Mr. BYRD. The committee amendment also eliminates the exemption of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Yes; that was eliminated.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record as part of my remarks a memorandum as to why the United States Employees' Compensation Commission should not be eliminated from the list of exempted agencies.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Without objection, the memorandum will be printed in the

The memorandum is as follows:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COMMISSION, Washington, March 16, 1939.

Hon. HARRY F. BYRD.

United States Senate, Washington, D. C. My Dear Senator Byrd: Pursuant to your request, I am forward-My Dear Senator Byrd: Pursuant to your request, I am forwarding herewith a statement showing the number of injuries reported to the Commission under the several workmen's compensation laws administered by it, which shows the distribution of work between public and private employment under normal conditions. It is true that at the present time the Commission is handling, in addition to its normal work, a large volume of work arising out of the Federal work relief program. The latter, however, is not considered a permanent function and should therefore be excluded from consideration in determining the character of the work performed by the Commission and the form of administrative procedure necessary to perform this function in an efficient and economical manner. to perform this function in an efficient and economical manner.

The records show beyond any question of doubt that nearly two-thirds of all cases reported to the Commission prior to the Federal emergency relief program were from private employment. Only about one-third or, to be exact, 36 percent of the cases handled by the Commission related to Federal employees. The attached startement shows the distribution of such cases for the last fiscal year and for various steps over a period of 10 years. The statement represents only employments normally within the purview of the Federal workmen's compensation laws.

Federal workmen's compensation laws.

In the administration of the workmen's compensation laws applicable to private employment, the regulations and policies of the Commission affect the interests of approximately one-half million employees and approximately 40,000 private employers. The interests of all insurance carriers engaged in writing workmen's compensation insurance under these laws are similarly affected. The Commission is required to make inspections of the operations of employers within the purview of these laws for the purpose of recommending procedures for the prevention of accidents. It is required to pass upon the qualifications of employers to act as self-insurers and to determine whether insurance carriers shall be authorized to write insurance under such laws.

The Commission has not set up a permanent organization to handle claims arising out of the emergency relief program. As a matter of fact, such functions have been carried on almost exclusively by an emergency force. The purpose of this was to discharge this function on a strictly temporary basis and to facilitate the discontinuance of the emergency staff upon termination of the work relief program.

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR RETENTION OF INDEPENDENT COMMISSION STATUS OF THE UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION COM-

Mission

In the United States and in the Canadian Provinces the commission form of administration of workmen's compensation laws has been found to be by far the most practical and effective. There are in effect in the United States 46 State workmen's compensation laws (Arkansas and Mississippi having no such law), and in the great majority of States, namely, in 31 States, the statutes provide for board or commission form of administration. Administration by a single administrator exists in only 12 States, while the remaining three States have relegated workmen's compensation administration to the courts.

The United States Employees' Compensation Commission administers Federal workmen's compensation laws with respect to four classes of employees; namely, (1) civil employees of the United States, numbering at times approximately 1,000,000; (2) emergency relief employees, enrollees of the Civilian Conservation Corps, and Naval Reservists, all numbering approximately 3,300,000; (3) longshoremen, ship repairmen, and other maritime employees in private employment, numbering approximately 300,000, and (4) employees of private employers in the District of Columbia, numbering approximately 150,000. These laws affect the rights of between four and five million employees and approximately 40,000 private employers. 40,000 private employers.

The compensation payments made from funds of the United States appropriated for the Commission under classes (1) and (2) above, aggregate approximately $10,000,000 yearly. It will thus be seen that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission performs a very important function in the physical, social, and economic rehabilitation of employees of the United States and of contain classes of workers in private industry.

certain classes of workers in private industry.

HISTORICAL BACKGROUND OF FEDERAL ACT

Congress passed a very limited Compensation Act in 1908 (act of May 30, 1908) applicable to certain specified employees of the United States. This was later extended to cover certain other groups of employees (acts of March 4, 1911, March 11, 1912, and July 27, 1912). The administration of the act of May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. 556), was vested in the Secretary of Commerce and Labor. When separate Commerce and Labor Departments were created, the administration of the Federal workmen's compensation law was ssed a very limited Compensation Act in 1908 (act given to the Secretary of Labor, who, being unable personally to administer the law, delegated it to a single administrator, namely, the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The ineffectual administration of the old Federal workmen's the Commissioner of the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

The ineffectual administration of the old Federal workmen's compensation law by a single administrator under the jurisdiction of a large Government department was the subject of extended debate in Congress upon the measure which became the act of September 7, 1916, the present workmen's compensation law for employees of the United States (Congressional Record (339), vol. 53, pt. 13, pp. 12587–14173, 64th Cong., 1st sess.). The existing 1916 act had been prepared with great care, and after much thought and consideration, by a disinterested association of thinkers and workers in economic and philanthropic fields, associated in New York under the name of the Society for the Promotion of Labor Legislation. Some Members of Congress at that time suggested that the administration of the act should be placed in the Department of Labor. A careful study of systems of administration of such laws, however, had showed conclusively that the separate commission form, overwhelmingly adopted by the States, would afford the most efficient, just, and economical administration. When considering the 1916 act, Congress had before it the benefit of the experience of the Department of Labor in the administration of the old Federal law, and found from that experience that the single administrator type of administration was not effective. In fact, the then administrator of the law (the Commissioner, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor), who appeared before the congressional committee, told the committee that the administration of the Federal workmen's compensation law did not belong in his bureau; he supported such administration by a three-commissioner body (H. Rept. No. 678, 64th Cong., 1st sess.).

After thorough inquiry, the congressional committee reporting the measure which became the existing act of September 7, 1916, reported in part as follows:

"The existing law is administered by the Secretary of Labor through the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Dr. Meeker, the Comm

the measure which became the existing act of September 7, 1916, reported in part as follows:

"The existing law is administered by the Secretary of Labor through the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Dr. Meeker, the Commissioner of Labor Statistics, stated at a hearing on March 31, 1914, page 19, that in his opinion the law should not be administered by his Bureau. It seemed to the committee that the administration of this act could be best performed by an independent commission. It is a matter concerning the relation between the Government as a whole and its employees as a whole, and for that reason should not be placed under the supervision of any one department. It seemed especially unwise to place the administration in the hands of the Department of Labor, because that Department in large measure represents, and is intended to represent, the side of labor, whereas the administrative body having charge of the proposed act should represent, and should be constantly alert to safeguard the interests of the Government.

"" * Nearly all the compensation acts in this country provide for administration by a commission. When it is remembered that the number of employees included within the compensation acts of most of these States is far less than the 400,000 employees covered by the proposed bill, the importance of an adequately manned commission is obvious."

The committee desired particularly to avoid the bias and prejudice of departmental.

The commission is obvious.

Th

body which would be responsible to Congress, and through Congress to the taxpayers.

The work of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, as far as Federal employee cases are concerned, is an outgrowth of the business of the two Committees on Claims of Congress. Before the enactment of the Federal law, relief in injury and death cases was dependent in each individual case upon the recommendation of the Committees on Claims. The multiplicity of cases, plus inadequate investigational facilities, placed a great burden upon the congressional committees, which to a large extent was lifted by the creation of the Commission. The creation of the Commission was therefore an exigent act to relieve Congress of some of its work. Since its origin, the Commission has continued to serve the Committees on Claims by making for them investigations, furnishing reports, etc., with respect to a large number of private relief bills which the committees have to consider at each session. The point is here made that the Commission does not belong in any executive department, because its creation and use by Congress shows that it is an adjunct or arm of the legislative branch of the Government. It may be compared with the Federal Trade Commission, in that both Commissions serve Congress and both perform quasi judicial functions, functions which the Supreme Court held in Humphrey's Executor v. United States (295 U. S. 602) to be endowed with legislative and judicial qualities rather than executive.

ECONOMY AND EFFICIENCY OF PRESENT THREE-MEMBER FORM OF COMMISSION

Unless obvious economy or more effective administration will Unless obvious economy or more effective administration will result from reshuffling of an agency, there is no point in destroying an efficient existing facility. The present Commission operates as a compact efficient unit, having employees of years of training and experience. Its budgets have never been criticized. The Commission's work does not overlap that of any other department, agency, or unit of the Government. It may safely be stated that it would not be possible to build up in any executive branch of government an agency to carry out the same functions as those being performed by the Commission with any saving in administrative costs. The Commission for years has consistently directed its efforts toward improving administration, effecting savings at every dictate of experience. experience.

There are in general three ways to administer a workmen's compensation law; they are (1) by a specialized commission or board, usually of three or more members; (2) by a single administrator, who may be either within or without an executive department; and (3) by a court. The last mentioned will not be dealt with because it obviously is inappropriate for purposes of the Federal Government.

A specialized commission or board, freed from outside interference with its essentially quasi-judicial functions, has proved to be the best form of administrative agency in the highly specialized work of administering a workmen's compensation law. Freedom from interference is essential for any quasi-judicial body dealing with human rights. A multiple membership commission, having representatives of labor and of the major political parties, effords a minimum of chance for hise prejudice improper political having representatives of labor and of the major political parties, affords a minimum of chance for bias, prejudice, improper political influence, or other destructive forces. Multiple membership is almost universal in appellate judicial tribunals and in many lesser tribunals because it gives a guaranty of rational deliberation and permits free interplay of ideas. A multiple membership commission affords the benefit of horizontal administration, each member contributing an equal voice. This form of administration has been the choice of 31 out of the 46 States having workmen's compensation laws.

tion has been the choice of 31 out of the 46 States having work-men's compensation laws.

The other form, vertical form, of administration consists of a single administrator, together with his subordinate administrators, who may be either within or without a department. An example is the Commissioner, Bureau of Labor Statistics, who formerly administered the old Federal act. Considering the volume of work carried on by the present Commission, it would be utterly impossible for a single administrator to perform the full administrative function. He would necessarily have to have a corps of deputy administrators, who necessarily would be subordinate to him. No material salary saving could be expected by a shift from horizontal to vertical administration.

The most obvious vices of single administration are the oppor-nate to him. No material salary saving could be expected by a shift from horizontal to vertical administration.

The most obvious vices of single administration are the opportunities for bias, prejudice, and narrow-mindedness to affect administration of the law, and the chance of political and other favoritism to enter. Such an administrator has not the benefit of the valuable counsel of associates of equal rank. His subordinates, consciously or unconsciously, would merely reflect his policies and ways of thinking. The Government might easily be the loser by hundreds of thousands of dollars annually through the payment of claims in cases of dubious validity, which the deliberate judgment of a multiple membership commission would reject. The frailty of human judgment is best guarded against by multiple membership with horizontal administration so uniformly followed with respect to other quasi judicial bodies.

The annual conferences of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards and Commissions, since inauguration thereof, have uniformly favored "Commission form of administrations." The national conference on labor legislation, sponsored by the Secretary of the United States Department of Labor, at its fifth annual meeting held in Washington, D. C., in November 1938, adopted a resolution recommending administration of workmen's compensation legislation by a "board or commission."

COMMISSION SHOULD BE FREE TO EXERCISE ITS QUASI-JUDICIAL FUNCTION

The functions of the Commission, which are like those of most State workmen's compensation boards or commissions, are quasi judicial. As far as the United States Employees' Compensation Commission is concerned, the Joint Committee of Congress on the Reorganization of the Executive Departments, in its report submitted to the State state. mitted to the Sixty-eighth Congress, recommended that the Com-mission should remain as one of the independent executive estabmission should remain as one of the independent executive estab-lishments. The committee said:

"The principle involved requires the complete independence of all organizations having quasi-judicial functions from even the appearance of arbitrary control. Short of terminating their work altogether, there seems to be no alternative to continuing estab-lishments of this type."

While workmen's compensation commissions are not courts and Ishments of this type."

While workmen's compensation commissions are not courts and do not exercise pure judicial power, their very nature as tribunals for the adjudication of claims involving human rights requires the exercise of quasi-judicial functions. The courts repeatedly have recognized that quasi-judicial functions are exercised by such tribunals. (For digests of cases see American Digest System, key No. 1079.) The Acting Comptroller General in a recent decision (October 3, 1938, A-95378) touched generally upon the function of the Commission when he said:

"* * The act of Sentember 7, 1916, the Employees' Company

"* * The act of September 7, 1916, the Employees' Compensation Act, is in form and purpose somewhat similar to the employers' liability laws enacted by various States for the benefit of employees injured in the course of their employment, and basically the purpose is to provide compensation for injuries suffered in the the purpose is to provide compensation for injuries suffered in the course of employment. Certainly, compensation paid under an employers' liability act is not a gratuity * * *."

In the administration of the Longshoremen's and Harbor Workers' Compensation Act and the District of Columbia workmen's compensation law, the functions of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission are more truly quasi judicial than those of some of the independent establishments whose quasi-judicial functions heretofore have been recognized in prior reorganization legislation.

The Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Federal Trade Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, whose functions were left unimpaired, deal with controversies in which the Government is one party and a private individual or corporation is the other, the controversy usually affecting the regulation of business or industry, as distinguished from adversary rights of opposing parties. Under the two acts named, the Commission directly and through its deputy commissioners exercises quasi-judicial functions in deciding rights of opposing private individuals, who are the adversaries, the Government not being a party but serving as the adversaries, the Government of being a individuals, who are the adversaries, the Government not being a party but serving as the adjudicating tribunal. The procedure involves a claim, answer, notice of hearings, public hearings stenographically reported, summoning of witnesses, taking of testimony and depositions, and all of the other procedure incident to hearing a contest between private parties. In Paramino Lumber Co. v. Marshall (18 Fed. Supp. 645) the court specifically referred to the Commission's deputy commissioner as "a quasi-judicial officer."

CONCLUSION

CONCLUSION

The American Federation of Labor and other labor groups are firmly opposed to disturbing the present three-member administration of the Federal workmen's compensation laws. Labor does not want the Commission's quasi-judicial functions to be impaired by subordinating them to an executive department or agency. Labor feels that the Commission's experience of 22 years has beyond question proved the wisdom of administration of the Federal workmen's compensation laws by an independent agency. The American Federation of Labor, in conventions for a number of years, has commended the work of the Commission and has passed resolutions favoring "the preservation of the present form of administration of the Federal workmen's compensation laws by maintaining the the Federal workmen's compensation laws by maintaining the United States Employees' Compensation Commission as an independent establishment."

pendent establishment."

In a recent radio speech the Honorable Robert F. Wagner, United States Senator from New York, speaking upon reform of social security, again referred to the need for a workmen's compensation law for railroad employees and other workers engaged in employments in interstate commerce. If enacted, such a law would no doubt provide for administration by an independent multiple membership commission, which, logically, would be the present Commission as it is now constituted, or as enlarged, perhaps, by the requisite number of additional members. Bills heretofore introduced in Congress proposing workmen's compensation legislation for such employments provide for the commission form of administration. From present activity of groups interested in the welfare of seamen it may reasonably be expected that similar legislation may be introduced at the present session of Congress to provide a Federal workmen's compensation law for this class of employees who are outside of State jurisdiction.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to ask permission to put into the RECORD-I do not want to bore the Senate with it—a statement of the organic acts of the various departments and the authority given to the executive departments to merge and consolidate within such departments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.
Mr. NORRIS. The Senator may have explained the point while I was out, as I was called away from the Chamber, and have not heard all the discussion. I notice on page 3 of the bill quite a number of commissions, boards, and so forth, are exempted from the provisions of the bill so that they cannot be changed by any action of the President under this bill, and I notice that the Senate committee has added to that list, for instance-

Mr. BYRNES. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. NORRIS. I refer to the Mississippi River Commission. Why was that done?

Mr. BYRNES. That was done because it was in the bill last year and the information of the committee at that time was that if the Engineer Corps was to be exempted. that it could not be exempted effectively without exempting the Mississippi River Commission, the work of which is conducted by the Engineer Corps.

Mr. NORRIS. Is there a general rule that the committee had in mind in exempting other commissions and boards?

Mr. BYRNES. There was a general rule, and I will be glad to state it.

Mr. NORRIS. The committee has added an amendment including the Mississippi River Commission, for instance, in the list of the organizations exempted.

Mr. BYRNES. For the reason that the committee was of the opinion that its omission was an oversight on the part of the House of Representatives, because in all legislation as to the Engineer Corps the Mississippi River Commission is considered a part of the work of the Engineer Corps and that it should be exempted if the Engineer Corps—

Mr. NORRIS. Why should either one of them go in?
Mr. BYRNES. They are placed in the bill largely for the same reason that the Veterans' Administration is placed in it, because experience has shown that if they were not exempted by the committee, that at the end of 2 days' discussion, they will be exempted by the Senate. With the exception of those few agencies, the committee confined exemptions to quasi-judicial agencies. When it comes to the Engineer Corps and to the Veterans' Administration, they do not come within the rules, but if the action were not taken in the committee it would be taken in the Senate. The Senator from South Carolina has no doubt as to what would occur. There are some things that neither House nor Senate can do.

When it comes to the Veterans' Administration the Senate would not strike it out as one of the exemptions. It does not come within the rules. Last year the Senator from South Carolina opposed its exemption, and by one vote was successful, for a few hours only. The Veterans' Administration, in my opinion, does not come within the category of quasi-judicial bodies which are exempted from the provisions of the bill. It can hardly be called a quasi-judicial body. But the veterans' organizations wanted to be exempted, and Congress will exempt them.

Mr. NORRIS. Can the Senator think of any commission or board or office that is not included in these exemptions as to which there may not arise sometime some question as to its having the attribute of being quasi judicial?

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. NORRIS. The same reason that would exempt the Mississippi River Commission, for instance, would exempt anything else, would it not?

Mr. BYRNES. No. I think the Senator will agree that there is a difference between the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, and the National Labor Relations Board and the Mississippi River Commission.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I concede that; but in reference to commissions that are not in the list of exemptions, it does not seem to me that there can be given any logical reason why the Mississippi River Commission should be exempted that cannot apply to any other commission or office which has not been exempted.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Nebraska will not find the Senator from South Carolina disagreeing with him. I agree with him.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, if the Senator is right, and if I am right because I agree with him—that would be the only reason—there is not any logical reason why the Mississippi River Commission should be included in the exemptions in this bill.

Mr. BYRNES. No: there is not any reason, except that the Engineer Corps is exempted, and they conduct the work of the Commission. There is no reason why both should be exempted, except the fact that if the Engineer Corps were not exempted, while the Senator from Nebraska would not be bothered, tomorrow morning the secretaries to the Senators from other States would not be able to read one-half of their telegrams. When the vote came to be taken upon the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Nebraska and I would vote against exempting them, but when the result of the vote was announced we would have wasted 2 or 3 days, and by an overwhelming vote they would be exempted. There are some things that the Congress cannot do. In the Senate you might deny exemption to the veterans, you might deny exemption to the engineers; you might deny exemption to the Railway Retirement Board; but when the three ask to be exempted and you deny their request you are just wasting time. They will be exempted.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I understand the Senator to say, in effect, that this provision is in the bill, and some other things probably are in it, because the committee is attempting to please some influential Senators.

Mr. BYRNES. No; not because it is pleasing to any Senator, but because two-thirds of the Senators will vote to exempt them.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, the advocates of the bill are up against a proposition, and they have to get the support of these influential Senators or they cannot pass the bill. Is not that it?

Mr. BYRNES. I am only questioning the word "influential." I do not care whether the Senators are influential or not; we cannot get a majority of the Senate. We could not get one-third of the Senate to put the Veterans' Administration in this bill. I tried it last year. By one vote we refused to exempt the Veterans' Administration. I knew we were wasting time, because when the bill went to the House there was no chance of having legislation enacted with the Veterans' Administration included when the veterans' organizations objected. The Army engineers were exempted because you cannot enact legislation to which they object. You just cannot get the votes.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say to the Senator that I do not want the Senate to draw the conclusion that I have anything against the Mississippi River Commission. If it were not exempted, I do not know that it would be remodeled, or anything of the kind, or that I should want to remodel it or change it in any way; but if we are going to base a bill upon logical reasons, it seems to me that if we exempt any commission we ought to be able to give a logical reason for it, based, for instance, on the fact the Senator stated, that these other commissions had quasi-judicial functions, to which I agree

Mr. BYRNES. When it comes to the Federal Reserve Board, the committee has a reason. The member banks own the stock of the Federal Reserve bank entirely, and the Government has no stock in it. The expenses are paid by assessments upon the banks. The money is not even put into the general fund of the Treasury. The Federal Reserve Board was in the bill last year; and there is a logical reason, I think, when the Treasury fund is not affected.

When it comes to the Coast Guard, at first I thought a reason did not exist. Upon investigation I think it is justifiable, for the reason that today, under the existing law, the President has a right to transfer the Coast Guard into the Navy at any time. It could not go anywhere else; and therefore, as a practical matter, I see no objection to its exemption.

When it comes to the Engineer Corps, if it is to stay in the bill, the Mississippi River Commission should stay with it. As to whether it stays in the exemptions, I say to the Senator that it stays in because two-thirds of the Senate would have it put in, and if we did not do it the Senate would. If the Senate did not include it the House would insist. The Engineer Corps of the Army would never let any reorganization bill go through.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator mean that the Army engineers have that kind of control over Congress? If that is true, then the Engineer Corps ought to go in the bill. That is a good reason for putting it in.

Mr. BYRNES. I know; but we cannot put it in unless we have the votes, and that is something we cannot get, any more than we can get a majority of the Senate and the House to vote to put in the Veterans' Administration. The popular term now is to say we ought to be realistic. We may as well be realistic. Last year we had a bill here. We left the Veterans' Administration subject to reorganization by one vote. How was it done? It was done only because assurances were given that the Veterans' Administration would not be touched. That is the way the Senate, by one majority, refused to exempt it. Without those assurances the Senate never would have voted against it. The House exempted it. But because they had doubt about what would happen in conference they were against the bill. It was defeated.

In the House we never will get a reorganization bill with the Veterans' Administration included. And if the veterans and the Engineer Corps can get together with the railroad brotherhoods who are interested in the Railroad Retirement Board, we cannot pass any reorganization bill through this Congress. That is why the Congress has not acted on this subject in 25 years, and that is why there is not any chance of Congress acting in the next 25 years. We might as well be honest about it.

Mr. NORRIS. Let us be honest about it and not pass any bill then.

Mr. BYRNES. The way we are going, if we are going to put them in the bill, it cannot be passed.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. The Tennessee Valley Authority has not been exempted under this legislation.

Mr. BYRNES. I know the Senator from Montana really is not speaking to me now. He is trying to talk to the Senator from Nebraska over my shoulders. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I say the Tennessee Valley Authority has not been exempted.

Mr. BYRNES. I know the Senator from Montana is interested in the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, indeed. [Laughter.] The President may abolish all the functions of the Tennessee Valley Authority; and then if one House of the Congress should say it approved of the resolution, and the other should say it did not, the Tennessee Valley Authority would be abolished.

Mr. BYRNES. No: the President could do it if the Senator from Nebraska agreed; but the Senator from Nebraska is not going to agree, and, therefore, there is not any possibility of abolishing the T. V. A. If he did, both Houses would promptly pass a resolution disapproving it.

Mr. WHEELER. But the difficulty is this—
Mr. BYRNES. There is not any difficulty about that.
The T. V. A. cannot be abolished. The Senator from Nebraska is not going to let it be abolished.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree that there is not any difficulty about it as long as the present President is in the White

Mr. BYRNES. This bill is limited to the present President.

Mr. WHEELER. All right; but what excuse can the Democratic Members of the Senate offer when a Republican President is elected, if a Republican President is elected in 1940-

Mr. BYRNES. That is not going to be done. The Senator need not bother about that.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not so sure about that. The Senator, of course, is talking from the standpoint of South Carolina, where the Democratic ticket is voted anyway.

Mr. BYRNES. Does the Senator think Montana is not going to vote that way?

Mr. WHEELER. I am not at all sure that it is.
Mr. BYRNES. I have great confidence in the ability of the Senator from Montana to keep Montana in the Democratic column.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator has more confidence than

Mr. BYRNES. I know the Senator from Montana. He is

Mr. WHEELER. Let me ask the Senator what excuse Democratic Senators or other Democrats can offer if they vote to give this power to a Democratic President, and then refuse to continue it when a Republican President comes in and says "You have not completed this job, and I want this power extended for 4 years." What position are we going to be in? If our next President should be a Republican, one of the first things he probably would want to do would be to abolish the Tennessee Valley Authority; and then if one House of the Congress of the United States should say it was all right, the Tennessee Valley Authority would be abolished and repealed.

It is all very well to minimize this bill, and to say that the bill does not amount to anything, and the teeth have been taken out of it; but it still gives to the executive branch of the Government the right to abolish the functions of an office

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator will pardon me just 1 second until I finish this statement. It is all very well to minimize the bill, but a vital and it seems to me a fundamental principle of constitutional government is involved in it. We should not permit this bill to be brought in here and hurried through in a few minutes until we analyze it: and I think we are taking a very dangerous step at this particular time.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator has a certain amendment; and if it is adopted, according to him, the bill will be all right. What in the world would prevent the next Congress from enacting a reorganization bill if a majority of the Congress and the President were in favor of it? I find it very difficult to agree with my friends who oppose this bill. They are all my personal friends. I have been telling them that we have taken out of the bill everything that I was fighting for here last year except reorganization. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], who has devoted a great deal of time and study to this matter, wants the power extended over into the next administration.

Mr. WHEELER. I think that should be done. Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Montana says that if that is done we are liable to have a Republican administration, and T. V. A. will be abolished, and he favors extending it to another administration.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the power should be extended to the next administration. I do not think any man can stand on the floor of the Senate and consistently say that we are going to give this power to a Democratic President but we cannot give it to a Republican President. I do not believe the Members on this side of the aisle are so partisan as that—and the Senator from South Carolina says this should not be a partisan question at all-but the very remarks the Senator is making show that he is really making a partisan statement.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have told the Senator several times that I offered the reorganization resolution during a Republican administration.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. Then the Senator says we shall have a reactionary President. Well, I do not know. If I really believed another administration would wipe out all the agencies of the Government I would not be so willing to vote to extend powers to another administration. But I do not believe that would happen. After all, the President of the United States is elected by the people of America. The people of Montana, like the people of other States, vote for the President of the United States; and no man who occupies the position of President, the head of the executive department, is going to abuse any power that is placed in him, any more than is the Senator from Montana, or the Senator from South Carolina. If the next Congress and President want to repeal the legislation of this Congress, they can do it without any reorganization bill.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield to the Senator from Alabama in a second.

Under this bill the power to reorganize is limited to the present administration. Why? Because in the last session Members said, "If you do not limit the time you are liable to have a reactionary President." The Senator from South Carolina provided for limiting it to January 1, 1941. The opponents of the bill complained of that. It was too long. So the Senator from South Carolina, wanting to agree with them, said, "All right; I think the limit ought to be January 1, 1941, but I will agree to reduce it 6 months and put it at June 30, 1940." They were all satisfied. Now, when the House limits the time to January 1941 and I reluctantly agree. the opponents want it to go from now on. If I should agree to make it from "now on," tomorrow they would be here offering an amendment changing it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, when the Senator speaks of opposition to the bill I do not want to have him include me in that statement, because that is not my position.

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad to hear the Senator say that.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not want the Senator to give the impression that I am opposed to it on that ground. We are addressing a President of the United States, and I do not think we ought to be partisan about it; it is not a question with me whether it is this President or that President or some other President; it is a fundamental question of parliamentary government which faces the Senate and the country at the present time.

I am perfectly willing to agree that there should be some reorganizations in the Government of the United States, and I admit that it is difficult to get those reorganizations; but when the Senator says we cannot get them, what is he saying? What is he saying when he states that Congress will not act? He is saying that parliamentary government cannot do the job. It is a very dangerous thing to say to the people of the United States at this time that the Congress is incompetent. ineffective, and inefficient, and that consequently we have to turn the power over to the executive branch of the Government and let the President abolish functions of offices. If that is said to one President, we have to say it to the next President, and regardless of whether we agree with him on fundamental issues, after a President has been elected by the people of the United States, elected by the people of South Carolina and by the people of Montana, we cannot say to the Republican President. "We trusted a Democrat, but we do not trust you, a Republican, though you are President of the United States."

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator thinks it would be unwise to do it, then?

Mr. WHEELER. To do what?

Mr. BYRNES. To let a Republican President have that power?

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no; I say it is unwise to give that power to any President, Democratic or Republican.

Mr. BYRNES. Yet the Senator says he would have the time extended so as to include another administration.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I would have it extended to another President. If it is good for one President to have it, it is good for another President to have it; but I say it is not good for any President to have it, unless we provide that it shall not become law until both Houses of the Congress vote upon it, as is required under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I voted to give the power to a Republican President. The argument could have been made with greater force a year ago. Under the pending proposal a majority of the membership of the Senate and a majority of the membership of the House of Representatives could veto any order; and therefore the argument does not hold.

When the Senator speaks of confessing our incompetence, and says that we should not tell the American people such a thing, what does he want to tell them? He says that "I am in favor of reorganization, the Senator from Indiana is in favor of reorganization, the Senator from Virginia is in favor of it. Every Senator says he is in favor of it? President Roosevelt said he was in favor of it, President Taft said he was in favor of it, President Harding said he was in favor of it; President Coolidge was in favor of it, President Woodrow Wilson was in favor of it, Franklin D. Roosevelt was in favor of it. When we said that to the man on the street he would say, "If you are all telling the truth, why have you not done something about it? You have been saying that for 25 years, Republicans and Democrats; why have you not done it?" Will the people think any more of a Congress that says, "We think it should be done; we can do it, but we have not done it."

Why not tell them the fact? The fact is that we are too close to the seat of government to do it. State governments can be reorganized, but not the United States Government. I have not been able to remain in my office during the last 24 hours. If I go out of this Chamber now, I will be called to the phone. Some man who has been appointed to some office, appointed on the recommendation of a Senator or a Representative, will have a friend telephone me. He wanted a job on some commission or in some department, but the minute he was commissioned and in office. he conceived the idea that he had been drafted into the public service. He trusted the President to give him a job, but he would never be willing to trust him with any reorganization plan unless his particular bureau were eliminated from the reorganization plan. If a reorganization order is ever sent to the Congress, we will have difficulty getting to our offices because of the bureaucrats and the job holders who will be on the way all the way from the department to our office. What will they say? "You brought me here, Senator from Montana, or Senator from Tennessee. I did not want to come. I had a great law practice. I was doing fine. You drafted me into the public service, and now that I am here I am out of my law business, and here you are giving power to someone to abolish the job. I am in that job, and I have given the best years of life to that service. I want you to kill that reorganization order."

After a man has been in the service he believes that he is badly treated. He has forgotten about hanging around asking you for an endorsement to get the job. He honestly believes he was drafted into the service, and that he has a right to come and urge you to exempt his department.

How many Senators have come to me in the last 3 days to say, "I am for the reorganization bill, but I have a good friend on this commission. Is it not possible to exempt that commission?"

In some cases the department official is afraid to act, so he sends word to the representative of some association for whom he has done a favor and the representative of the association wires to Michigan, or to Carolina, or to Kansas, and immediately every friend the man ever had is on the telephone to say to you and to me, "Can you not prevent that reorganization? I know they have to reorganize, but this bureau is different from all others."

Congress will not do anything about it. The best proof is that we have not done anything.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison], and the former Senator from New York, Mr. Wadsworth, to whom I referred, and other Members of the Senate and of the House who served on joint committees during the last 25 years, just as sincere and as earnest as we are in the effort to bring about reorganization, prepared plans but they could not put it through. We forget the advice of the former Speaker of the House, the great Champ Clark, who said, "We listen to the solicitations and the appeals of those who have access to our ears, and forget the multitudes who can never see our faces or hear our voices."

Every time we step out of our offices we are confronted by these officials—and they are good fellows.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has very eloquently made an argument which I think bears out the position I took when I asked the Senator why, to be concrete, the Mississippi River Commission was exempted. I think the Senator has very forcefully explained why we cannot exempt, and should not exempt, any bureau or any office unless there is a reason that is general and fundamental which can apply to it.

I agree with the Senator absolutely in what he has said; but it seems to me he has demonstrated that the committee is perfectly illogical when it includes a Commission like the Mississippi River Commission and leaves out a lot of other organizations which are entitled to go in.

The Senator has referred to the fact that he had to leave his office to get away even from Senators.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no; not from Senators. I talk to all of them. That is how I know these things.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator said that Senators wanted this commission or that commission left in. I am one Senator who has not looked up the Senator from South Carolina, and who made no request of him. At least the Senator cannot put me in that category.

Mr. BYRNES. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I realize the difficult position in which the Senator finds himself. Yet it seems to me that that leads us to the fact that when we pass a bill we ought to exempt nothing unless there is a fundamental reason which can be given, and which does not depend on the desire of someone to hold a job.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have told the Senator from Nebraska I agree with him. What I said was that it just could not be done.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that there would not be so much interference by Senators and Members of the House under the new dispensation, under which an administration sets up patronage committees in the States; patronage committees, I might add, which are supposed to have much to do with the selection of the delegates to the next national convention. The pressure will not be coming from the Senators, but it will be coming from these patronage committees in the States. Perhaps the Senate would finally arrive at the point where it could pass a reorganization bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Perhaps so.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. There has been quite a lengthy discussion here between the Senator from South Carolina and the Senator from Montana upon the question of functions, and I should like to interrogate the Senator from South Carolina for just a moment in order that I may clear up what is in my own mind with respect to that point.

If I understand the reorganization bill correctly, it is presented solely for the purpose of affording some economy and efficiency in government. In paragraph 1, on page 2, of the bill it is stated that one of the purposes is to reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government.

I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina whether he agrees with me that the transfer of one of these executive agencies from one department to another will in no wise bring about the slightest economy, and that the only way economy can be had is through eliminating or abolishing the functions of one of these agencies.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course, Mr. President, I can very nearly agree with that. I think that where there is a duplication of activities, when they are combined, necessarily there should be some reduction in the number of employees. But, after all, the personnel expenses of the Government are only 171/2 percent, and there cannot be any great reduction. But the Senator has put his finger on the only place where there can really be a material reduction. Where five agencies are exercising this same function and it is transferred to one agency, no economy will result unless the functions of the other four agencies are abolished.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator on that question. It seems to me, from what has been said in the debate that the only difference is as to who shall be entrusted to abolish or eliminate these functions, and I for one believe that the executive branch of the Government is in a better position to say what should be transferred from one to another, or what should be eliminated, or abolished, than the legislative branch of the Government, especially in view of the 60-day provision we can avail ourselves of in the event that the Executive uses arbitrary power which we

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Illinois has expressed a thought that has been in my mind on the subject, that the measure gives to the President power only as to the executive department, of which he is the head. The Congress did not hesitate to delegate its power to the Supreme Court to change the rules of court procedure. Up to that time that was a function which had been exercised by the legislative branch of the Government. We delegated that power to the Court and ordered that the result be reported to the Congress in the last session. I have a copy of the report on my desk. No one introduced a resolution disapproving of it. Upon the action of the Supreme Court in reforming the procedure of the Court it became law. The Court performed a duty which prior to that time had been exercised by the legislative body itself.

One of my colleagues suggests that as a matter of fact the Supreme Court did it after conferring with the American Bar Association. I suppose that is true.

What the Senator from Illinois says is that all the pending measure would do would be to give to the President, the head of the executive branch of the Government, the power to try and effect some economies in the executive branch. and we provide that if he does anything we do not like, the Congress, by a concurrent resolution, can disapprove it and end it.

"Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of the Navy shall assign and distribute among the said bureaus such of the duties of the Navy Department as he shall judge to be expedient and proper; and all the duties of the said bureaus shall be performed under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and their orders shall be considered as emanating from him, and shall have full force and effect as such."

1889: Secretary of the Navy Benjamin Tracy wrote in his first annual report of 1889 that—

"The details of administering the Navy as an existing force, its vessels in commission, its officers, and its crews, were scattered, without assistance or coherence, among a variety of offices, bureaus, and boards. * * * To all these fragments of authority there was and boards. * * * To all these fragments of authority there was no central unity of direction except such as could be given by the personal attention of the Secretary * * and cases were not infrequent where a ship received simultaneous orders from three separate bureaus which were so directly contradictory that it was separate bureaus which were so directly contradictory that it was impossible to execute them."

By virtue of the authority vested in him by the act of 1842, the Secretary of the Navy attempted to solve this management problem by reorganizing the activities of the Department. So far as possible he charged the Bureau of Navigation with the supervision possible he charged the Bureau of Navigation with the supervision of the entire fleet and gave to the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting the supervision of miscellaneous branches of supplies and equipment. A board was established by departmental General Order No. 372 to have general supervision over the work of designing, constructing, and equipping new war vessels. A School of Application of the United States Marine Corps was established by General Order No. 1, 1891, and a Naval Medical School was established by General Order No. 89 in 1902.

1909: On February 26, 1909, a board appointed by President Theodore Roosevelt submitted a basic plan for the reorganization of the Navy Department. Congress failed to adopt this report, but steps were taken by Secretary Newberry and his successor. Secresteps were taken by Secretary Newberry and his successor, Secretary Meyer, to reorganize the Department along the lines proposed by administrative regulation as far as that was possible.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

1792; The act of February 20, 1792, establishing a general Post Office, provided that:

"* there shall be one Postmaster General who shall have authority to appoint an assistant, and deputy postmasters, at all places where such shall be found necessary. And he shall provide for carrying the mail of the United States, by stage carriages or horses, as he may judge most expedient, and as often as he, having regard to the productiveness thereof, as well as other circumstances shall think proper, and defray the expense thereof, with all other expenses arising on the collection and management of the revenue of the Post Office. He shall also have power to prescribe such regulations to the Deputy Postmaster, and others employed under him, as may be found necessary, and to superintend the business of the Department, in all the duties that are, or may be assigned to it, and also direct the route or road, where there are more than one, between the places above established, which route or road shall be considered as the post road."

1829: Other statutes relating to the Post Office Department which were passed prior to 1836, made no provision for the internal organization of that Department, other than that authorizing the appointment, by the Postmaster General, of assistants and clerks to aid him in performing the duties of his office. Although the appointment, by the Postmaster General, of assistants and clerks to aid him in performing the duties of his office. Although a proper distribution of duties among the assistants and clerks in the departments was, no doubt, effected by earlier Postmasters General, the first definite organization of the Department, of which a record has been found, was that established by Maj. W. T. Barry. In a report communicated to the Senate on May 5, 1830, he indicated that the Department had been divided into three major divisions.

1891: Postmaster General Vilas and his successors, Messrs. Dickinson and Wanamaker, both recommended that Congress create the office of Fourth Assistant Postmaster General, and reorganize the Department. The office was created in 1891, but Congress failed to act on the reorganization. Accordingly Postmaster General Wanamaker issued an order of August 1, 1891, redistributing the duties of the Department. This reorganization received statutory recognition in the Legislative, Executive, and Judicial Appropriation Act of July 16, 1892.

1905: By order of November 1, 1905, Postmaster General Cortelyou again reorganized the Post Office Department into five main branches; one under his own direction and one under the direction of each of his four assistants. In a publication of the Institute for again reorganized the Post Office Department into five main branches; one under his own direction and one under the direction of each of his four assistants. In a publication of the Institute for Government Research of the Brookings Institution, entitled "The Development of National Administrative Organization in the United States," Dr. Lloyd M. Short makes the following statement concerning the determination of administrative organization of the Post Office Department:

"The administrative organization of the Post Office Department, like that of the Department of State and the Department of Justice, has developed almost entirely through the issuance of departmental orders to which Congress has automatically accorded statutory recognition in successive appropriation acts. In only a very few instances has legislative action been taken with respect to the organization of the Department prior to the issuance of orders by the Postmaster General effecting such organization, or without the express recommendation of that officer. As has been previously noted, a former head of the Post Office Department deplored the absence of permanent administrative organization of the Department, subject to change only by act of Congress. This complaint, however, has not been voiced by succeeding Postmasters General. The Post Office Department resembles, in many respects, a gigantic business enterprise, and as such, should continue to possess a large degree of flexibility in its organization and to be subject to the predominant control of the Postmaster General."

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

1789: The act of September 15, 1789, by which the first Congress created the Department of Foreign Affairs (later the Department of State) provided as follows:

State) provided as follows:

"That there shall be an executive department, to be denominated the Department of Foreign Affairs, and that there shall be a principal officer therein, to be called the Secretary for the Department of Foreign Affairs, who shall perform and execute such duties as shall from time to time be enjoined on or intrusted to him by the President of the United States, agreeable to the Constitution, relative to correspondences, commissions, or instructions to or with public ministers or consuls, from the United States, or to negotiations with public ministers from foreign states or princes, or to memorials or other applications from foreign public ministers or other foreigners, or to such other matters respecting foreign affairs, as the President of the United States shall assign to the said Department; and furthermore, that the said principal officer shall conduct the business of the said Department in such manner as the President of the United States shall from time to time order or instruct. time order or instruct.

And be it further enacted, That there shall be in the said Department, an inferior officer, to be appointed by the said principal officer, and to be employed therein as he shall deem proper, and to be called the chief clerk in the Department of Foreign Affairs, and who, whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy, shall during such vacancy have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the said Department."

1833: Secretary McLane submitted a plan for the arrangement of his Department to President Jackson on August 29, 1833. According to the plan, which was approved by the President, the Department was divided into seven bureaus. The Chief Clerk of the Department was given immediate supervision over the work of these various bureaus.

1870: Secretary Fish reorganized the State Department into 12 bureaus. The chiefs of these bureaus were not recognized as such in the existing appropriation acts relating to the Department, but were merely given their titles by authority of the Secretary. In the Appropriation Act of March 3, 1870, however, Congress recognized the bureaus thus established by appropriating funds for their chiefe 1874: The act of June 20, 1874, grants to the Secretary of State specific authority to determine departmental organization:

"The Secretary of State may prescribe duties for the Under Secretary of State, the Assistant Secretaries, and the Solicitor, not interfering with his duties as an officer of the Department of Justice, and the clerks of bureaus, as well as for all other employees in the Department, and may make changes and transfer therein when, in his judgment, it becomes necessary."

1910: Secretary Knox created the Division of Latin American Affairs, Far Eastern Affairs, Western European Affairs, and Information. This arrangement was reported to Congress in the next regular session and in the appropriation act of June 17, 1910, separate provision was made for the offices thus created.

1921: The act of March 3, 1921, making appropriations for the Department of State, omitted any provision for chiefs of bureaus and permitted the assignment of officers as heads of bureaus and divisions. Thorough rearrangement of departmental organization was effected following passage of that act.

The Interstate Commerce Commission Act is silent as to the organization of the operating bureaus of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and therefore permits the Commission to determine the number and functions of its bureaus.

the number and functions of its bureaus.

The act goes even further and authorizes the Commission to delegate, subject to certain safeguards, its own authority in the determination of quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial questions—so vital to the liberty of our citizens—its divisions, individual commissioners, and even employees. It is provided that—

"The Commission is authorized by its order to divide the members thereof into as many divisions (each to consist of not less than three members) as it may deem necessary, which may be changed from time to time. FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

The Federal Communications Act contains a provision similar to that in the Interstate Commerce Commission Act:

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD

The act of August 23, 1935, creating the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, does not set forth the internal organization of the Board, leaving this matter to executive determination. The single provision of the statute fixing organization is the requirement that "the Chairman of the Board, subject to its supervision, shall be its active executive officer."

NATIONAL BITUMINOUS COAL COMMISSION

The Bituminous Coal Commission is given authority "to make and promulgate all reasonable rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this subchapter (Bituminous Coal Act of 1937) and shall annually make a full report of its activities to the Secretary of the Interior for transmission to Congress."

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

The Federal Trade Commission Act makes no reference to the powers of the Commission over its internal organization and management, nor is the Commission's organization set forth by law. The Commission presumably has and exercises the executive authority to determine its own organization where this is not prescribed by statute.

Mr. BYRNES subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask permission to include as part of the remarks made by me earlier today a letter addressed to me by the Comptroller of the Currency. In the course of my remarks I made some reference to efforts on the part of officials of government to have other persons communicate with Senators for the purpose of influencing them with respect to the pending measure. I have received a letter from the Comptroller of the Currency, in which he says that he wants the Senate to know that he has taken no part in any attempt to influence Members of Congress. He says that, on the contrary, he has discouraged such action on the part of the friends of his office, and would continue to do so. He says:

Aside from the impropriety involved in any intervention in our own behalf, I feel that the decision as to the future status of this office should be left entirely in the hands of the Congress and the President of the United States.

Such a position is so exceptional as to place it in about the same category as the news story of the man who bit the dog. I ask to have the letter included as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY Washington, March 16, 1939.

Hon. JAMES F. BYRNES. Chairman, Select Committee on Government Organization

My Dear Senator Byrnes: It has been brought to my attention that effort is being made to have the office of the Comptroller of the Currency exempted from the provisions of the pending reorganization bill, H. R. 4425.

To avoid any misunderstanding, I think I should advise you that this office has taken no part in any attempt to so influence Members of the Congress. It has, on the contrary, discouraged such action on the part of its friends, and will continue to do so. Aside from the impropriety involved in any intervention in our own behalf, I feel that the decision as to the future status of this office should be left entirely in the hands of the Congress and the President of the United States.

Very sincerely yours,

SLUM-CLEARANCE AND LOW-RENT HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask the indulgence of the Senate in order that I may reply to the address made last week by the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings], in which he attacked the operations of the United States Housing Authority, under the United States Housing Act, which I sponsored. I said at the time that I proposed to examine the data which he cited to the Senate. I said that I felt confident he was misinformed. I have since given his speech careful study and examined his figures, and I am now prepared to show beyond question that the Senator was in error on every major point.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me to make the suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. WAGNER. I should rather go right on. Mr. McNARY. I thought possibly a quorum call might bring the Senator from Maryland to the Senate Chamber.

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Maryland spoke to me, and said he would be present if possible this afternoon, but that he had some other mission to attend to. I informed him as to when I expected to speak.

Mr. McNARY. Then he has been notified of the speech the Senator is about to make?

Mr. WAGNER. I told him about it, and he gave me the explanation that he would be obliged to attend to other matters, so that I might understand his absence, if he were detained.

In substance, the Senator raised and discussed the following main questions:

(1) Will the local housing projects assisted by the U.S. H. A. achieve very low rents and rehouse only slum dwellers in the lowest income groups?

(2) Will the U.S. H. A. program clear slums?

(3) Is the U.S. H. A. program a sound economic plan for financing the low-rent housing, and what effect will it have upon the public, the taxpayer, the Government's Budget, and the national debt?

(4) Do the localities bear their fair share of the cost of the projects?

(5) Are the construction costs of projects assisted by the U. S. H. A. reasonable and economical?

(6) How does the U.S. H. A. plan compare with the F. H. A.-Fort Wayne plan for promoting slum clearance and low-rent housing?

(7) Should the U.S. H. A. program be continued and expanded in the national interest?

Mr. President, I am going to take as a text for my remarks the opening words of the Senator from Maryland, in which he said:

It is safe to assume that there is not a person in America who is not in thorough sympathy with the fine and humanitarian aims set forth in this law. It sounds—

Said the Senator-

both impressive and progressive. The elimination of disreputable dwellings, of unsafe and insanitary apartment houses, the tearing down of slums and replacing them with suitable living quarters for the people of the country is very appealing.

I only wish that the facts of the Senator from Maryland were as accurate as his sentiments are commendable.

I propose to discuss each of the questions raised by the Senator, and to present the true facts.

1. THE U. S. H. A. PLAN ACHIEVES VERY LOW RENTS AND REHOUSES ONLY SLUM DWELLERS IN THE LOWEST INCOME GROUPS

The Senator from Maryland read figures indicating that the families in public housing projects earned incomes for the most part over a thousand dollars a year, and running as high as $2,280 a year. According to the Senator's own statement, these figures dealt with the old P. W. A. Housing Division projects, built by the Federal Government before the United States Housing Act was enacted under an entirely different plan of construction and financing from the plan of the United States Housing Authority. These figures therefore have nothing whatsoever to do with the rents to be charged or the income groups to be served in the local projects assisted by the United States Housing Authority.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. As I remember, the Senator from Maryland said that the houses that were being built under the United States Housing Authority were costing something like $5.500 a unit.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator will be patient I shall refute every one of the statements made by the Senator from Maryland, by absolute proof from the record.

Mr. MINTON. It ran in my mind that we had placed a limitation in the bill itself much lower than the figure stated by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. WAGNER. We placed limitations in the bill. Those limitations have been observed, and, as a matter of fact, the United States Housing Authority has been able to go far below those limitations in the projects already approved.

The facts are contained in the annual report of the United States Housing Authority, submitted to Congress on January 28 of this year. This report shows that of the 140 U. S. H. A. projects-when I say "U. S. H. A." I mean United States Housing Authority—with loan contracts approved by the President before the end of 1938, 21 projects will serve families with average annual incomes ranging from $450 to $649; 105 projects will serve families with average annual incomes ranging from $650 to $949; and only 14 projects will serve families of average incomes above $950. No families will in any case be served which have average annual incomes above about $1,100.

Since the submission of this annual report, the United States Housing Authority has made still further progress in approving plans for very low rental projects for very low income groups. It has now been determined that some of the projects will reach families with average incomes as low as $300 to $350 a year, and will be rented at figures as low as $1.50 per room per month or $6 per month for a four-room dwelling unit.

We heard nothing like that from the Senator from Mary-

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Are any of these people in the low brackets, to which the Senator has just referred, subsidized as to a part of their rent so as to enable them to get into these projects and yet not have to pay all the rent themselves?

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; I will refer to that a little later on.

In summary, the projects now being assisted by the United States Housing Authority will serve only families in the lowest income third. They will reach down into the lowest ranks of the employed workers in industry and will also serve those on relief and in public employment who are receiving allowances that meet a bare minimum subsistence level. And because the program will serve only those in the lowest income groups it will be strictly noncompetitive with private industry, which, by the universal admission of businessmen and builders, cannot make available safe and sanitary housing at rents which people with such low incomes can afford to pay.

2. THE UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY PROGRAM IS CLEARING THE SLUMS

The Senator from Maryland in his address indicated that the United States housing program is not clearing the slums because some of the projects are being built on vacant land.

Even a cursory study of the United States Housing Act or of the projects assisted by the United States Housing Authority would reveal the inaccuracy of this statement. Under an amendment written by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], for every dwelling unit in a project assisted by the United States Housing Authority there must be the elimination of an unsafe or insanitary dwelling. The majority of the U. S. H. A. assisted projects are being built on slum sites. Wherever this is not the case there is a contractual obligation on the part of the municipality to eliminate an equivalent number of slum dwellings. The United States Housing Authority plan in every single instance combines slum clearance with the development of decent homes for slum dwellers.

3. THE UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY PLAN IS A SOUND, ECONOMICAL PLAN OF FINANCING HOUSING PROJECTS, IMPOSES VERY SLIGHT COSTS UPON THE PUBLIC AND THE TAXPAYER, AND HAS PRACTICALLY NO EFFECT UPON THE NATIONAL DEBT

The Senator from Maryland has said that-

Almost any plan which the United States Housing Authority thought feasible could be employed by it to eradicate the slums.

He also added that there-

Are no limitations as to the amount of subsidy, there are no limitations as to the cost, there are no limitations in the * * * measure.

I am quoting his exact words.

These statements are entirely erroneous, as the Senator from Maryland could have ascertained by a closer examination of the United States Housing Act. The law does provide a very specific plan, with definite cost limitations, for helping to finance low-rent housing projects; and this plan has been applied to every one of the 140 projects approved by the President.

Let me give a very simple illustration of how the program works and what it costs.

Let us suppose that a local housing authority is going to build a $1,000,000 housing project. It obtains a $900,000 loan from the United States Housing Authority and a $100,-000 loan raised from local sources. The United States Housing Authority obtains the funds for the $900,000 loan by selling guaranteed Federal obligations to the public. At the present time the United States Housing Authority is obtaining money from the public for this purpose at an interest rate of about 1% percent. The United States Housing Authority, in turn, lends this $900,000 to the local housing authority at an interest rate of not less than 3 percent, which the local housing authority is required to repay, principal and interest, over a fixed period of time. The repayment of the loan is secured both by the rent revenues of the project and by the Federal annual contributions. This loan transaction nets the United States Housing Authority a profit of $10,395 a year, representing the spread between the level annual debt service paid by the local housing authority to the U.S. H. A. and the level annual debt service on the money borrowed by the U.S. H. A. for housing loans.

I do not say that the U. S. H. A. will always be able to borrow at 1% percent. Longer-term financing, or a much larger degree of direct local financing, both of which may be desirable, would substantially reduce the interest spread. Nonetheless, based upon the present situation, the facts are as I state them.

Now, for the annual contributions or subsidies. After the $1,000,000 project is completed, the U. S. H. A. pays annual contributions to the local authority to reduce the rents. These annual contributions represent part of the difference between the economic rent that would be necessary to meet debt service, maintenance and operation, and the rent which families in the very low income groups can afford to pay.

Under the act the maximum annual contribution from the United States Housing Authority would be 3½ percent of the capital development cost of the project, or $35,000. Subtract from this $35,000 in annual subsidy the $10,395 representing the annual profit to the U. S. H. A. on the loan transaction, and the result is a net cost to the Federal Government of $24,605 per year. This net cost of the annual contributions represents absolutely the only cost to the Federal Government of the $1,000,000 project.

Now, let us see what the annual cost amounts to per family rehoused. In a moderate-sized industrial city, at an average cost of $5,000 per family dwelling unit, the $1,000,000 project would rehouse about 200 families moved from the slums. In a small town, with lower costs, where the average cost of the family dwelling unit might be about $3,300, the $1,000,000 project would rehouse about 300 families. In these two cases, using the aggregate net cost of $24,605 given above, the annual cost per family rehoused would be about $123 in the large city and about $82 in the small town. For a family of four this would mean an annual cost for every person moved from the slums to a decent home of about $31 in the larger city and about $20 in the smaller town.

This, Mr. President—and I am willing to have my figures subjected to the most careful analysis—represents the net annual cost to the Federal Government of having an American citizen live in a decret American house instead of in a slum. I repeat the figures for emphasis—about $31 per person per year in a large city and about $20 per year in a smaller town.

Mr. President, I invite comparison of this cost with the average annual cost throughout the country of about $90 per year for each child educated in the public schools, a sum which I believe ought to be far greater. I invite comparison of the cost of rehousing slum dwellers with the frightful costs of disease, juvenile delinquency, social maladjustment, and crime produced by the slums. I invite comparison of this cost with the benefits of reemployment and the additions to the permanent capital assets of our cities and of our Nation provided by a large-scale building program.

Mr. President, I have reduced these figures to a simple illustration covering one project, and showing the cost for each family. Let us now look at the picture as a whole. The present program of the United States Housing Authority involves loans of $800,000,000 for slum clearance and lowrent housing. As I have pointed out, these loans are repayable in full with interest, and on the basis of the present rate at which the U.S. H. A. is borrowing and lending money, they will involve an annual profit to the Federal Government of about $9,240,000. As against this, the present program calls for maximum annual contributions by the United States Housing Authority of not more than $28,000,-000. Subtracting the annual profit on the loans from the maximum annual subsidies, we arrive at an aggregate net cost of about $18,760,000 per year. Note this figure—an aggregate net cost to the Federal Government of about $18,760,000 per year for the present slum clearance and lowrent housing program.

Under the bill I have introduced for expanding the program, which evokes such violent objections from the Senator from Maryland, the maximum gross annual contributions would be $73,000,000 per year, and the aggregate net annual cost to the Federal Government, at the present interest rates under which the United States Housing Authority is operating, would be about $44,000,000 per year. These are the figures which fill the Senator from Maryland with dread of national bankruptcy, and which make him shrink from the thought of continuing the great slum clearance and low-rent housing program.

Mr. President, the figures I have cited clearly indicate that the housing program involves practically no increases in the national debt. The $800,000,000 authorization for loans provided under the present law, and the additional $800,000,000 in loans under my proposed bill, are repayable loans on which the Government makes a profit. They therefore do not enter into the national debt at all. The annual contributions necessary to make the rents low enough to rehouse slum dwellers represent the only cost to the public and to the taxpayer. They would not figure in the national debt at all if the cost of the annual subsidies were raised annually through taxation; and even if the Federal Government borrowed the money to pay the annual subsidies, these expenditures would enter the national debt only in the very small sums above indicated, namely, $18,760,000 annually on the basis of the present program and $44,000,000 annually on the basis of the expanded program.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Schwellenbach in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield. Mr. MINTON. Did the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS | use the same figure as to the rent subsidy?

Mr. WAGNER. Oh, no. Mr. MINTON. The Senator from Maryland used a differ-

Mr. WAGNER. The Senator from Maryland referred to the $13,000,000 annual subsidy provided for in the loan contracts outstanding thus far. I am citing the total maximum annual contributions under the authorized program, less the profit to the Government on the loan transactions.

Of all the programs for the sound rehabilitation of our people and the development of our physical resources, there is none which has a smaller effect upon the national debt, and which yields a larger return in economic benefits and human welfare, than the public housing program.

Let us contrast for a moment, Mr. President, these net annual costs of $18,760,000 under the present housing program, and about $44,000,000 under the proposed expanded program, with the average annual expense to the Federal Government, over the past 5 years, of $275,425,000 per year for public roads—each year, mind you, not $275,000,000 over a period of 60 years—of $1,041,000,000 per year for national defense, of $479,100,000 per year for direct benefits to agriculture, and of $76,373,000 per year for the development of aviation. I am in favor of all these expenditures, of course; I am making the comparison because the Senator from Maryland says: Just think, over 60 years we are going to pay millions upon millions to give decent homes to slum dwellers. What a terrible thing that is. Let us see about that. From any such comparison we must conclude that the present and projected expenditures for the decent housing of the American people are extraordinarily small.

This simple statement, Mr. President, I hope will convince the fair-minded public that the Senator from Maryland has presented a very exaggerated picture of the costs of the housing program. But in addition to exaggerating the present costs of this program, the Senator from Maryland has engaged in an extraordinary flight of fancy in order to determine what the program is going to cost over the next 60

I do not believe, and according to its annual report the United States Housing Authority does not believe, that the annual contributions will be payable in their present form and amount over a 60-year period. The law provides for periodic revisions. But in any event, let it be remembered that the payment of these annual contributions over a 60year period in the future would mean 60 years of social benefits in the future to those living in the projects during the whole 60-year period. The Senator from Maryland talks about the cost of the United States Housing Authority program over the next 60 years, and then expresses horror at the size of the figure. The Senator might just as well calculate the cost over the next 60 years for public health, for education, for roads, for national defense, for maintaining public buildings, for social security, or for any of the activities in which civilized and enlightened governments must necessarily engage. The Senator could get very staggering figures if he did this, because all such activities cost a great deal over a period of 60 years.

The issue, Mr. President, is not what the housing program is going to cost over the next 60 years. The significant fact is that the program costs so very little each year compared to its benefits each year, and compared to the cost each year of other programs of the Government less vital than decent housing for the American people.

The Senator from Maryland implied in his speech that European countries which rely on a system of public housing subsidies very similar to ours have gradually abandoned this system. I do not know where he got his information, but the facts show precisely the contrary. Under the English plan, which I used as a model in framing the United States Housing Act—and I visited England in order to study that plan—over 1,100,000 units of public housing have already been constructed with Government subsidy, and the British nation is now in the midst of a further program calling for 600,000 additional units, carrying even greater Government subsidy. In this connection I received a letter over the week-end from Sir Raymond Unwin, a very distinguished English architect, and the leader of their housing movement, who happens to be visiting this country. Sir Raymond says:

My attention has been called to some statements made by Senator Typinos implying some change of policy in England as to subsidy for housing and I thought you might like to know the facts. So far from true is it that the last housing acts known as Housing (Financial Provisions) Acts, 1938, passed only last year created a new increased subsidy for the building of houses for agricultural workers in rural areas and considerably increased the subsidy in the case of dwellings when built in the form of flats on expensive land to rehouse tenants from slum dwellings or overcrowded houses.

That is an authoritative statement which shows how misinformed the Senator from Maryland was in referring to governmental housing activities of England.

The same letter from this distinguished British authority indicates that with the passage of time the subsidies under the British act will be revised and decreased as the need for them decreases. Sir Raymond writes:

How long the subsidy will require to be paid no one can say. We do not expect, however, that it will continue long at the full rate or for the whole period at any rate. Judging from the experience of the past 100 years, the lag before the wages of the low-income groups overtake in rent-paying capacity the sum needed to meet the economic rent is nearer 25 or 30 years. Unless there is some complete reversal of the progress of civilization, we may expect that the subsidy will be progressively reduced and will end long before the 60-year period expires. The Government is required to revise the subsidy every 3 years. Some reduction has already been made on some of the earlier built dwellings.

In Sweden, after a long and successful experience with public-aided cooperative housing-and I make this statement from my own study of the subject-the Government in 1933 initiated a program of municipal housing, with annual contributions from the state to bring rents within reach of the lowest-income group—particularly those with numerous children. This legislation has been most successful and it, too, was extended and strengthened by amendments last year-that is, in 1938.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a table showing that, concurrently with the fruitful development of public housing, both England and Sweden have developed huge building programs by private industry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the table will be printed in the RECORD.

The table referred to is as follows:

4. THE LOCALITIES BEAR THEIR FAIR SHARE OF THE COST OF SLUM-CLEARANCE AND LOW-RENT HOUSING PROJECTS

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, throughout the address of the Senator from Maryland there runs the theme that the localities are not bearing their fair share of rehousing the slum dwellers in their midst. The Senator says:

The city, in effect, will make no contribution worthy of the name to the cost of these houses, and the Federal Government is borrowing the money and increasing the national debt in order to accomplish the building of these homes.

This statement is based upon a complete misapprehension of the large contributions which the localities are making to help their slum dwellers live in decent homes. In fact, no other public-works program assisted by the Federal Government has enlisted so large a measure of local support and local aid.

As I have already shown, the original construction cost of slum-clearance and low-rent housing projects is financed entirely on a loan basis. It involves no cost to the public or the taxpayer, but rather yields a profit to the Government through the loan transaction. The only cost to the public and the taxpayer is involved in the annual contributions, and both the Federal Government and the localities are bearing their fair share of these. The annual contributions of the localities are in the form of substantially complete tax exemption of the local housing projects. While the Federal Government is making a cash contribution toward getting lower rents, the locality is making a large contribution toward lower rents by servicing the project with all normal city services without imposing any taxes upon the project.

It is obvious that this local tax exemption represents a very substantial local contribution, far in excess of the 20 percent of the U.S. H. A. annual contributions required by the act. Indeed, the State contribution averages close to 60 percent of the U.S. H. A. contribution. The statement of the Senator from Maryland, therefore, does an injustice to every locality throughout the country that has made strenuous and generous efforts to rehouse its slum dwellers by making contributions in the form of tax exemptions.

The extent of the Senator's misimpressions upon this subject is revealed in the following quotation from his address, in response to a question from the junior Senator from Kentucky:

It may be that in order to get around the law of the Senator's State prohibiting any property from being exempt, the municipality of Louisville, for instance, may take from the other taxpayers a sufficient sum of money and hand it over to the Federal Government to be the equivalent of an exemption of the particular house which the Government is building * * *. So payments could be made by the city from the general treasury in lieu of exemption of taxes to the Housing Authority, so that they could hand the money back.

"That is the way it is being done," says the Senator from Maryland. Mr. President, that is not the way it is being done. By legislation or by court decision, there are 37 States in which public-housing projects are exempt from local taxation, so that in those States the localities can contribute their fair share to the cost of rehousing slum dwellers and thus participate in the U.S. H. A. program.

Why have the States and the localities been willing to grant this tax exemption, Mr. President? . Because they realize that the revenues lost in exempting the projects from taxes are more than regained by stopping the terrible drain upon city treasuries which the slums involve. The cities realize the manifold benefits which accrue from a program of decent housing.

When the Senator from Maryland recommends that the provisions for tax exemption be abandoned, he sets his judgment up against the judgment of about three-fourths of the States, which, under Republican administrations and Democratic administrations alike, have voluntarily and without coercion decided that it is good social policy and good business to help the rehousing of slum dwellers. The Senator seems to be involved in a hopeless contradiction, when on the one hand he complains that the rents are too high to rehouse slum dwellers and that the Federal Government is bearing the whole cost, while on the other hand he suggests the abandonment of the tax exemption by which the localities are getting lower rents and bearing their fair share of the costs. 5. CONSTRUCTION COSTS UNDER THE U. S. H. A. PROGRAM ARE REASONABLE AND ECONOMICAL

Now I should like to say a few words about the construction costs of projects under the U.S.H.A. program, I think the local authorities, in cooperation with the U.S. H. A., have made a very remarkable record in developing cheaper and less expensive housing projects. For this reason I regret that the Senator from Maryland made certain remarks about these costs which I regard as unfair, and did not take the opportunity to state the real achievements that have been made.

In the first place, in discussing the cost of the U.S. H. A. assisted projects, the Senator from Maryland used an average cost which he had himself derived. This was a most misleading figure when cited to represent the U.S. H. A. average cost per family rehoused, as compared with the average cost under private enterprise; for the Senator's figure included the cost of purchasing the slum buildings to be torn down on the sites of U.S.H.A. projects, and the cost of demolishing and clearing away these old rookeries. Congress certainly intended the U.S. H. A. program to accomplish slum clearance as well as rehousing; but it is unfair to allocate this portion of the cost of the program to the individual families who are rehoused, for they would be just as much benefited if rehoused on cheap vacant land without equivalent demolition of slums. The slum clearance part of the cost cannot be charged against the cost of new housing, but must be considered as a general benefit to the city at large-a general benefit that no other public or private program offers. In comparing the cost of U.S.H.A. housing with that of private housing, it is only fair to eliminate from the former the cost of slum clearance, since the undertakings of the private builder almost never include such a cost.

I regret that the Senator from Maryland did not refer to the Annual Report of the U.S. H. A., for he would there have found the basis for computing the average cost of U. S. H. A. projects comparable with the average cost of private enterprise. The report showed that for 140 projects the estimated cost of new housing, including land, nondwelling facilities, and the new houses themselves, but excluding only the cost of slum buildings to be torn down, amounted to $328,555,023, or an average estimated cost of $5,098 per dwelling unit. The report further made it very clear that these figures were preliminary estimates used as the basis of loan contracts, and as such had been set at safe amounts which could certainly be met when construction contracts were subsequently let. The annual report went on to state that on the projects where construction contracts had been let, the actual cost had averaged 11.6 percent less than the preliminary estimates. All of this could have been found in the report. If this percentage obtains for all projects-and the U.S. H. A. believes it will-the average cost per dwelling unit, including land, nondwelling facilities, and the new houses, would be $4,507.

The Senator from Maryland invited a comparison of the costs of U.S. H. A. assisted projects with those of housing insured by the F. H. A. in 1938, and stated that on the basis of his computations the U.S. H. A. costs were higher by $136 per unit. This is incorrect. The average value of all housing insured by the F. H. A. in 1938 was the figure of $5,384 cited by the Senator; but the average value of new housing insured by the F. H. A. was $5,530. Comparing this figure with the U.S. H. A. figure already cited, it appears that the U.S. H. A. unit cost is actually lower by the sum of $1,023. To me this seems a most remarkable achievement, in view of a number of facts which the Senator from Maryland omitted to bring out when he made his com-

In the first place, the F. H. A., in insuring a house, requires that it have a useful life of at least 20 or 25 years, while in the interests of long-term economy and lower rents the U. S. H. A. is assisting only houses with a useful life of at least 60 years. Is not a complete dwelling unit, including land, nondwelling facilities, and a new house guaranteed for 60 years, an infinitely better bargain for the Nation than a complete dwelling unit which costs $1,023 more, and which has a house with a guaranteed useful life of only 20 or 25

Secondly, the cost of the land itself in the central slum sites on which the majority of the U.S. H. A. projects are built is of necessity higher than that of outlying vacant sites on which most F. H. A. houses are being built,

Thirdly, the U. S. H. A. Act requires that every project assisted by it shall be built with labor paid at prevailing wage rates, whereas there is absolutely no such provision for the protection of labor under the F. H. A. plan.

In view of these differences between the U. S. H. A. and the F. H. A. programs, it seems to me remarkable that the U. S. H. A. cost, including land, nondwelling facilities, and the new house, is actually lower by $1,023 per unit. But the U. S. H. A. is not content even with this satisfactory record which it made in 1938.

It is continually endeavoring to reduce its costs, to develop more economical methods of building, and to eliminate every surplus expenditure. In this it is making substantial progress; and the list of contracts approved by the President on February 27 of this year showed an average cost 9 percent less than that of the 1938 projects.

When the United States Housing Authority Act was passed, Congress inserted two limitations upon costs. In the first place, it provided that the average construction cost of the dwelling units, excluding land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities, was not to be greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise in the same locality, under the legal building requirements applicable, and under labor standards not lower than those prescribed in the United States Housing Act.

The U. S. H. A. has done better than to satisfy this limitation. According to its annual report, the first 140 projects approved by the President involved an estimated net construction cost per dwelling unit averaging $3,087. This net construction cost is the price paid the contractor for building the dwelling itself. These 140 projects are located in 75 towns and cities. The Bureau of Labor Statistics has collected the average value of building permits—which represent net construction costs—for private dwellings in 71 of these 75 localities for the first 10 months of 1938. The average for these 71 communities was $3,685. Thus, the average net construction cost of private construction was $598 more per unit than the estimated average net construction costs of U. S. H. A. projects in an almost identical list of cities.

These figures are based on estimates of U. S. H. A. costs made at the time loan contracts were entered into. The comparison is even more favorable to the U. S. H. A. program when we consider the 14 U. S. H. A. assisted projects on which main construction contracts had been let by the end of 1938. In these contracts the average amount by which U. S. H. A. net construction costs were lower than private net construction costs was $1,010 per unit. In New York City, where construction costs are relatively high, the actual contract cost of U. S. H. A. housing was lower than the cost of private construction by $744 per dwelling unit in the Queensbridge project and $301 per dwelling unit in the Red Hook project.

I ask unanimous consent that a record of all of 14 projects, and the costs in private industry as compared to the costs of construction under the U.S. H. A., be inserted in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. La Follette in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WAGNER. As a second limitation upon costs, Congress imposed a dollars-and-cents standard. The act specifies that no dwelling unit shall cost more than $4,000 or more than $1,000 per room—excluding land, demolition, and nondwelling facilities—unless the project is located in a city having a population in excess of 500,000, in which case the limitations are $5,000 per dwelling unit and $1,250 per room.

In the first 14 U. S. H. A. assisted projects on which main construction contracts were let, the costs have been very substantially below the limitation set by Congress, which I am very much gratified to state. In New York City, for instance, with a maximum cost limitation of $1,250 per room for dwelling facilities, contracts were let on the Red Hook project calling for only $911 per room, and on the Queensbridge project the cost was brought down as low as $808 per room.

I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point a table showing details for each of the 14 projects.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I am sure that the U. S. H. A. and the local housing authorities are making every effort, under the wise guidance of the statutory limitations imposed by Congress, to get their costs still lower. The projects undertaken to date by the U. S. H. A. show that every tendency is in this direction, and that costs are being gotten lower as fast as can be done consistently with the maintenance of decent labor standards and the development of decent durable housing that has long-range as well as short-term economy.

6. U. S. H. A. PLAN IS SUPERIOR TO THE F. H. A. FORT WAYNE PLAN FOR SLUM CLEARANCE AND LOW-RENT HOUSING

I now wish to say a word about the so-called F. H. A. Fort Wayne project, which the Senator from Maryland held up as a model. Referring to the recent development of about 50 dwelling units in Fort Wayne, Ind., the Senator said:

In that city private capital is providing new, modern houses for people of low income, without any rent subsidies, without exemption from local taxes and without borrowed money from the Federal Treasury.

In addition, when I asked the Senator whether the Fort Wayne houses were constructed by W. P. A. workers, he answered "no."

I find it very difficult to comprehend how the exhaustive study which the Senator from Maryland made of the housing problem furnished him with so many erroneous impressions about the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan. Under the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan the houses are built with W. P. A. workers; they are exempt from local taxes; they do involve borrowed money from the Federal Treasury because the Federal Government pays the wages of the W. P. A. workers with borrowed money. They also involve large subsidies through the use of W. P. A. labor, through the contribution by the F. H. A. of most of the architectural overhead and financing charges, and through the peculiar and speculative system of land borrowing. Above all, they involve a 100-percent Federal risk through mortgage insurance of an experimental house of doubtful life on borrowed land that may need to be rolled from place to place if the owner decides to recapture his land. In short, the Senator's description of the F. H. A. Fort Wayne project was on every substantial point based upon error as to the facts.

It is perhaps for this reason that the Senator from Maryland spoke of the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house as a $900 house. The Senator did not specify $900 for what. He did not point out that the $900 covered at most the cost of the materials at the factory, and did not include the cost of land, the cost of labor, capital charges, or architectural fees or overhead, or any of the other costs that go into the building of a house. When these figures are added, the socalled $900 house, as described by the Senator, becomes about a $2,400 unit. And this $2,400 unit, involving very low standards of living comfort and durability, and designed to be taken apart at public expense and rolled periodically from one speculative lot to another, may well be contrasted with units being developed by the U.S. H. A. in similar localities, at a cost of about $3,600 for land, non-dwelling facilities, and the new house, built by skilled building mechanics, constructed to last for 60 years and involving much higher standards of living comfort. It is clear that a $2,400 20-year house costs $120 a year, and that a $3,600 60-year house costs but $60 a year. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland which is a better bargain for the Nation?

Let me call to the special attention of the Senate the following differences between U.S. H. A. assisted projects and the so-called F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan.

The Fort Wayne plan involves a highly speculative use of local tax exemption, under which the private speculator in land may "sell" his land to a public housing agency in exchange for the benefit of tax exemption, with the option of repurchasing it at a nominal figure after a brief period of time in the event that public subsidies or other circumstances have enhanced its value. It thus involves public subsidies for private profit. The U. S. H. A. plan involves tax exemption only for properties permanently held in public ownership for the benefit of families of very low income.

The Fort Wayne plan does not accomplish and cannot provide for substantial slum clearance. It cannot rehabilitate neighborhoods or improve blighted areas. The U.S. H. A. Act requires, and every U.S. H. A. project provides for, the elimination of an equivalent number of unsafe dwellings.

The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan uses only unskilled W. P. A. labor. The U. S. H. A. plan pays prevailing wages and employs men through the normal processes of the building industry. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan seeks to put relief workers to work on housing projects. The U. S. H. A. plan seeks to reemploy building-trades workers at their normal occupations and thus to reduce the relief rolls.

The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan is of very limited benefit to business because it does not operate through the private contractor or the normal building industry. It cannot possibly promote the revival of the building industry upon which prosperity so largely depends. The U. S. H. A. plan directly stimulates private enterprise and reinvigorates construction because all work is done through the regular contracting system in the normal building industry.

The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan involves numerous hidden Government subsidies from the W. P. A., the F. H. A., and the localities, thus making it impossible to get a fair statement of what the plan really costs. The U. S. H. A. plan conducts both its lending and its subsidizing operations on a clear-cut businesslike basis that makes it feasible to get an exact statement of costs.

The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan develops a frame house of questionable standards, with a doubtful life of 20 years. The U. S. H. A. plan develops a durable 60-year house with lower maintenance costs, and therefore greater economy from the long-range point of view. The U. S. H. A. house is a permanent civic asset.

The F. H. A. plan has developed a shelter rent of about $12.30 per dwelling unit per month in a favorable locality, or a rent plus utilities cost of about $17.50 per dwelling unit per month. The U. S. H. A. plan is developing, under similar circumstances, a shelter rent of about $8 per dwelling unit per month, or a rent plus utilities cost of about $12.50 per dwelling unit per month. Because of this low rental, the U. S. H. A. plan can reach families at least $200 lower in the income scale than the Fort Wayne plan.

For these reasons, Mr. President, I think that the Senator from Maryland has made a most cursory and inadequate examination of the real merits of the U. S. H. A. plan and the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan. I believe that in the interests of economy, sound Government organization, and the objectives which Congress had in mind in establishing the U. S. H. A. and the F. H. A., the U. S. H. A. should do the job of slum clearance and rehousing very low income families with the aid of public subsidies; and that the F. H. A. should do the job of insuring private mortgages to stimulate private building for income groups not requiring public subsidies.

I ask that there be inserted at the end of my remarks a very penetrating analysis of the Fort Wayne plan submitted to Congress by the American Federation of Labor a few days ago. There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

7. THE U. S. H. A. PROGRAM SHOULD BE CONTINUED AND EXPANDED IN THE NATIONAL INTEREST

Mr. President, I have deemed it proper and desirable to make this detailed exposition of the program of the U.S. H. A. and the facts surrounding it. I have taken great pains and have gone into great detail, because I want Congress and the public to be informed as to the record of that instrumentality of Government. I deem it equally necessary, having done that, to get away from the details and view the problem in its broader aspects. I am particularly prompted to do this broader aspects. I am particularly prompted to do this broader aspects if an apartment form Maryland that "These Government apartment houses, even though municipally owned, are not like any other city property, such as courthouses, city halls, fire houses, and the like. They perform no such civic functions, but are purely dwelling property."

Mr. President, this statement reveals a complete misconception of the slum-clearance program. Is the removal of millions of American children from horrible slums into clean and decent housing less a civic function than the fire houses and the courthouses necessary to fight the excessive fires and the excessive crime caused by the slums? Is it a less wise and farsighted policy to remedy these social evils at their source rather than to provide additional methods of dealing with them half-heartedly after they have grown swollen through neglect? Locality after locality in every part of the country is coming to the U.S. H. A. with revealing figures, showing the terrible costs of the slums, showing their effects upon the human and financial resources of city governments, showing the slums' threat to that social contentment which is at the basis of our democracy, revealing how much cheaper and wiser it is to destroy the slums than to support them.

To date 38 States, regardless of the party in control, have enacted legislation in order that they may participate in the U. S. H. A. program. Certainly, these States have indicated disagreement with the statement of the Senator from Maryland that the program is getting our Government into the "greatest scheme of State socialism it has ever entered into," and that expenditures thereunder represent so much money "poured down a rat hole." The enthusiastic Nation-wide response to the U.S. H. A. program is the most convincing evidence that the people throughout the country regard the program as one of the greatest efforts in democracy that the country has ever undertaken. For what could be a surer way to strengthen American democracy than to improve the American home?

REPORT OF THE HOUSING COMMITTEE OF THE AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR ON "THE FORT WAYNE PLAN"

Resolution adopted by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor on February 8, 1939

"THE FORT WAYNE PLAN" SPONSORED BY THE F. H. A.

The Federal Housing Administration has sponsored and actively cooperated in the development of a housing scheme known as the Fort Wayne plan.

Fort Wayne plan.

Under this plan a municipal housing agency acquires vacant land, held by private owners for eventual redevelopment for commercial or speculative uses, at $1 a lot. The land, which is in effect loaned rather than sold by the private landowner, can be repurchased by the owner for $1 after 5 years and remain completely tax-exempt until it is so repurchased. The landowner can redeem his property at any time and receive the benefit of tax exemption while it is in the hands of the municipal housing agency. While the title is held by the municipal housing agency it erects upon this land small prefabricated houses of substandard design and construction. All construction, including prefabrication in the shops as well as erection of the dwellings on the site, is carried out by unskilled W. P. A. relief labor in what amounts to an outright Federal subsidy toward the cost of construction. The cost of construction is privately financed under a mortgage insured by the Federal Housing Administration at 4½ percent amortized in cost of construction is privately financed under a mortgage insured by the Federal Housing Administration at 4½ percent amortized in 20 years. Although under this scheme land is acquired, at least temporarily, at virtually no cost, construction is substandard, labor cost is eliminated through W. P. A. labor subsidy, and the project is exempt from all taxation, the shelter rents (without utilities) to be charged are $3.10 per room per month, or $10.80 per unit per month for 3½-room units.

Fronk Wetson, an F. H. A. executive who played a leading part.

month for 3½-room units.

Frank Watson, an F. H. A. executive, who played a leading part in the development of this scheme under a loan arrangement from the F. H. A., has been appointed to head the Municipal Housing Division of the F. H. A. for the purpose of putting the plan into effect on a Nation-wide scale.

The housing committee of the American Federation of Labor has made an exhaustive study of the plan in all its aspects. A careful examination of this study leads us to the following conclusions with regard to the Fort Wayne plan:

1. It is a socially and economically dangerous scheme, combining such undesirable features as a deliberate incentive to land speculation, absence of minimum standards of design, construction, and labor.

- labor
- abor.

 2. The practice of moving houses around from one place to another is uneconomical, enhances the sense of insecurity, and impermanence among the families thus subjected to floating, makes rehabilitation of such families impossible, and is therefore objectionable from the social point of view.

 3. The plan will serve to undermine the already precarious structure of municipal finance in the communities which undertake it.

 4. It will tend to perpetuate and cause further widespread unemployment among the building mechanics and laborers, depriving them of normal employment.

 5. By being limited to relief labor, it will perpetuate the relief

- 5. By being limited to relief labor, it will perpetuate the relief status of the workers.

6. By being limited to relief tenants, it will provide an incentive for families to remain on relief.

7. Slum clearance and low-rent housing for slum dwellers can be and is being carried out more effectively and more economically under the United States Housing Act with full participation of private enterprise and with full observance of minimum standards of construction and design, as well as of minimum labor standards of construction and design, as well as of minimum labor standards in normal private employment. The sound, permanent, low-rent housing program of the U.S. H. A., designed to provide decent, livable, and lasting homes to the ill-housed families must not be jeopardized by turning low-rent housing into a proving ground for unscrupulous land speculators and self-seeking promoters, willing to inflict upon us a Nation-wide slum for private gain, and at the expense of the taxpayer as well as the slum dweller.

It is our considered judgment that the plan is contrary to the public interest in many respects, that it should be condemned as such by the Federal Government, and that all agencies of the Federal Government should be directed by the President to refrain from sponsorship of, and participation in, any phase of the plan. It is hereby directed that President Green and the members of the Housing Committee present the complete report on the plan to President Roosevelt and to Members of Congress in order to end Federal participation in this plan at the earliest possible moment.

WHAT IS THE FORT WAYNE PLAN?

Purpose: The purpose of the plan is to build small one-family houses on slum or vacant land to house families on relief rolls. The houses are prefabricated throughout, assembled at the site and are to be moved from one location to another as suitable land

The houses are prefabricated throughout, assembled at the site and are to be moved from one location to another as suitable land is available.

Land acquisition: Under this plan a local municipal housing agency acquires vacant land, held by private owners for eventual redevelopment for commercial or speculative uses, at $1 a lot. The land, which is in effect "borrowed" rather than bought from the private landowner, can be repurchased by the owner for $1 from the municipal housing agency after 5 years. As long as the title is held by the municipal housing agency and until the property is so repurchased, the land is exempt from all taxation.

Design: While the municipal housing agency holds the title to the land, it erects upon this land small one-family houses which are to be rented exclusively to families on relief rolls. The houses are L-shaped in design, with flat roof, and consist of three rooms and a bathroom. One room (20 by 12 feet) combines a living room, dining room, and kitchen, but because of limitations of remaining space this room will also be used for storage, and in the case of many families will have to be used as a bedroom as well. This room is equipped with a sink, and a coal or wood-burning cooking stove which also furnishes all available heating for the entire house. There are two bedrooms (7 feet 8 inches by 12 feet each) with a small clothes closet in each included in its floor space. The bathroom (4 by 8½ feet) contains a wash basin, a water closet, a hot-water heater, and a short bathtub (the bathroom being 4 feet wide, it is impossible to use the standard 5-foot tub). There is no tub or other provision for laundering and kitchen sink in the combination room will presumably have to be used for this purpose. Since there is no basement, attic, or other storage space, utensils and personal belongings will have to be used for this purpose. Since there is no basement, attic, or other storage space, utensils and personal before the superstructure as well as the finished floor area is 480 square

These are bolted together, and the roof is fastened to the exterior walls at the corner of the building only. The roof is dead level and projects 1½ feet over the exterior walls. It is covered with 4-ply composition roofing.

windows and doors are prefabricated wood. Windows are side-sliding sash type, and no hardwood is used other than metal sliding strip. No interior door frames are used, and the doors are hung directly to the panel studs.

Plumbing roughing is shop assembled. Equipment consists of a 4-foot bathtub, water closet, and lavatory in the bathroom; a 30-gallon hot-water tank is installed in the bathroom oil-burning heater; a kitchen sink is installed in the combination room.

A wood or coal-burning stove is installed in the combination room for cooking as well as for heating the entire house. There is no provision for heating either bedroom. The chimney is of metal ventilated type.

The walls are finished with oil paint. The painting, both exterior and interior, is done at the central plant prior to the delivery of wall panel assemblies to the site.

All labor at the central plant is done by inexperienced workers is over 20 years at 4½ percent. The 20-year blanket mortgage insurance is issued under section 207 of the National Housing Act. The mortgage loan on construction amounts to $900 per unit. The mortgage loan on construction amounts to $900 per unit. Both the F. H. A. and the mortgagee agree that in the event of repurchase of land by the original holder, improvements may be transferred to any other lot leased to the municipal housing agency. If a lot is so repurchased, it is released from the mortgage and a new one is substituted. It is expected that the entire cost of each project will be written off in 20 years by means of rentals of $2.50 per week or about $11 per month per house. Debt service is approximately 55 percent of gross income.

W. P. A. funds cover all labor items constituting a Federal subsidy in the form of outright grant of labor costs.

ORIGIN AND DEVELOPMENT OF THE PLAN

The origin and development of the Fort Wayne plan as it applies to the problems of that particular community is not a matter of primary concern of this study. It is the purpose of this report to focus the attention upon the features and characteristics of the plan as this might apply to any community. In order to view the proposal in its proper perspective, however, it was deemed necessary to give a brief outline of the way in which the plan has come into existence.

The so-called Fort Wayne plan was originated by Wm. B. F.

The so-called Fort Wayne plan was originated by Wm. B. F. Hall, assistant manager of mortgage loan department of Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., in Fort Wayne, and member of the insurance company advisory committee of the Mortgage Bankers Association. When under the new Indiana housing authorities law Association. When under the new Indiana housing authorities law a local housing authority was created in Fort Wayne, as a public agency to carry out the low-rent housing and slum-clearance program under the United States Housing Act, Mayor H. W. Beals, of Fort Wayne, appointed Mr. Hall as the chairman of the local housing authority.

It was evident from the outset that Chairman Hall's primary interest was not so much in the U. S. H. A. plan as in experimentation with mortgage financing and prefabrication. Chairman Hall presented the outline of the plan to the Fort Wayne authority in April 1938, patterning his idea after the experiments of the housing research department of Purdue University, which had been developed under the direction of Frank Watson, present head of the Municipal Housing Division of the F. H. A.

Similar experiments of the Farm Security Administration in rural housing in the South were also drawn upon in the development of the plan.

Similar experiments of the Farm Security Administration in rural housing in the South were also drawn upon in the development of the plan.

Following the initial consultation with his local housing authority, Mr. Hall presented his plan to Administrator Stewart McDonald, of the F. H. A. in Washington. Administrator McDonald not only evinced active interest in the plan, but promptly furnished Mr. Hall with direct assistance for development of the plan by loaning to him Mr. Frank Watson, then an F. H. A. economist, and Mr. J. Stanley Young, an F. H. A. architect, to carry the plan into effect. It may be noted that Mr. Frank Watson had also been primarily responsible for the prefabricated housing experiment in Indianapolis.

Chairman Hall of the Fort Wayne Housing Authority called a meeting on July 25, 1938, to which were invited Mr. John Essig, paid executive secretary of the Fort Wayne Housing Authority, Mr. F. M. Woodward, director second district, Works Progress Administration, Mr. D. C. McDargh, of W. P. A.; Mr. J. S. Young, of F. H. A.; Mr. Fank Watson, of F. H. A.; and five local labor representatives, including Mr. C. O. Van Horn, representative of the Fort Wayne Building Trades Council and business agent of Carpenters' Union, Local No. 232. At this informal meeting the question of employment of W. P. A. labor in the construction of prefabricated houses under the plan was discussed. Mr. Woodward, of W. P. A., suggested that in furnishing W. P. A. labor for this project, certified union members on W. P. A. rolls would be given priority, and if a sufficient number of these were not available workers would next be drawn from certified W. P. A. workers classified under the same trade.

(1) The Fort Wayne Housing Authority, a public agency created under the Indiana. housing authorities law, which is the official sponsor of the project and owner of the properties.

(2) The Fort Wayne National Bank, the Lincoln National Bank & Trust Co., and the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., which advanced the material costs of the prefabricated houses under mortgage loans aggregating $45,000, and amortized over 20 years.

(3) The Federal Housing Administration, which insured these mortgage loans under section 207 of the National Housing Act of 1934, and loaned to the Fort Wayne Housing Authority the services of three members of its staff. The F. H. A. insured the Icans under the large-scale rental housing provisions of the act on the same basis as it insures other privately financed mortgages.

(4) The Works Progress Administration, which through its Fort Wayne office made W. P. A. relief labor available for (a) the prefabrication of the houses, and (b) the erection of the houses.

ANALYSIS OF THE PLAN

Land acquisition

The Fort Wayne Housing Authority offers to purchase non-productive and slum real estate at $1 per lot. The lots thus acquired are in slum districts and are usually those held for eventual redevelopment for industrial and commercial usage. The offer to acquire each lot at $1 includes an option by which the landowner can redeem the property at any time. The property may be repurchased under the option for $150 during the first year, $100 the second year, $75 the third, $50 the fourth, $25 the fifth, and $1 thereafter. If the land contains structures first year, $100 the second year, $75 the third, $50 the fourth, $25 the fifth, and $1 thereafter. If the land contains structures requiring demolition the repurchase price for such land is $150 during the first year and $1 thereafter.

The landowner has the benefit of complete exemption from all taxation as long as the title to the land is held by the authority. It is significant that because the landowner retains the right to repurchase his lot for $1 when he can find an income-producing use for the land, and because of negligible sales price, the whole transaction is in effect a loan rather than a sale and serves as a device to free the landowner from paying the property taxes.

In view of the fact that the land owner before he entered into this arrangement had been paying taxes in anticipation of selling the land when its value rises at a time of hoped-for building boom, this clearly means that the real-estate speculator can profit by buying up vacant land and retaining it unimproved without contributing a cent into the city treasury or contributing anything to the value of his property, by waiting long enough to cash in on the growth of population, redevelopment of the land for industrial or commercial use, the development of new housing projects, etc. The prospects for speculative profit offered by this arrangement exceed the wildest dreams of such land speculators as the early Astors, Goelets, and others. as the early Astors, Goelets, and others.

As the chief weakness, which has long been recognized in the system of local taxation of real estate in force in this country, is the opportunities the system affords for speculation in appreciation of land values. An individual buys a tract of low-priced land in the neighborhood in which he believes transit lines and growth of population are apt to occur. He holds the land, paying whatever taxes may be involved, in the expectation or belief that the mere lapse of time will render his investment a profitable one. This lapse of time will render his investment a profitable one. This method of land speculation, while long recognized as legally permissible, has, in recent years, increasingly had its economic soundness challenged. The merit of permitting a continuation of a system by which an individual or his family is able to profit from values created solely by the community and not by an effort of his own, has been seriously questioned.

Recently there has been a growing interest in doing something to correct the condition which makes it possible for owners of land to profit by purely fortuitous circumstances toward which their own efforts have contributed nothing.

Now, at the very moment when perhaps more than ever before the validity of permitting men to profit by increase in land values is challenged, and at the same time, the need of the cities for additional financial revenue is becoming acute, the Fort Wayne plan is suggested.

plan is suggested.

An individual may be deterred today from buying vacant land and holding it by reason of the continual drain of taxes. This serves as an incentive for him either to improve his land with buildings, thus making it useful, thus providing employment, and thus providing a basis for more taxes, or, on the other hand, to sell it to someone else who will build. Under the Fort Wayne plan, however, this incentive to build or to sell to someone who will build, will be effectually and completely removed.

It will work out something like this. A public housing project or a new subway or a new industry established in a town will supply the basis for the belief that land values in the neighborhood will improve substantially. The speculator will go in and buy up adjacent land, whether surrounding the housing project, in the neighborhood of the new subway, or close to the new industry. He will then enter into the arrangement known as the "Fort Wayne plan." He will thereby completely relieve himself or his heirs of all taxation on the land so long as he or the heirs care to hold it. When the time has come that the appreciation anticipated has gone sufficiently far to make it attractive for him to do so, he will reclaim his land and profit from the increase in value, without in the meantime having paid a cent into the city treasury or having done anything to contribute to the value which has been created—except a little clever speculation.

The nineteenth century land speculators who made their huge fortunes from their landholdings at least had to pay some taxes on their land while holding it while awaiting it to appreciate in value. The land speculator of today—if the Fort Wayne plan ever becomes general—will be relieved of the necessity of paying any real-estate taxes while waiting for the land to grow in value. How fortuna but the full amount of the year-by-year growth in value, due to increase in population or development of the neighborhood.

It is hard to conceive of a plan more ideally calculated to intensify the financial difficulties of our cities, to retard the construction of much-needed decent homes on unimproved vacant leads and to enable wealthy investors to escape all textition. land, and to enable wealthy investors to escape all taxation.

Design

As we have already stated in the introductory section of the report, the houses constructed under the Fort Wayne plan are demountable, prefabricated houses which are placed on a field-poured concrete slab. No basement or foundation walls are furnished. The houses are designed to be moved from one location to another in the event the owners redeem their land.

The houses are L-shaped in design, with flat roof. The unit plan consists of three rooms and bath, as follows:

Square feet Combination living and homekeeping room____

The living room serves also as dining space and kitchen and is equipped with a coal- or wood-burning range, which also provides all available heat.

The chief demerits of the unit plan are the substandard bedroom areas, lack of storage space, lack of adequate utilities, lack of heat in bedrooms, cold floor in the absence of floor covering, absence of a kitchen cabinet, a refrigerator, and a laundry tub, lack of door and window screens, and combination living room, dining room, and bedroom, kitchen in one room.

The Fort Wayne house fails to meet the minimum requirements for health and hygiene set by the committee on hygiene of housing of the American Public Health Association in the following respects: Bedrooms are too small; lack of closet and storage space; lack of laundry facilities; and improper temperature above the

The house is designed primarily for its portability. To achieve this objective, the essential minimum standards of the house as a functioning dwelling have been sacrificed.

Construction

(1) The concrete 4-inch floor-foundation slab, poured directly on crushed stone fill on the ground, is likely to be severely damaged by frost action during the first winter. The 4-inch thickness of the slab as against the 7-inch minimum has been used for economy. Similarly the concrete floor slab construction cannot be regarded as satisfactory but was being used because it is the least expensive floor that can be provided with the type of labor available.

(2) The presence of condensation on the slab used as a floor will

(2) The presence of condensation on the slab used as a floor will be likely to cause mildew within the structure.

(3) There is likely to be condensation on the walls.

(4) There is bound to be movement at the edges of the roof panels, either stretching or bowing. On the houses constructed to date, some of the panels have already bowed. When this action results in cracks, a new roof will be necessary.

(5) The use of prefabricated panels is not satisfactory from the standpoint of structural soundness and in itself does not represent a justifiable economy measure. The panels were used as a doubtful solution to the production of precision work with inexperienced labor. perienced labor.

(6) The composition roofs have been built with an alleged life-expectancy of 17 years, but they will probaby have to be replaced within less than 10 years.

within less than 10 years.

(7) The entire construction of the Fort Wayne house is non-fireproof and nondurable. Its resistance to the hazards, wind-storms, and sever weather conditions is extremely low.

(8) Competent construction experts agree that the construction of the house will necessitate such large maintenance, repair, and replacement expenditures after 5 years as to make the operating costs prohibitive from then on. This will call for drastic upward adjustments in rents, making the Fort Wayne houses unavailable after 5 years to the class of tenants they have been designed to serve.

Relationship to the U.S. H. A. program

Relationship to the U. S. H. A. program

The program embodied in the United States Housing Act was especially and carefully designed by Congress to make possible decent low-rent housing and slum clearance under guaranteed standards and safeguards, and with enough elasticity to meet all the varying needs of different types of localities and conditions. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan on the other hand represents the initiation of a new public-housing program, unauthorized by Congress, one which deliberately eliminates the safeguards and lowers the minimum standards which Congress has established. Thus the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan through disingenuous permutations of separate and unrelated congressional authorizations (under the National Housing Act and the Federal Emergency Relief Act), fashions a wholly new program by administrative fiat in disregard of the stated congressional purpose.

It is important to make an objective comparison between the U. S. H. A. plan and the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan to determine the respective merits of the two programs.

As a basis of comparison we have taken a minimum house proposed by U. S. H. A. for a city in Indiana similar in size to Fort Wayne, constructed and financed in accordance with the normal requirements of the United States Housing Act. A direct comparison is made between the basic aspects of such a U. S. H. A. project and those of a F. H. A. Fort Wayne project.

(1) Land acquisition: Under the U. S. H. A. plan, land is purchased outright from present owners and a fair market price is paid in cash. Under the Fort Wayne plan, the land is "borrowed" from the owner temporarily and he receives tax exemption in return. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne system fosters land speculation. The U. S. H. A. plan provides for actual slum clearance on the side of the project itself, if it be a slum site, or slum clearance elsewhere if the site be vacant. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan provides for no slum clearance whatever.

The U.S. H. A. plan houses are grouped on one site forming a neighborhood which offers protection from blight and establishes excellent health conditions for family life. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan locates its scattered, isolated houses in blighted areas. No neighborhood improvement or reclamation of blighted areas is possible under the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan.

possible under the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan.

(2) Design and construction: The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan house is a prefabricated frame house with estimated life of 20 years. The U. S. H. A. house is more substantial and durable throughout and designed for minimum life of 60 years and low-maintenance costs. The U. S. H. A. house contains a long-life plumbing system using copper pipe and high quality fixtures and its electrical installation is full conduit complying with all codes. Substandard plumbing and electrical installation are used in the Fort Wayne house. Fort Wayne house.

The inside floor area of the U. S. H. A. minimum house is 14 percent greater than the Fort Wayne house. Bedrooms in the U. S. H. A. house are 120 square feet and 100 square feet, respectively, instead of 88 square feet each in the Fort Wayne house. This extra size of bedrooms in the U. S. H. A. house is essential for a house to accommodate a four-person family. The U. S. H. A. bedrooms are heated—the Fort Wayne plan bedrooms are not.

for a house to accommodate a four-person family. The U. S. H. A bedrooms are heated—the Fort Wayne plan bedrooms are not.

The U. S. H. A. house has screens in all exterior doors and windows, the Fort Wayne house has not. The U. S. H. A. house has an oil burner in the kitchen range so that cooking and hot water may be provided in summer without overheating the living room. This is not provided in the Fort Wayne house. The U. S. H. A. house provides a laundry tub (an essential for low-income families), the Fort Wayne house does not. The U. S. H. A. house contains a standard 5-foot bathtub, the Fort Wayne house has a 4-foot tub. The U. S. H. A. house has all necessary shelving in kitchen, the Fort Wayne house has none. The U. S. H. A. house has four full-size closets with hanging strips and shelves, the Fort Wayne house has two small cupboards projecting in corners of bedrooms.

(3) Financing: The U. S. H. A. plan operates on a business-like basis, making full use of the ordinary agencies of private enterprise and keeping accounts which are directly comparable with those of private business. The entire cost is paid for in full without hidden subsidies. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan provides no payment for land, for architects' services, nor for most of the overhead cost. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan is set up as a relief project with labor contributed and paid for by the W. P. A. All these form hidden subsidies which make the cost of the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house appear far less than it actually is.

(4) Benefits to business: The U. S. H. A. plan directly benefits private enterprise. More then a third of the U. S. H. A. morney is house appear far less than it actually is.

(4) Benefits to business: The U. S. H. A. plan directly benefits private enterprise. More than a third of the U. S. H. A. money is spent directly on large individual purchases of standard first-grade materials and equipment with no risks about the payment of bills. Lumber, brick, cement, steel, glass, and many other building-materials industries share in the benefits of the U. S. H. A. program. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan utilizes the minimum amount of building materials and even much of this is of substandard quality. Benefits derived from this type of construction by private enterprise are insignificant. At the same time the Fort Wayne plan by building such substandard houses tends to prevent the initiation and development of the U. S. H. A. projects and thereby deprives the building materials and equipment producers of sharing in the benefits of that program. The private contractor to whom the money is paid carries out the U. S. H. A. construction and he, in turn, uses this money for wages, materials, equipment, his own profit, and overhead. The Fort Wayne plan dispenses with the contractor altogether.

The U. S. H. A. program provides for planned neighborhoods

The U. S. H. A. program provides for planned neighborhoods which improve real-estate values in their surroundings. Private construction of filling stations, stores, etc., inevitably follows the construction of a U. S. H. A. project. The Fort Wayne plan with its scattered movable house produces no such effect and only tends to demoralize the real-estate market by stimulating land

(5) Labor policies: The U. S. H. A. plan pays prevailing wages, employs men through the regular building channels, affords protection for unionization, and sets standards as to hours, safety, and other labor conditions. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan uses only relief labor, almost all of which is unskilled, and pays security wages from Federal funds.

The U S. H. A. plan provides a large volume of normal private employment to unemployed building workers and to unemployed wage earners in building-material industries. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan gives employment to a proportionately negligible number of workers on and off the site. Only unskilled relief labor is utilized. This has the effect of depriving skilled and unskilled workers of normal employment and forcing them on relief rolls. A relief project which increases unemployment and enhances the relief problem can hardly be held valid.

(6) Capital costs: The total net construction cost of the 60-

(6) Capital costs: The total net construction cost of the 60-year U. S. H. A. house is $2,160, as compared with $1,560 for the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house with only 20 years of life. The over-all cost of the U. S. H. A. house, including land and all other items, is $3,150. The over-all cost claimed by the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house is $1,760, but this does not include land, site improvement, architects' and engineers' fees, overheads, carrying charges, nor any allowance for change or extras. These costs are in part neglected and in part supplied by hidden subsidies. (See in part neglected and in part supplied by hidden subsidies. (See appendix I.)

(7) Rents and cost of utilities: The shelter rent for the U. S. H. A. house is $1.90 per week or $8.25 per month; on a comparable basis the rent for the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house is $2.85 per week or $12.33 per month. The U. S. H. A. plan permits wholesale purchase of electricity and water; the cost of rent plus utilities under the U. S. H. A. plan is $12.60 a month as against $17.53 for the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan, or a saving of $56.19 a year for each low-income family. Thus the U. S. H. A. plan provides substantially better housing at a lower cost to the low-income tenants. (See appendix II.)

(8) Families served: Because of the lower rent and utility cost to tenants, the U. S. H. A. plan can accommodate families with an average annual income of $200 less than the F. H. A.-Fort Wayne plan. In addition, the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan houses only families on relief while the U. S. H. A. plan will house both relief and nonrelief families at lower rentals, without making relief status a condition of tenant eligibility. (See appendix III.)

CONCLUSIONS

The foregoing study of the F. H. A.-Fort Wayne plan has led us to the following conclusions:

1. The land acquisition method underlying the plan is highly objectionable as it will inevitably lead to flagrant land speculation due to the repurchase feature of the plan and complete tax exemption of the land while it is held and developed by the municipal heaving authority.

emption of the land while it is held and developed by the municipal housing authority.

2. The practice of moving houses around from one place to another is uneconomical, enhances the sense of insecurity and impermanence among the families thus subjected to floating, makes rehabilitation of such families impossible, and is therefore objectionable from the social point of view.

3. The plan will serve to undermine the already precarious structure of municipal finance in the communities which undertake it.

4. It will tend to perpetuate and cause further widespread unemployment among the building mechanics and laborers, depriving them of normal employment.

them of normal employment.

5. By being limited to relief labor it will perpetuate the relief status of the workers.

them of normal employment.

5. By being limited to relief labor it will perpetuate the relief status of the workers.

6. By being limited to relief tenants it will provide an incentive for families to remain on relief.

7. Substandard design utilized under the plan is a real threat to the developments of good housing. Failure to meet minimum-size requirements and lack of adequate heating facilities, laundry facilities, kitchen facilities, and complete absence of storage space condemn the design as utterly inadequate and unsatisfactory. This is especially true of mixing in one room the functions of cooking, laundering, and eating and general living. The design of the house will serve in a very real sense as a deterrent to the development of the higher standard of living.

8. The substandard construction of the houses and the flimsy material utilized render the houses into structures of doubtful durability. While the construction of such houses deprives labor of normal employment, the net effect of the operation is to inflict upon our communities nothing better than new slums.

9. Slum clearance and low-rent housing for slum dwellers can be and is being carried out more effectively and more economically under the United States Housing Act with full participation of private enterprise and with full observance of minimum standards of construction and design, as well as of minimum labor standards in normal private employment. The sound permanent low-rent housing program of the U. S. H. A., designed to provide decent, livable, and lasting homes to the ill-housed families must not be jeopardized by turning low-rent housing into a proving ground for unscrupulous land speculators and self-seeking promoters, willing to inflict upon us a Nation-wide slum for private gain, at the expense of the taxpayer as well as the slum dweller.

We have approached the study of the plan without prejudice. Our objections and criticisms are not the criticisms of conservatism. We do not condemn the plan merely because it is new or because

It is our considered judgment that the plan is contrary to the public interest in many respects, that it should be condemned as such by the Federal Government, and that all agencies of the Federal Government should be directed by the President to refrain from sponsorship of and participation in any phase of the plan.

APPENDIX I Capital costs

The U. S. H. A. plan includes the entire cost of the complete project figured on the usual commercial basis. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne estimate omits a number of essential items which, although real costs, are provided by other persons or agencies and not included in the published figures.

The net construction cost of the U. S. H. A. 60-year house is estimated at $2,160, as compared with $1,560 for the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house with only 20 years of life.

The total estimates for the two plans are as follows:

U. S. H. A. minimum:	$200
Site improvements	250
Nondwelling building	10
Dwelling construction	2, 160
Dwelling equipment	85
Preoccupancy cost	20
Architect and engineering	147
Administrative expense	83 45
Carrying charges
Anowance for changes and extras	100
	3, 150
F. H. A. Fort Wayne:
Land	1
Dwelling construction:
Cost of W. P. A. labor $860
Cost of materials 700
Dwelling equipment	100
Administrative expense	100
Attraction to the property of	1, 760

The U. S. H. A. estimate is based on a project of 2000 h, 756, with labor and material prices prevailing in Fort Wayne. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne estimate is that appearing in Architectural Forum for October 1938.

The U. S. H. A. estimate includes $200 for land; and $250 for grading, sidewalks, utility extensions, and landscaping. F. H. A. Fort Wayne includes only a nominal price of $1 for land which is assumed to be already improved.

The U. S. H. A. estimate includes one nondwelling building in the project with 500 square feet of space for management and project operation.

The U. S. H. A. estimate includes preoccupancy cost covering tenant selection and extra expenses during the initial period of operation. No allowance is made for this in the F. H. A. Fort operation. No allowance is made for this in the F. H. A. Fort Wayne estimate.

The U. S. H. A. estimate includes architects' and engineers' fees at the established scale. No professional fees were paid in the F. H. A. Fort Wayne project, since architectural work was done without charge by the Federal Housing Administration.

The U. S. H. A. estimate includes carrying charges for interest on borrowed funds during construction. There is no allowance for this item in the F. H. A. Fort Wayne estimate,

The U. S. H. A. estimate includes 5 percent allowance for changes and extras which may be saved if plan is rigidly adhered to. No corresponding allowance in F. H. A. Fort Wayne estimate.

APPENDIX II

Rents and cost of utilities

The rent charges for the two plans are based on the following annual budgets. All items in the U. S. H. A. budget are figured on a safer and more conservative basis than the F. H. A.-Fort

U. S. H. A. Minimum:
Management
Operating services	2.50
Repairs, maintenance, and replacements	54.50
Insurance	2.00
Vacancy and collection losses	5.00
Financial cost
Annual cost	99.00
F. H. A. Fort Wayne:
F. H. A. Fort Wayne: Management	12.00
Repairs, maintenance, and replacements
Insurance	1 60
Vacancy and collection losses	1.00
Financial cost	72.00
Surplus	20. 80
Annual cost	130 00

The U. S. H. A. budget is based on the average estimated cost over the life of the project. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne budget is that appearing in Architectural Forum for October 1938.

The U. S. H. A. item of $30 for management is the full cost. The F. H. A. Fort Wayne item of $12 is based on having part of management done by the Associated Charities without charge.

The U. S. H. A. item for repairs, maintenance, and replacements of $54.50 includes the cost of replacing all items with life or less than 60 years. It is believed that the F. H. A. Fort Wayne item of $18.40 will be too low even for 20-year life.

Financial cost in U. S. H. A. budget is the net difference between cost of 58-year loan at 3 percent, and U. S. H. A. annual contribution of 3½ percent. F. H. A. Fort Wayne financial cost is cost of 20-year loan at 4½ percent plus ½ percent for mortgage insurance.

The U. S. H. A. budget includes no item for surplus. It is believed that the item of $20.80 shown as surplus in the F. H. A. Fort Wayne budget will scarcely suffice for additional cost of repairs and for cost of moving houses when lots are reclaimed by pairs and for cost of moving houses when lots are reclaimed by owners.

On the basis of the above budgets, the shelter rents for the U.S. H. A. minimum house are $1.90 per week or $8.25 per month. The announced rents for the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house are $2.50 per week or $10.83 per month.

As pointed out above, U.S. H. A. shelter rent includes full cost of management; the F. H. A. Fort Wayne rent includes only that part which is not carried by the Associated Charities. To make the two rents comparable, the U.S. H. A. rent could be reduced by the difference of $18 per year or the F. H. A. Fort Wayne rent could be raised to cover full payment of management costs. In the following analysis, the F. H. A. Fort Wayne rent has been increased by $18 per year, making a comparable shelter rent for the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house of $2.85 per week or $12.33 per month.

Electricity and water under the U.S. H. A. plan for a unified project are purchased at wholesale and their cost included in the tenant's rent. Under the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plaze with scattered houses, both electricity and water must be purchased by the tenant at retail and paid for directly by him. Under both schemes, heating and cooking fuel will be supplied by the tenant.

The resulting cost to the tenant of shelter and necessary utilities per month on a comparable basis for the two schemes is as follows: U.S. H. A. minimum:

U. S. H. A. minimum: Shelter rent	$8. 25
Electricity for lighting	. 60
Water Heating and cooking	. 75 3. 00
Total	12.60
F. H. A. Fort Wayne:	10.00
Shelter rentElectricity for lighting	12.33
Water	1.00
Heating and cooking	3.00
Total	17.53

The total cost to the tenant of shelter and utilities under the U. S. H. A. plan is thus $4.93 per month or $1.14 per week lower than under the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan. This is equivalent to a saving of $56.19 a year, to each low-income family rehoused.

APPENDIX III Families served

The rents achieved in the U.S.H.A. minimum house are within the reach of families in the very lowest income groups and of those who are on relief. Families with incomes as low as $400 or $500 per year could be accommodated. For the unit described in this memorandum, with a $12.60 monthly cost of rent plus utilities, annual family incomes would probably average between $600 and $700.

plus utilities, annual family incomes would probably average between $600 and $700.

The cost of shelter and utilities under the F. H. A. Fort Wayne plan is $56.19 greater than in the U. S. H. A. minimum house. Since rent and utilities generally take about a quarter of the family budget, the average income of the group which could be reached by the F. H. A. Fort Wayne house would be about $200 greater than under the U. S. H. A. plan.

The families eligible for U. S. H. A. plan.

The families eligible for U. S. H. A. projects are entitled to stay in them, whether or not on relief, as long as they pay their rent and their incomes do not exceed the statutory limits.

Under the terms of the arrangement between the W. P. A. and the Fort Wayne Authority, the houses erected by the Fort Wayne Authority are for use primarily by families on relief. It is believed bad social policy to thus limit public housing to relief families; it marks them as a class apart, and sets up distinctions undesirable in a democracy. If relief families in the F. H. A. Fort Wayne houses are forced to leave when they become self-supporting, the turn-over in tenancy will be great, giving rise to unnecessary costs of maintenance and repair. Family life would be insecure and temporary, and the family's incentive to become self-supporting would be decreased by the knowledge that as soon as it got on its feet, it would be forced to move.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President. I should like the Record

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like the RECORD to show that as soon as I have an opportunity to analyze the figures and facts and assertions made by the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] on the subject of housing, I should like further to discuss that subject in view of some investigations I have been making since I originally discussed the matter on the floor of the Senate. I do not wish to do so today, because I desire to take the Senator's figures and study them in connection with additional figures which I have obtained. However, later on I hope to have the opportunity to discuss the matter.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Calloway, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 218. An act for the relief of Manuel D. A. Otero, as administrator of the estate of Teresita S. Otero, deceased;

S. 219. An act for the relief of Emma Gomez.

RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENT WITH CANADA—IMPORTATION OF SHINGLES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President—
Mr. KING. I withhold the suggestion of the absence of a

Mr. BONE. I understood that the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] desired to address the Senate, but, if agreeable, and he is able to make other arrangements, I should prefer to occupy the floor at this time in the presentation of a matter which I consider of great importance.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I had anticipated taking the floor at this time, but, in view of the position of the Senator from Washington, and his attitude with respect to the important matter which he desires to discuss, I shall defer to him, and ask to take the floor tomorrow.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] and myself, I am introducing two bills, one relating to the imports of shingles and intended to restore the quota limitation on the imports of red-cedar shingles from Canada; and the other to reenact a provision passed at the last Congress to require lumber and timber imported into this country to be marked with the name of the originating country.

I ask that at this point the two bills be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and be printed in the RECORD, and I intend to discuss them at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). Without objection, the bills will be received, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed in the RECORD at this point.

The bills (S. 1837) relating to the importation of shingles and (S. 1838) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to the marking of lumber and timber imported from foreign countries were read twice by their titles, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill (S. 1837) relating to the importation of shingles

A bill (S. 1837) relating to the importation of shingles Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions contained in any foreign-trade agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into, whenever any organization or association representing the producers of more than 75 percent of the red-cedar shingles produced in the United States during the previous half-year period shall request the President to limit the importation of red-cedar shingles from Canada, and the President finds from available statistics that the total quantity of red-cedar shingles produced in the Dominion of Canada, which is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption in the United States, during any given half of any calendar year exceeds or will exceed 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports during the preceding half combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports during the preceding half year, the President shall issue an order limiting for the 6 months immediately following the half of the calendar year in which said excess occurred the quantity of red-cedar shingles to be imported from Canada to 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments and imports of red-cedar shingles for such preceding half calendar year. The President shall issue a new order for each half of the calendar year thereafter with the same limitations as hereinbefore set forth. set forth.

A bill (S. 1838) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to the marking of lumber and timber imported from foreign countries

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso contained in subdivision (J) of section 304 (a) (3) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, That this subdivision (J) shall not apply to sawed lumber and timbers; telephone, trolley, electric light, and telegraph poles of wood; and bundles of shingles."

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by this act, shall be effective after the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any foreign-trade agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into under the authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and supplemented.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] has been much interested in the problem of protecting the lumber and shingle industry from unreasonably strong competition of cheaply produced Canadian products. Senator McNary's State is one of the large shingle and lumber producing States of the country, as is my own.

The lumber industry is the lifeblood of business in these two States. Washington produces more lumber than any other State in the Union and Oregon is a close second.

When the lumber industry in these two States is prospering, both are likely to have a fair measure of good times, but when the logging camps are closed and the mills idle, our States are bound to be in difficulty.

The principal competition with the products of Oregon and Washington comes from Canada and because of the relatively low wages paid up there it is necessary for the preservation of our own timber and lumber industry to build some kind of barrier round this country against Canadian lumber and shingle imports.

Every Member of the Senate, I assume, has received protests about one or more provisions of the reciprocal-trade treaty with Canada which was signed November 17, 1038. In common with others of you, I have received a great number of protests against the way this treaty operates to the detriment of domestic producers, and particularly to the detriment of the Pacific Northwest lumber industry and Pacific Northwest zinc industry. Senators from other lumber-producing areas will be able to say how the lumber interests of their States have been affected, but in general I think they will agree the effect has been adverse.

I have in my hand a memorandum issued February 20 this year through the Department of Commerce by the lumber survey committee, which is an official committee that submits a quarterly analysis to the Secretary with regard to lumber consumption and stocks.

In the letter of transmittal to Secretary Hopkins the committee says:

The general retardants to world trade have been accentuated, in The general retardants to world trade have been accentuated, in American lumber and timber products, by the results so far of reciprocal-trade agreements, which are generally regarded by the lumber trade as adverse. The United States in the past 10 years notwithstanding the magnitude of its timber reserves and lumber manufacturing resources, and the superiority, and diversity of its lumber and timber products available for export, has dropped from the first place in lumber world trade to fifth place. It is now exceeded by Canada, Finland, Russia, and Sweden.

The committee further says in its conclusions and recommendations-in conclusion No. 7:

The lumber industry feels that the recent trade agreements with Great Britain and Canada have been generally disappointing to the lumber and plywood industries, which had expressed the hope that the present "unwholesome balance" between exports and imports might be gradually rectified through larger export trade opportunities. Preferential tariffs, foreign shipping subsidies, and further protectionist trends in major foreign lumber markets, in the opinion of the humber tradety continue to retard and suppress our ion of the lumber industry, continue to retard and suppress our foreign lumber trade.

This is the well-considered opinion of the committee, which consists of Thomas S. Holden, vice president, F. W. Dodge Corporation, New York; M. W. Stark, economist, Columbus, Ohio; Calvin Fentress, chairman, Baker, Fentress & Co., Chicago, Ill.; Phillips A. Hayward, chief, Forest Products Division, Department of Commerce; and Wilson Compton, secretary and manager, National Lumber Manufacturers Association.

I hardly need to tell the Senate what the reaction to the trade treaty has been in the Pacific Northwest, but it can be illustrated by the shingle I hold in my hand, upon which a printed card is pasted. This card says:

DEAR SENATOR: This shingle was made by an American union laborer. Do not force him on the W. P. A. by giving our markets to Chinese and Hindu labor of Canada.

This particular shingle was signed by Mildred Hillcar, of Aberdeen, Wash. I have received 2,000 of these; my colleague has received an equal number; Congressman Wall-GREN, of Everett, Wash., has received 2,000; and the Secretary of State and the President have received 2,000 each.

These people out in my State who are sending these shingles are not seeking to overwhelm the President and the Secretary of State and the Senators into taking action to retract the injurious treaty, but they are motivated by desire to protect their very living. They mean just exactly what they say-that the recent trade treaty has opened our doors to shingles manufactured in Canada by cheap oriental labor, with which our labor must compete.

A little later I intend to submit some statistics, but I can tell the Senate now in a general way that it costs 45 to 80 cents per square more to produce a square of shingles in this country than in British Columbia, because of higher labor costs. A square of shingles is that number that will cover an area of 100 square feet, that is an area 10 feet by 10 feet. This differential in cost per square is based on the cost of manufacturing the logs into shingles and the labor cost in producing the logs. The costs of logging in the United States are higher than in British Columbia. The difference in mill and logging costs varies as between different operators.

The United States wage average in the red cedar shingle industry is approximately 35 cents per hour higher than the Canadian average, or in percentage about 60 percent greater than the Canadian average. Senators can see without further detailed exposition that our Pacific Northwest shingle industry must either go out of business or reduce wages to a level that will enable competition with British Columbia Hindu and Chinese labor. I feel sure the President does not want that, and the Secretary of State does not want that, and I know that the Senate of the United States would oppose such a result. Needless to say, our people will express their indignation at the polls if we persist in giving away our market to foreign countries while they walk the streets unemployed.

Some Senators may not be aware of the background of the situation that has developed in the Pacific Northwest shingle industry, and so it may be well to mention that in 1935, due to the entirely logical case built up by the shingle interests and labor employed in shingle mills, the Congress placed a fairly satisfactory quota upon the imports of Canadian shingles. This quota law is known as section 811 of the Revenue Act of 1936-Forty-ninth Statutes, 1746. This provided that the imports of red cedar shingles from Canada should be limited during any 6-month period to 25 percent of the domestic consumption of shingles during the preceding 6-month period. This is a rough statement of that act, which in effect guaranteed to the Canadians onefourth of our market. Certainly, that was more than generous to Canada.

Let me digress for a moment to say that one-fourth of our market is 75 percent of the entire Canadian production. Any business group on the face of the earth ought to be satisfied if they can find a complete outlet for 75 percent of their production in this country. We guaranteed that, and apparently Canada is not satisfied with that.

In order that the provisions of the former law may be clear to all interested I now read into the RECORD the statute itself:

to all interested I now read into the Record the statute itself:

Whenever any organization or association representing the producers of more than 75 percent of the red-cedar shingles produced in the United States during the previous half-year period shall request the President to limit the importation of red-cedar shingles from Canada under paragraph 1760 of the reciprocal-trade agreement entered into with the Dominion of Canada under date of November 15, 1935, and the President finds from available statistics that the total quantity of red-cedar shingles produced in the Dominion of Canada which is entered or withdrawn from warehouse for consumption in the United States during any given half of any calendar year exceeds or will exceed 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports during the preceding half year, the President shall issue an order limiting for the 6 months immediately following the half of the calendar year in which said excess occurred the quantity of red-cedar shingles to be imported from Canada to 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments and imports of red-cedar shingles for such preceding half calendar year. The President shall issue a new order for each half of the calendar year thereafter during the continuation of the operation of the reciprocal-trade agreement entered into with the Dominion of Canada under date of November 15, 1935, with the same limitations as hereinbefore set forth.

Let me again digress to say that that was the law on our statute books until the adoption of the recent Canadian reciprocal-trade agreement.

The shingle industry was getting along fairly well under this 25-percent quota, but the reciprocal-trade treaty of November 15, 1935, was superseded by the so-called treaty of November 17, 1938.

The new trade treaty eliminates the quota, and provides that shingles shall come in free of duty, except that the United States reserves the right to impose at some possible future date a customs duty of not to exceed 25 cents per square on shingles imported in any calendar year after 1938 in excess of 30 percent of the annual average for the preceding 3 calendar years.

In addition to that severe blow to the shingle industry, the negotiators of the trade treaty also eliminated the provision enacted by the Congress at the last session requiring that lumber and timber imported into this country must be marked with the name of the originating country. This marking provision was merely to make it possible to enable consumers of lumber and shingles in this country to know where these products came from, and in order to enable Government officials to enforce the Domestic Origins Act. The latter act provides that domestic materials shall be used, as far as possible, in the construction of Government buildings.

A domestic origins clause is also inserted in contracts of the Public Works Administration and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, even though these agencies are not required to do so under the law on projects that are not built for the Federal Government itself.

Not only has the State Department thus knocked down every barrier to the importation of shingles and lessened the barrier against the importation of lumber but it has made it impossible for those who would prefer to buy domestic products to distinguish between such products and Canadian products.

This indicates a seeming determination to favor foreign producers and foreign labor over our own producers and our own labor.

See how many things the trade-treaty negotiators did to favor the Canadian lumber industry as against our own!

I quote the lumber declaration of the trade agreement with Canada, as found on page 44:

The Governments of Canada and the United States of America, desiring to proceed toward the removal of those restrictions on the international trade in lumber which have operated to the disadvantage of their respective lumber industries:

Recognizing that as a first step toward this objective the duties and taxes levied on lumber imported into the United States from Canada were reduced by 50 percent, to $2 per thousand feet, in the trade agreement concluded between Canada and the United States of America on November 15, 1935.

The State Department was not satisfied with cutting this duty in half in 1935, and had to go still further:

Noting that as a consequence of the coming into force of the trade

Noting that as a consequence of the coming into force of the trade agreements signed this day:

(1) The United Kingdom duty on softwood lumber in those forms of which the United States is an important supplier of the United Kingdom's requirements will not exceed 16 shillings per standard (approximately $2 per thousand feet), without any restriction as to the quantity that may be imported at the reduced rate of duty.

This sounds fine, but I shall have more to say about this aspect later.

- (2) The preferential margins enjoyed by lumber of Empire origin in the British West Indian colonies will not exceed $2 per - thousand feet.

 (3) The Canadian duty on planed or dressed lumber imported from the United States will be reduced by 50 percent and the special excise tax of 3 percent will be removed from rough and dressed lumber, without any restriction as to the quantity that may be imported either at the reduced rates of duty or free.
- It will be noted, however, that lumber from the United States cannot compete with Canadian lumber because of the wage differential.
- (4) The quantity of red cedar shingles that may be imported into the United States free of duty will be fixed at 30 percent of United States consumption and imports in excess of this quantity will not be dutiable at more than 25 cents per square.

However, that duty will not be imposed until later, if ever.

(5) The quantitative restriction on the importation into the United States of lumber of Douglas fir and western hemlock at the reduced rates of duty and tax in effect since January 1, 1936, and confirmed by the trade agreement signed today, will be re-

Then comes the clause knocking out the marking amendment, in the following words:

(6) Lumber and timber imported from Canada will not be required to be marked to indicate their country of origin.

Then follow paragraphs indicating that the United Kingdom is to make some concessions with regard to imports of United States lumber; but those who are best posted on the lumber industry—the lumbermen themselves—say that the United Kingdom and Canada have made no concessions comparable to those made by the United States.

The authoritative spokesman of the west coast lumbermen is the West Coast Lumbermen's Association, of which Col. W. B. Greeley, former United States forester, is secretary-manager.

In a recent publication known as Lumber Facts, the West Coast Lumbermen's Association says:

The real question put to the people of the Pacific Northwest by these trade agreements is whether our own forest-borne industries, labor, and crafts are to be ignored in the tariff-making policies of the Government.

I entirely agree with the statement of Mr. Greeley that "the struggle on the Pacific coast for lumber trade turns upon the competition of a foreign low-cost industry with a domestic high-cost industry."

Mr. Greeley goes on to say that within the past 5 years the American Government-

Has developed a far-reaching program for the benefit of labor. The National Industrial Recovery Act established the principle of collective bargaining. The National Labor Relations Act has been adopted. Federal laws have been set up that have set up a nation-wide system of unemployment compensation and social security, with old-age benefits. The Fair Labor Standards Act has put a floor under wages and a ceiling over working hours. The American labor policy seeks high wages, a short workweek, and support for workers during unemployment and old age. The Canadian labor policy has remained substantially that of keeping Canadian industries competitive in the markets of the world.

Mr. Greeley points out that nearly half the production cost of west coast lumber is wages, and that the average wages of the Douglas fir logging camps and sawmills of Oregon and Washington are 76.7 cents per hour, while the average wage in the competitive Douglas fir industry in British Columbia is not over 57 cents per hour. He says that the lower wages in British Columbia mean an average lower cost of production of more than $3 per thousand board feet. Other costs in the United States, such as those for socialsecurity benefits, increase this differential.

Colonel Greeley says:

Our lumber duties, reduced by trade agreements to $2 per thousand feet, are just one-half the average difference in cost of production arising from fundamental differences in labor legislation and working conditions in the two countries.

The favorable attitude of lumbermen toward the trade treaty policy as they understood it in 1935 is explained by Mr. Greeley as follows:

The first trade agreement of significance to the lumber industry was negotiated with Canada in 1935. The situation of west coast sawmills and their employees, then working about half time, and the restrictions placed upon American export trade by British Empire discrimination, were explained to the governmental agencies. It was naturally assumed that a policy designed to break down the trade barriers would work both ways; that if our tariff wall against Canadian lumber was lowered, the British Empire tariff wall against American lumber would be lowered also.

But to the amazement and disappointment of the west coast wall against American lumber would be lowered also. But to the amazement and disappointment of the west coast lumber industry, the Canadian agreement of 1935 simply knocked down half the American tariff wall and left the British Empire tariff intact. American duties on Canadian lumber were cut 50 percent—all the law allowed. In the case of Douglas fir and west coast hemlock, importations at the lower duty were restricted to 250,000,000 feet annually. Since all nations which do not discriminate against our commerce must be treated equally, the reduced lumber duty was automatically extended to every other country in the world which shipped lumber to the United States, Russia included.

To get back to shingles, with which I am dealing in particular, although the effect of the trade treaty on shingles is typical of the effect upon lumber generally, the immediate effect of the trade treaty on shingles was to break the market price approximately 17 percent, or 40 to 55 cents per square. In addition, buyers all over the country canceled their orders for domestic shingles in anticipation of being able to purchase the imported shingles at lower prices. These cancelations, combined with the break in price, caused a large percentage of the mills to shut down, thereby throwing hundreds of men out of work, and causing confusion and uncertainty for the manufacturers.

The immediate effect upon the Canadians was readily seen in the immediate increase in exports of shingles to the United States in 28 days of January 1939. These exports amounted to 303,675 squares, or an increase of 60.5 percent over the average of the three previous January imports covered by the 1936 agreement. The reason for this great increase is obvious, namely, that the Canadians thought they might just as well send in all the shingles they could under the quota which limited exports for a 6-month period; and they did this because they knew the quota would soon be lifted.

The shingle quota has not yet been lifted, the restriction remaining on until the Canadian Government ratifies the trade treaty, if it can be called a treaty. I assume that this ratification will soon come, and then shingles will pour into this country in unrestricted quantities. Even assuming that the Congress passes the maximum allowable duty of 25 cents per square under the quota arrangement, this 25 cents will not act as a bar to the imports of shingles. The duty would have to be a full 25-percent ad valorem on all of the shingles imported into this country in order to protect American shingle manufacturers and American labor.

The customs bureau on March 10 announced the figures on imports of Canadian shingles for February. The amazing news was disclosed that the Canadians had exported into this country 228,577 squares, an increase of 54.6 percent over the average imports for the preceding three Februaries.

The imports in February 1936 were 44,143 squares; in February 1937, 108,700 squares; in February 1938, 196,767 squares; and in February 1939, 228,577 squares.

It should be mentioned that the Canadian manufacturers themselves are alarmed over the great increase in their exports of shingles, and feel that this increase will be so shocking to the United States that a successful effort will be made to restore the shingle quota. Canadian manufacturers accordingly have reduced their production as compared with what it could be if there were no effort to slow it down. Nevertheless, the February 1939 imports were 54.6 percent higher than the average of the February imports during the preceding 3 years, which average was 147,870 squares.

So great has been the increase in shingle imports from Canada over previous years that although only 31 percent of the 6 months' quota period had elapsed on February 25, the quota was 50.63 percent filled. This is the more amazing because these large shipments were made during what is normally the slack period of the year, the cold-weather period, during which building construction is relatively low. Some idea of the vast quantity of shingles that would be imported into this country from Canada during the warmweather period can be obtained from the figures now available.

However, even taking only the present rate of imports per day—that is, the average of the imports from January 1 to February 25 of this year—Canada would take 45.3 percent of our shingle market, based on the 1938 consumption of shingles, which was 7,745,263 squares. Our own shingle mills could have supplied the entire market in 1938. At the present rate the American shingle mills and American labor would supply only about 55 percent of the market or less; and my own feeling is that as the season advances the shingle imports will increase so greatly that our own mills will supply far less than half of our domestic market.

It is a serious question whether the American shingle industry can survive at all under the impact of the Canadian competition, and in that event Canadian mills will serve virtually 100 percent of our market within a few years.

It is obvious that the Canadian manufacturers are gleefully anticipating taking over most of the United States market, and they are fully justified in their belief that they will be able to do so. So far as shingles are concerned, the agreement of 1938 is not reciprocal at all.

With regard to lumber other than shingles, I quote again from Colonel Greeley's illuminating statement in his pamphlet Lumber Facts:

This one-sided reciprocity has gone right on through the past 3 years. In the first 11 months of 1938 Canada shipped 150,000,000 feet of Douglas fir and west-coast hemlock timber into the United States; while west-coast shipments to the entire British Empire, Canada included, totaled 59,000,000 board feet. This is a trade ratio of nearly 3 to 1.

It would be amusing to note, if the implications were not so tragic, that Canada makes the concession toward the United States of admitting our shingles free. That would be fine were it not for the fact that Canadian costs of production with Hindu and Chinese labor are so much lower than ours that there seems no valid reason why any Canadian should buy a single square of United States shingles.

Again Canada reduces her tariff on dressed lumber from 20 percent to 10 percent, but as Colonel Greeley remarks, this concession is also meaningless in actual trade.

The legitimate supposition was that in return for opening our markets to Canadian lumber we would increase our own export trade.

Again I quote from Colonel Greeley:

West-coast lumber exports have dropped from over 1,600,000,000 feet in 1928 and 1929 to less than 300,000,000 feet in 1938. Last year they were barely 100,000,000 feet over the imports of our own wood, competing in our home markets. Our offshore trade has not been at such low ebb since the World War or, before that, since 1909.

I call the attention of Senators from lumber-producing States to the fact that the excise tax on imported lumber will expire on June 30, 1939, unless it is renewed by act of Congress. The renewal will provide the meager protection of $2 per thousand board feet on general lumber imports, which is only half of the full statutory duty, but even this light protection is better than nothing, and we should not fail to see that this tax is reenacted. I assume the House Ways and Means Committee will originate the renewal.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I regret that I have not heard the Senator's remarks from the beginning, but I should like to ask if he is discussing the reciprocal-trade treaties?

Mr. BONE. I am discussing the operation of the recent reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada, which, I am frank to indicate in my remarks, is not reciprocal at all but is a very one-sided affair.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Does the Senator mean "one-sided" in favor of the United States of America?

Mr. BONE. No; in favor of Canada.

Mr. LUNDEEN. The Senator does not maintain, does he, that we have a reciprocal-trade agreement that favors a foreign country?

Mr. BONE. I am trying to indicate that that is precisely what is happening under the recent reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I may say, in that connection, that I voted against the bill under which reciprocal-trade agreements have been negotiated, and I also voted against the extension of that measure.

Mr. BONE. I am sure the Senator will be interested, then, in finding that, in respect to the matter I am discussing, his judgment has been completely vindicated by the operation of the agreement which was recently entered into with Canada.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BONE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator as to whether or not he has any data that will throw any light on the reciprocal-trade agreement between Canada and the United States respecting mica and feldspar? A great deal of those commodities is mined in western North Carolina, and I am anxious to know how my constituents who are engaged in this particular business are making out as a result of the reciprocal-trade agreement referred to. Has the Senator looked into that?

Mr. BONE. I am unable to enlighten the Senator about the matter concerning which he asks.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The reason I made the inquiry was that I have a great many complaints from constituents of mine who are engaged in mining in about six of the mining counties of my State.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. KING. I may say to my friend from North Carolina that the reciprocal-tariff provision dealing with Canada is very clear, and I am sure the Senator, by examining it, can determine for himself just how far it modifies existing tariff laws. I do not think it affects them greatly.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much. I was really wondering as to the situation.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, at this point I wish to include in my remarks a letter that I wrote on February 25 to Secretary of State Cordell Hull.

It appears from communications that have reached me from the Secretary of State, and from what he has told others, that he believes the United States shingle industry is unable to supply the domestic market. He further has the belief that it is necessary to import Canadian shingles in order to keep down prices of the domestically produced shingles. On both points he is in error as I believe I have demonstrated in my letter to him which is as follows:

FEBRUARY 25, 1939.

The Honorable Cordell Hull

The Honorable Cordell Hull,

The Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Secretary: Thank you for your letter of February 7 with regard to the shingle-quota law and also copy of Mr. Harry C. Hawkins' letter to Mr. Benfield. I found both of these letters informative as to your viewpoint. I can understand your position now in the light of the information that has reached you.

I note in your letter to me that you feel there is some question about the ability of the domestic shingle industry to supply the demand, especially in the case of an emergency such as the New Encland hurricane.

England hurricane.

I also note you believe that the 25 cents per square duty that can be imposed on red cedar shingles imported in excess of 30 percent of the domestic consumption is adequate protection for United States produced shingles.

In considering the information that has come to you with regard to the need for shingles in the hurricane-stricken area I think the source of the information and the objectives of your informants cast some doubt on its value for determining the true situation. Let me give you an example:

me give you an example:
Senator Augustine Lonergan, of Connecticut, urged the President last October to permit Canadian shingles to come in over and above the quota. I wired Senator Lonergan, on October 4, as

"Have looked into shingle situation and find that mills have ample reserve stock and plenty of capacity to fill entire demand, even during emergency created by storm. If you have any instances in which persons seeking to purchase shingles are unable to do so, please let me know and I shall endeavor to have such orders filled without delay and am sure I will be successful if those who want to purchase care to communicate with me. Let those who say there is a shortage of shingles place their orders and see what happens. I shall oppose with maximum vigor any attempts to increase imports of shingles into United States."

In answer, I received the following telegram from Senator Lonergan on October 5:

"Re telegraph my action on shingles based on wire from Guern." 'Have looked into shingle situation and find that mills have gan on October 5:

"Re telegraph my action on shingles based on wire from Guernsey Westbrook Co., Hartford, Conn., stating 100 cars shingles needed in storm area. I wired them Washington and Oregon dealers seem to have plentiful supply and they advised that their west-coast buyer contacted Washington mills and report limited quantity of perfection grade shingles available, none of which can be shipped under 2 weeks. Hartford company states this condition working extreme difficulties on consumer trade needing stock for emergency replacement. Suggest your mills should contact Guernsey Westbrook Co., Hartford."

Westbrook Co., Hartford."

I then telegraphed Mr. Williams, manager of the United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry, at Seattle, quoting Senator Lonergan's telegram in full and adding:

"Hope you can get in touch with Guernsey Westbrook Co. at once and arrange to take care of their order. Please wire me as soon as possible what action has been taken so I can advise Lonergan."

On October 6 I comin mind the contraction of the co

Lonergan."
On October 6, I again wired the United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry as follows:

"Please advise what is being done to offer shingles to Guernsey Westbrook Co. of Hartford, Conn. Would like definite wire on this in order to acquaint president with fact that ample supply of shingles is available. If Hartford company refuses to place orders the demand for Canadian quota increase must collapse."
On the same day, I received the following telegram from the United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry:

"Re wire October 6, we advise that several mills are quoting Guernsey Westbrook. We refer to C. B. Lumber & Shingle Co., Everett, Wash., have sold in that territory but are quoting Guernsey Westbrook Co. today on four cars or total 1,000 squares. Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., Longview, Wash., quoting on one car. Jamison Mill Co., Everett, Wash., have filled two orders to reach destination on 7th and are shipping two cars to arrive unnamed eastern destination on 14th. Also received order today for two cars, delivery 21st. All six cars ordered by Guernsey Westbrook. M. R. Smith Lumber & Shingle Co., Seattle, Wash., quoting on two cars today. Super Shingle Co., Everett, Wash., have inquiry from Guernsey Westbrook's local buyer for two cars and can make immediate shipment. Saginaw Timber Co., Aberdeen, Wash., and Seattle Cedar Lumber Manufacturing Co., Seattle, Wash., have eastern sales representatives who are known to Guernsey Westbrook who can ask them for quotation. Will advise if quotations result in orders.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BONE. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Has the Senator any statistics before him which show the number of persons who have, or may have, lost their jobs by reason of this importation of shingles?

Mr. BONE. I have some studies here. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to read them.

Mr. LUNDEEN. But will the figures be in the RECORD? Mr. BONE. I shall introduce, as a part of my remarks, these tables. I am not going to read them. They are quite lengthy.

Mr. LUNDEEN. But they will give us figures on that subject?

Mr. BONE. They will give a pretty enlightening picture of the whole situation.

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator will permit me, it seems to me that we should not be quite so solicitous about employing foreign labor when we have here in America unemployed persons to the tune of 12,000,000. It seems to me we ought first to look after our own people.

Mr. BONE. My whole effort in this presentation is to secure the work of producing shingles for American producers, workers on this side of the line, and not for Canadian shingle producers. The latter is what the present reciprocal agreement with Canada is doing. It is giving to the Canadian producers the whole business of producing red-cedar shingles. Many of the mills in Canada are employing Hindu and Chinese labor. With virtually all the barriers down, with no restriction whatever now under this new agreement, that stuff is flooding the United States market, and the American mills in my State are shutting down.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, we have some folks who seem to be more interested in the Hindus and the coolies, and so forth, than in their own people. I am glad to hear American sentiments voiced by the Senator from Washington. I should expect to hear them from him.

Mr. BONE. There is not anything astounding in some of the things we are doing. We apparently are more concerned about democracy abroad than about democracy at home in some of the things we are doing. We must not expect too much consistency.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BONE. I do.

Mr. REYNOLDS. What was the Senator's last remark?

Mr. BONE. I just observed, in passing, that at times it seems to me we are more concerned with preserving and fighting for democracy abroad than we are with preserving and fighting for it here at home. It may be a novel idea to express here, but I am of the opinion that there is something in the idea. It is worth dallying with, anyhow.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am also of that impression; and, as a matter of fact, I think we are more exercised about what is taking place in Europe today than are those who reside in

Mr. BONE. I am wholly constrained to agree with what the Senator has said and what the Senator from Minnesota has said—that as long as we have 10,000,000 unemployed persons in this country, and they remain unemployed, we had better concern ourselves with fighting for democracy here, or we may not have it if that condition continues.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In other words, the Senator would have us believe that our danger is from within, and not, as a matter of fact, from without. I quite agree with the Senator in that assumption.

Mr. BONE. I know of no more explosive force than hunger and the tribulations that come with enforced unemployment. That is social dynamite that cannot be trifled with. We had better be very certain that we set about to make democracy perfectly safe in this country before we concern ourselves with democracy in other countries.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator will recall with me that on March 4, when we had the honor and pleasure of hearing the eminent Chief Justice of the United States in his address to the Congress of the United States, he said, amongst other things: "And when the American people make up their minds to get something they usually succeed," or words to that effect.

Mr. BONE. I hope they will make up their minds to do something purposeful, and that they will not be driven by hunger and poverty to some expedient that is not purposeful and safe.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, will the Senator further vield?

I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I desire to say, if I may, that the sentiments expressed by the Senator from Washington with regard to the internal danger in this country from continued poverty and destitution and misery and malnutrition and lack of employment are exactly in line with my own belief and thoughts. He has expressed the matter in admirable fashion.

Mr. BONE. I do not want to continue a discussion that is a digression from what I am saying, but I doubt if there is in this body a man who has not listened to arguments with which he agreed that were predicated on the theory that the rise of Hitler to power, the rise of Mussolini to power, and the rise of the other dictatorships in Europe had their genesis in the wretchedness and poverty of the people. There never would have been a dictatorship if there had not been an economic break-down.

Mr. REYNOLDS. All of which was attributable to unemployment.

Mr. BONE. That is true. Hunger, misery, wretchedness, the very things that drive the people of European countries to do terrible things, may with equal facility drive the people of this country to do things which are not what they should be.

To get back to my discussion of the shingle business, I resume reading from my letter to the Secretary of State:

The net result of the invitation by Northwest shingle manufacturers to shingle dealers in the hurricane area to place their orders was the placing of orders for 10 cars.

Now, can it be positively stated by Mr. Hawkins, as he does on page 2 of his letter to Mr. Benfield, that a supply of Canadian shingles was needed during the hurricane to meet the demand, when the fact seems to be that the eastern shingle dealers did not order shingles from the Northwest in excess of 10 cars? I assume that the real test of whether or not enough shingles were available to meet the demand would have been to place the orders and then if they were not filled within a reasonable time it could properly be stated that our domestic shingle producers could not meet the demand.

My information is that the total potential production of red-cedar shingles in the United States per 300-day year is 7,595,000 squares as compared with actual production in 1938 of 5,964,136 squares, and in 1934, before the quota law was established, 3,239,758 squares.

I quote from a statement by Mr. D. M. Williams, manager of the United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry:

"There seems to be the belief in the State Department, that the "There seems to be the belief in the State Department, that the east-coast hurricane in 1938 created an emergency insofar as shingles were concerned. This definitely is not so. We believe that the complaint originated with one eastern wholesaler who prevailed on his Senator during the excitement of the moment, to make the complaint—claiming that 40 or 50 carloads of Canadian shingles were immediately available. Our mills at once asked for orders—and so far as we can ascertain, orders for only 10 cars were placed. The President had proof presented to him that domestic producers could supply all needs, and publicly announced to that effect. The incident was merely another example of the continuous effort of British Columbia producers to gain a further advantage in the United States market. It ill becomes the State Department to constantly state the trumped-up hurricane story as fact, when it was definitely disproved, and so publicized by the President. We would like to down that hurricane-emergency yarn once and for all."

Unless some further proof is forthcoming that the domestic shingle industry was unable to take care of the needs in the Northeast, it seems to me that this basis of insisting upon removing limitations upon shinge imports should be put aside and the whole problem reexamined.

I gather from your letter and from Mr. Hawkins' letter that you and he have in mind that there is not a great difference between the wage rates paid in the United States and in Canada in shingle

I quote from your letter of February 7:

1 quote from your letter of February 7:

"* * However, as I am sure you realize, the fact of the matter is that the shingle industry has enjoyed a substantial measure of protection under this administration, and will continue to do so under the terms of the new agreement with Canada, whereas for many years prior to 1934 shinges were permitted to be imported free of duty and without restriction."

I can well understand that those who are not in close touch with the shingle industry would fall to realize a fact of prepared.

I can well understand that those who are not in close touch with the shingle industry would fail to realize a fact of preponderant importance and that is that wage rates have risen substantially in the shingle industry in this country since 1932. This is a natural development, due to causes that I need not discuss here.

Prior to 1932, labor in the shingle industry in the United States was on approximately an equal status with similar labor in British Columbia. However, now the wage scale in the shingle industry in the United States is approximately 60 percent higher than in British Columbia. The same ratio of wage scales of the United States-British Columbia exists in the logging industry, which supplies the shingle industry with its raw product—cedar logs. To make this more evident, I give you here the average American wage scale for certain classifications of work in the shingle industry and the British Columbia scale, as supplied by the American Federation of Labor: Labor:

Classification	Average American wage scales (per hour)	Average British Co- lumbia wage scales (per hour)
Filer Filter Filter Millwright Engineer Fireman Cut-off Knee bolter Splitter Blockpilers Deck men Slip men Oilers Common labor Apprentices	$1.55 1.05 .95 .84 .71 .90 1.00 .85 .72 .75 .80 .73 .67½	$1.00 .75 .50 .50 .65 .60 .40 .45 .45 .40

You will note that the British Columbia scale gets down to 161/2 cents per hour for apprentices, while there are no apprentices employed in American mills.

I am informed by Mr. Williams that the difference in the wage scale that enters into the manufacture of a square of shingles on the United States side and on the British Columbia side is 65 cents per square. If this is true—and I think Mr. Williams' statement will stand investigation—it is obvious that a 25 cents per square duty, even if it applied to the entire amount of shingle imports, would not at all restrict the flow of Canadian shingles into this

If there are valid objections to a quota system, then why not apply an effective tariff on the entire amount of shingles imported? The State Department, in its agreement with Canada, has eliminated the quota and has not substituted anything of equivalent force. It was the will of Congress, as expressed in the quota law, that imports of shingles from Canada should be restricted, but the trade agreement has removed all actual restrictions. This is evidenced by the active operations of the Canadian millmen for taking over the entire United States business this year as soon as the trade treaty is ratified at Ottawa.

The United States mills could compete with Canadian mills only by radically reducing their wage scales. I feel sure that you would not suggest that this be done. The alternative to a sharp decrease in wages, both in the mills and in the logging industry, is going out of business.

out of business.

I am afraid that some negotiators of the trade treaty failed to realize that there is a life-and-death struggle for business going on between competing operators in British Columbia and in the United States. The trade treaty greatly strengthens the ability of the British Columbia operators to win this battle.

I note one more point in your letter that I think should be reconsidered, and that is to the effect that the imports will have a salutary effect on the price of wooden shingles; and that without these imports the market for wooden shingles would disappear, because the prices would rise too high. However, there is a guaranty against too great a rise in the price of shingles, and that guaranty is the price of the competing substitutes for wooden shingles.

I note that Mr. Hawkins appears solicitous for the welfare of the shingle operators in this country and says that he is doing them a lot of good by placing a loaded gun in the hands of their competitors in a foreign country; but with all due respects to Mr. Hawkins, the people in the shingle industry would be well pleased to take their chances in competition with other types of roofing domestically manufactured.

The consequences of the invalidation of the shingle-quota law

The consequences of the invalidation of the shingle-quota law are beginning to show up, as indicated in a letter from the Shingle Weavers' Union, No. 2576, of Aberdeen, Wash., which I quote in full: "Operation of the shingle mills of Grays Harbor for the week beginning February 5, 1939, is as follows (statistics based on the number of machines in production during full-time operation):

¹ This condition can be remedied by restoration of the 25-percent quota on shingle imports from Canada

I am not suggesting something new and abnormal, because this quota law was in effect before this trade agreement was thrust upon us.

I continue reading:

Last fall, before the news came out that the shingle quota would be eliminated, the mills were running almost to capacity.

To illustrate the difference between the conditions now and then, I quote from a letter from Arthur Brown, president, Shingle Weavers District Council of Washington and Oregon, dated at Tacoma, September 9, 1938:

September 9, 1938:

"In 1935 Senator Homer T. Bone gave unstintingly of his time and energy to secure legislation prohibiting Canada from shipping more than a specified quota of shingles across the border. This quota has been set at 25 percent of domestic consumption. In 1936 the Senator strengthened the quota law. This distinctive piece of legislation is responsible for present favorable conditions within the shingle industry. During 1938 shingle mills have been operating 98 percent of the time with a workweek of 36 hours, a 6-hour shift, and a wage scale of 92 cents per hour."

This same letter could be repeated today if it were not for the baneful influence of the agreement that has been negotiated with Canada.

In the light of the new facts that I have given you here, will you not review the agreement with regard to shingles and determine whether some better arrangement can be made?

Yours sincerely,

HOMER T. BONE.

Mr. WILEY. Was that letter written to the President? Mr. BONE. It was written to the Secertary of State by me on February 25, 1939.

Following up this letter, I wrote to the Secretary of State on February 28 calling to his attention a compilation of figures on the wages paid, respectively, in Canada and in the United States. I supplied the Secretary with tables showing the wages paid in each of seven British Columbia mills. The figures were gathered by the American Federation of Labor and supplied to me by Mr. D. M. Williams, secretary-manager of the United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry at Seattle.

I ask that this table be printed at this point as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it will be noted that in mill No. 1, 30 Chinese were employed and 17 whites; in mill No. 2, 30 Chinese and 40 whites; in mill No. 3, 37 Chinese and 22 whites; in mill No. 4, 49 Chinese and 50 whites; in mill No. 5, 35 Chinese and 30 whites; and in mill No. 6, 50 Chinese and 55 whites: while only one British Columbia mill employed no Chinese labor. But even the white labor received far less than the United States scale, the British Columbia scale for common labor being 40 cents and the United States union scale 871/2 cents. The disparity of cost between producing United States and British Columbia shingles is further emphasized in the scale for piece work. Mill No. 3, for instance, pays 17 to 22 cents per square for sawing and mill No. 5 pays 16 to 22 cents per square for sawing, while United States mills pay 24 to 30 cents per square for sawing.

At this point I ask that a statement by the United States red cedar shingle industry be incorporated in my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES RED CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY, INC., RELATING TO THE 1939 RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT WITH CANADA

The United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry, Inc., with its principal offices at Seattle, Wash., desires to present the following for your consideration, in connection with the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada.

The 1936 agreement provides for the free importation of shingles from Canada, but the United States reserved the right to limit importations of red cedar shingles to 25 percent of the domestic requirements. In accordance with this reservation, Congress provided in section 811 of the Revenue Act of 1936, for the imposition of the 25-percent limitation during the continuance of the 1936 agreement.

The 1939 agreement provides (paragraph 1760 of Schedule II) that shingles may be imported free, but reserves the right of the United States to impose a duty, not exceeding 25 cents per square, on red cedar shingles imported in excess of 30 percent of the domestic consumption.

Even before ratification of the new agreement by the Capadian comestic consumption.

Even before ratification of the new agreement by the Canadian Parliament, the threat of the impending change with regard to red cedar shingles has produced dire results for our industry. Imports of shingles in 28 days of January 1939 amounted to 303,675 squares. This is an increase of 60.5 percent over the average of the three January imports covered by the 1936 agreement. The figures are as follows:

January:	Squares
1936	153, 566
1937	168, 779
1938	229, 505
An average of	183, 950
January 1939	303, 675

January 1939 303,675
The immediate effect, however, was felt in November 1938, following the public announcement of the new agreement. The market broke approximately 17 percent, or 40 to 55 cents per square, and the combination of break in price and cancelation of orders caused a large percentage of mills to be shut down, thereby throwing many hundreds of men out of work and causing a confused situation for the manufacturers.

The next effect of the proposed agreement was vastly increased activity among Canadian mills, many of which (those having a sufficient log supply on hand) started running two shifts per day, 6 days per week, or 96 hours weekly, preparatory to dumping enormous quantities of red cedar shingles on the American market in the spring of 1939. As logs became available, other mills started up, and the first result is the large increase in imports, as indicated by the January figures.

The final effect will be a drastic reduction of our wage scale, or the virtual abandonment of the American market to the Canadians. Each year since 1933 has seen an increase in wages in the industry, the average wage in 1938 being 92.3 cents per hour. Since that year, 1933, the industry has become completely unionized and, therefore, individual bargaining is no longer available to the manufacturers in the United States, as it is to Canadian operators.

The United States wage average is approximately 35 cents per hour higher than the Canadian average, or, in percentage, our average is approximately 60 percent greater than the Canadian average.

Another important factor in establishing Canadian control of the Another important factor in establishing Canadian control of the American market is the cost of the raw product—cedar logs. Our cost has been $18 per thousand feet, whereas the Canadian manufacturer has been paying from $12 to $16. The lower log price in Canada, caused by a wage scale much inferior to the American loggers' scale, gives the Canadian shingle manufacturer a cost advantage of from 15 to 50 cents per square of manufacturer a cost advantage in the two items together—namely, labor cost and log cost—the Canadian mills enjoy a cost advantage of from 45 cents to 80 cents per square.

The final element of cost which may be compared is that of transportation of the finished product. The cedar-bearing section of Canada and that of the United States is approximately the same distance from the domestic market, and, therefore, there is parity in rail rates. The Canadians, however, enjoy an advantage in water shipments. According to law, we must use American bottoms at established rates, whereas the Canadian mills are free to use the ships of any nation and may drive bargains where possible.

From the foregoing it is evident:

The new agreement has created a competitive situation which has broken the market and caused a serious curtailment of

2. It has caused the import of an abnormal quantity of red-cedar shingles as compared with imports under the 1936 agreement. 3. It promotes labor disputes because the new condition makes necessary a substantial reduction in wages and an increase in hours

CONCLUSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES RED-CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY

CONCLUSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES RED-CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY
That action be taken under paragraph (b), article X, of the Canadian trade agreement, and a proposal be made to revise paragraph 1760 to provide for the right to limit the total quantity of red-cedar shingles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during any given half of any calendar year, to a quantity not exceeding 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports of such shingles during the preceding half year, and for the right to impose an ad valorem duty of 25 percent on all red-cedar shingles imported into the United States in excess of the 25-percent quota aforesaid.
We believe the foregoing restriction would be fair to the red-

25-percent quota aforesaid.

We believe the foregoing restriction would be fair to the redcedar shingle industry in the United States and in Canada and to the domestic market. Twenty-five percent of the American market gives to Canada the same proportion of our shingle market it enjoyed during the years when manufacturing costs were on a parity. An ad valorem customs duty of 25 percent will amount to sufficient to reasonably equalize costs, thereby giving the domestic market red-cedar shingles produced under competive conditions and in amounts in accordance with the demand.

We are attaching bereto a summary of facts in support of the

We are attaching hereto a summary of facts in support of the proposed change together with charts on the wage situation in the United States and in Canada.

UNITED STATES RED CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY, INC., By DAVID M. WILLIAMS, Secretary-Manager.

SUPPORTING FACTS FOR PROPOSAL TO REVISE CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

- 1. The mill price of shingles dropped approximately 50 cents per square immediately following announcement of the Canadian trade agreement.
- 2. Canadian red-cedar shingle mills which have logs available have been running two 8-hour shifts per day, 6 days per week, or 96 hours weekly, since January 1, 1939, preparatory to dumping enormous quantities of red-cedar shingles on the American market in the spring. Other Canadian mills plan to run double shifts as soon as they can get a sufficient supply of logs in the spring.

 3. Imports in January 1939 were 60.5 percent greater than the average of the three identical months under the old agreement:

January:	Squares
1936	153, 566
1937	168, 779
1938	229, 505
Average	183, 950
January 1939	303, 675

4. The wage differential between American and Canadian mills is more than 30 cents per hour. (See charts attached hereto.)

5. The price of raw material, cedar logs, in the United States is $18 per thousand feet, or $1.50 per square of manufactured shingles, compared to $12 to $16 per thousand feet, or $1 to $1.35 per square of manufactured shingles in Canada.

of manufactured shingles in Canada.

6. The two items, labor and logs, constitute a cost advantage to the Canadians of from 45 to 80 cents per square.

7. American mills have adequate machinery and labor to supply the entire American market. If there had been no imports of shingles during the past 3 years, the total amount of wages received by American workingmen in the industry would have been increased 42.6 percent in 1936, 36.6 percent in 1937, and 34.4 percent in 1938.

8. If American mills had supplied the entire United States market, the entire industry would have been employed 63 additional days in 1936; 71 additional days in 1937; 64 additional days in 1938.

9. Under the 1936 trade agreement, 25 percent of the American market gave the Canadians the same proportion of our shingle consumption they enjoyed during many years of wage parity as found by the Tariff Commission in their 1934 report on the red cedar shingle industry.

10. An ad valorem duty of 25 percent would amount to from 60 cedar shingle industry.

10. An ad valorem duty of 25 percent would amount to from 60 to 70 cents per square. This would enable the American producer to maintain present hours and wage scale and compete with Canadian shingles or imports over a 25-percent quota, yet Canadian shingles could always be imported.

11. A change in this part of the agreement with Canada will not involve any other government, as red-cedar shingles are not exported from the United States and are only imported from Canada.

12. American mills operate on a 6-hour day, 6-day-week schedule, whereas Canadian mills work 8 hours per day, 6 days a week.

13. Present conditions necessitate protection for American mills, or a reduction of 50 percent in wages and an increase in hours of work.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think most Senators will agree that a clear case has been made for a change in the reciprocal-trade agreement so far as shingles are concerned. The red-cedar shingle industry proposed that the President give notice to Canada under paragraph (C) article 10, of the Canadian trade agreements, signed November 17, 1938, to revise paragraph 1760 as follows:

Provide for a reservation of the right to limit the total quantity of red-cedar shingles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during any given half of any calendar year, to a quantity not exceeding 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports of such shingles during the preceding half year, and for the right to impose an ad valorem duty of 25 percent on all red-cedar shingles imported into the United States in excess of 25 percent quota aforesaid. States in excess of 25 percent quota aforesaid.

Enactment of this provision would carry out the fixed policy of Congress, as expressed in the Domestic Origins Act-act of March 3, 1875, 18 Statutes 455, and act of March 3, 1933, 47 Statutes 1520. The Congress expressed as its policy that domestic materials should be used on construction of all public improvements.

The language used for instance is that "every contract for the construction, alteration, or repair of any public building or public work in the United States growing out of an appropriation heretofore made or hereafter to be made shall contain a provision that in the performance of the work the contractor, subcontractors, material men, or suppliers shall use only such unmanufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been mined or produced in the United States, and only such manufactured articles, materials, and supplies as have been manufactured in the United States substantially all from articles, materials, or supplies, mined, produced, or manufactured, as the case may be, in the United States." This gives the substance of the act and there are a few exceptions provided.

It appears that the definite purpose of the Congress was to preserve the American market for American-produced goods so far as possible. The reciprocal-trade treaty with Canada, however, definitely gives over a large part of the American market for shingles to the Canadian producer, and I wish to emphasize that this means that perhaps the entire market for shingles produced in this country may be lost, because we do not export shingles, so the domestic market is the only market we have. The United States consumes most of the red-cedar shingles that are produced anywhere.

It is not a case of us trying to protect the foreign market, trying to compete outside; we are trying to protect the only market for red-cedar shingles, which is the domestic market.

At this point I should like to place in the RECORD as part of my remarks brief extracts from letters which have been received from labor organizations and from business groups in the Pacific Northwest. These clearly show how seriously the reciprocal-trade treaty will affect their business, in their opinions, and they are the best qualified to know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Letter, May 19, 1938, R. M. Ingram, secretary, E. C. Miller Cedar Lumber Co., Aberdeen, Wash.: "Urge that no change be permitted in the red-cedar shingle import quota, and that if at all possible the 1935 trade agreement, as far as red-cedar shingles are concerned, be continued so that the 1936 act of Congress may remain in force and the operation of the limitation continue without interruption.

Letter, October 12, 1938, T. E. Heppenstall, Long-Bell Lumber Co., Longview, Wash.: "We are writing to urge that this quota arrange-ment be continued as it now stands."

Letter, October 5, 1938, Charles A. Turner, chairman, employment committee, Fraternal Order of Eagles, Everett, Wash.: "Vigorously protesting Senator Lonergan's attempt to obtain additional Canadian-made shingles over the quota due to alleged inability to obtain American-made shingles. This claim of inability of American shingle mills to meet the demand is an absolute falsehood."

Letter, June 13, 1938, Frank H. Praena, Security-First National Bank, Seattle, Wash.: "Inasmuch as the future of all individuals in this territory and of the territory itself can be measured by the maintenance of its trade and industry. Letter, December 8, 1937, J. W. Lewis, general manager, Willapa Harbor Lumber Mills, Raymond, Wash.: " * * * request that if any change at all is contemplated in the shingle quota that it be a reduction of the percentage from 25 to 20 percent of the American market."

Letter, December 17, 1937, United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry, Inc., Seattle, Wash.: "We have compiled a mass of evidence to show that if 25 percent of the American market was a fair allocation to the British Columbia shingle manufacturers in 1934 (that was the recommendation of the United States Tariff Commission), that percentage is now far too high and the quota should not be over 20 percent."

Letter, December 15, 1937, A. L. Raught, Jr., manager, Weyerhaeuser Timber Co., Longview, Wash.: "Most certainly the shingle quota ought not to be considered at all in connection with any negotiations with Canada but should be allowed to continue in effect without change."

Letter, December 8, 1937, William Leybold, vice president, Leybold-Smith Shingle Co., Tacoma, Wash.: "Please write to the State Department and demand that if any change at all in the shingle quota is considered, that it consist of a reduction of the percentage from 25 to 20 percent of the American market."

Letter, December 14, 1937, E. G. Griggs, St. Paul & Tacoma Lumber Co., Tacoma, Wash.: "Our request, in brief, is that you write the State Department and demand, first, that if the shingle-quota provision of the present Canadian treaty is opened up, that the quota be reduced from 25- to 20-percent basis."

Letter, December 6, 1937, C. H. Kreinembaum, Simpson Logging Co., Shelton, Wash.: "If the shingle section of the Canadian Trade Treaty is to be opened, we would like to have you keep in mind the above-mentioned agreement between the Canadian and American manufacturers, and endeavor to reestablish the 20-percent limitation instead of the present 25 percent."

Letter, December 6, 1937, H. J. Bratlie, Bratlie Bros. Mill Co., Ridgefield, Wash.: "A matter of great importance to the United States shingle industry is a reduction in the quota of Canadian importations from the present 25 percent to 20 percent."

Letter, December 6, 1937, T. E. Heppenstall, Long-Bell Lumber Co., Longview, Wash.: "We do feel that some relief could be obtained immediately by reducing the shingle quota from a 25-percent to 20 percent basis."

Letter, December 7, 1937, C. A. Peters, Washington Shingle Co., Anacortes, Wash.: "We don't need to tell you what the quota means to our mills and mill employees. Please do not allow our State Department to let the shingle quota be revised at all. And if they do succeed in getting shingle imports considered when the treaties are being made, please fight for us and insist that, if there is any change at all, that change will be a reduction in the amount of British Columbia shingles. The quota should be reduced so that they get only 20 percent of the American shingle business."

Letter, December 2, 1937, W. H. Dole, secretary, Aloha Lumber Co., Aloha, Wash.: "We will appreciate your continued vigilance looking toward giving the mills of Washington and Oregon a fair show with Canadian competition, and hope that if the matter is reopened the Canadian quota can be reduced to at least 20 percent."

Letter, December 2, 1937, Dale Craft, Royal Shingle Co., Whites, Wash.: "As the Canadian mills are operating under a much lower wage scale and a 48-hour workweek, it would be disastrous to the American shingle industry should it be further handicapped by an

Letter, December 3, 1937, K. F. Richards, Pacific States Lumber Co., Tacoma, Wash.: "* * * it is quite essential that you take up with the State Department the necessity of reducing the quota from 25 percent to a 20-percent basis, in addition to having the quota applied on a monthly basis to avoid present tendencies of flooding the market with Canadian shingles * * *."

Letter, December 3, 1937, Charles Worrell, Blue Ribbon Sales Co., Kalama, Wash.: "We believe it would be a grave economic mistake to remove this import quota and, in our opinion, would be protecting United States labor and industry to lower it to 20 percent of consumption."

Letter, December 3, 1937, J. Schwarz, secretary, Crescent Lumber Co., Kelso, Wash.: "We would appreciate it if you would write the State Department that if any changes are to be made in the present shingle quota it should be a reduction from 25 to 20 percent."

Letter, December 3, 1937, R. D. Mackie, Mackie Mill Co., Markham, Wash.: "We therefore urge you to use all possible efforts to retain the present trade treaty provisions, and whenever it seems possible to make the attempt to try and get the percentage of allowable imports set at 20 percent or less to meet present-day conditions."

Letter, December 3, 1937, A. E. Case, Case Cedar & Shingle Co., Raymond, Wash.: "We feel that you should write the State Department and, if there is any change contemplated in the shingle quota, it should be reduced from the 25 percent now in effect to 20 percent."

Letter, December 6, 1937, A. W. Letter, November 29, 1937, A. H. Brandis, North Western Logging Co., Hoquiam, Wash: "* * do all you can to see that the quota basis for Canada is reduced, or at least maintained. A 20-percent quota would be much more fair than the present 25-percent guota."

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, some question will be raised whether Congress by statute can change a reciprocal-trade agreement. I am prepared to discuss that if necessary. It is not likely that it can be successfully contended that these agreements have the sanctity of treaties inasmuch as they do not require ratification by the Senate. Even a treaty may be abrogated by act of Congress, since a treaty under the Constitution is placed on the same footing as a statute. Since this is true of a treaty, it necessarily follows that the Congress can set aside any agreement of a lesser dignity.

I would not suggest that the United States make "scraps of paper" of its treaties as many foreign nations do, but I am pointing out that the Congress has that power if it desires to exercise it; and in the case of the trade agreements no such moral question is involved. There is no guaranty, specific or implied, in the trade agreements that Congress will withhold any legislation that might in any way impair or change those agreements. If proponents of the legislation take the view that Congress is under a moral obligation not to enact legislation inconsistent with the agreements, they would seem to be placed in a dilemma where they insist that the agreements are not treaties, hence do not require Senate ratification, and at the same time they are not subject to termination at the will of the Congress as executive agreements in this field have heretofore always been thought to be.

PRINTING OF PROCEEDINGS COMMEMORATING ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST CONGRESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair) laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 12), which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the proceedings at the joint session of the two Houses of Congress held in the House of Representatives on Saturday, March 4, 1939, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the commencement of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, together with such additional matter as the joint committee on arrangements in charge of these ceremonies may deem fitting and appropriate in connection with this historical event, be printed, with illustrations, as a document; and that 1,000,000 additional copies be printed, of which 200,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 800,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the concurrent resolution be considered and acted upon at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was considered and agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an order which was made at my request on March 6, 1939, for the printing as a Senate document of the proceedings of the joint meeting of the two Houses be rescinded, in view of the adoption of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be rescinded.

LOANS UNDER THE VARIOUS ACTS OF CONGRESS TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, events are moving rapidly in Europe. I wish to revert briefly to a matter which seems to have been overlooked; that is the Czechoslovakian debt accrued under the various acts of Congress.

The total principal amount of obligations, received under Liberty Bond Acts of November 15, 1922, is $61,974,041.10.

Total principal obligations received for surplus supplies sold on credit under act of July 9, 1918, $20,604,302.49.

Total principal amount of obligations received for relief supplies furnished on credit under act of February 25, 1919, $6,428,089.19.

HUGE SUMS THROWN AWAY TO FOREIGNERS

Total principal amount of obligations received for relief supplies furnished on credit under act of March 30, 1920, $2,873,238.25.

A total of $91,879,671.03.

By the act of February 9, 1922, Congress created the World War Foreign Debt Commission, consisting of five members, with authority to refund or convert and extend the time of any obligation of any foreign government into bonds or other obligations of such foreign governments in substitution for the bonds or other obligations of such governments now or hereafter held by the United States. The settlements were made on the basis of the estimated ability of the debtors to pay. The amount due was thus limited and reduced by the estimated ability to pay.

FOREIGN DEBTS SCALED DOWN

In the case of Czechoslovakia, it was finally agreed to make the settlement as of June 15, 1925, to compute the accrued and unpaid interest on the post-armistice debt at 41/4 percent up to December 15, 1922, add the amount thereof to the principal and compute interest at 3 percent per annum on the total amount then due up to June 15, 1925.

WHERE IS THE MONEY NOW?

There were some differences between the records of the Czechoslovak Government and the War Department with respect to the purchase of surplus war material on credit. In order not to delay the settlement it was agreed that a reduction would be made of the accrued and unpaid interest and a settlement made in the sum of $115,000,000.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY MILLION DOLLARS NEEDED FOR P. W. A.

This debt, Mr. President, represents money or supplies advanced by the American people, with interest thereon, at a low rate, and totals $312,811,000. We are talking about giving the W. P. A. $150,000,000. I am in favor of that amount being granted. It has been asked for by the Chief Executive of this great Nation. The people concerned need employment. They are hungry, they are destitute, many of them are homeless. But here, Mr. President, is a figure of $312,811,000, an amount which might as well eventually be thrown into the ocean, so far as Uncle Sam is concerned, and I wonder where the gentlemen are, and what answer they would make with respect to the money loaned to the Czechoslovakian Government. I opposed that policy 22 years ago, and I opposed the policy of lending this money to any and to all foreign governments involved in the World War.

WE SHOULD HAVE INVESTED THAT MONEY IN AMERICA

I was in favor of expending the money here in America, under our own flag, and for our own people. But we insisted on going over to Pittsburgh and cutting up pieces of Europe and putting them together, and in the central part of Europe we constructed a nation—that was done in Pittsburgh and then we boxed our ideas up, shipped them over, and inflicted them upon Europe and put our label on it all, and they had to take it as it came to them. We were the judge and the jury and policeman. I said then that that nation would never live, that it was a nation with feet of clay, that it would fall apart, that it was not a natural group of people who would live together through history, and we certainly have discovered that that is true. The various states have now fallen apart.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. While the Senator is talking about the debt problem, does he have any idea that the loan to Czechoslovakia, which has now, I think, in great measure disappeared, was any worse loan than the loan to France, the loan to England, or the loan to Italy, or the various extensions of credit we made to Germany? Why was the loan to Czechoslovakia a worse loan than the others? Why is the Czecloslovakian loan a worse loan today than the loans, very much larger loans, which we have outstanding to the so-called great democracies and the so-called dictatorships, to France and Great Britian, to Italy and Germany?

WE SHOULD NEVER HAVE MADE ANY OF THESE FOREIGN LOANS

Mr. LUNDEEN. I think the question of the Senator from Missouri answers itself. Of course, none of these loans should have been made. We loaned some thirty or forty million dollars to Austria. Where is that money now? The American people need that money. We need it for our own people, our own institutions, and our own Government.

FARMERS AND LABOR CREATED THIS VAST FUND OF WEALTH

I opposed the policy of loaning and squandering American money that had to be dug out of the earth by the farmers and the miners of America. In the sweat of their brows they produced that money and, like the prodigal son, we went abroad over the earth and threw it right and left. I opposed that policy and I oppose it now. However, I see some indication of the prodigal son returning to the home of the fathers and the founders, and I thank God for that. Perhaps, after we have burned our fingers long enough, we will become wholly American in spirit and think of our own

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Naturally I am very much interested in what the Senator has to say. As the Senator stated at the outset, the President is now calling upon the Congress of the United States to make an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the benefit of the unfortunate persons on the rolls of the W. P. A. We Americans are desirous of providing for our National Treasury funds sufficient to meet our demands at home. It just occurred to me to ask the Senator whether or not he is in a position to provide the Senate with information pertaining to the total amount of money due the United States from all the countries in the world. I doubt whether the Senator has that information at the present time.

I think such information would be very interesting to the Members of this body. As I stated, I doubt whether the Senator has that information at his fingertips at the present time, but I thought perhaps he could give some general information on that question.

DEBT OF $25,000,000,000 AND $50,000,000,000 PLUS, AND WHERE IS THE MONEY NOW?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the Senator that my offhand recollection is that the debt, over the 62-year period, was approximately $25,000,000,000, and that it was canceled to the extent of half. According to a speech made upon this floor by former Senator Howell, of Nebraska, we canceled $12,087,667,000.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I assume the Senator has in mind the indebtedness of the allied nations to the United States at the close of the World War.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes; and subsequent to the World War we loaned them further sums. The total amount was cut approximately in half.

ENOUGH MONEY TO PAY ALL OUR REAL-ESTATE MORTGAGES

Mr. REYNOLDS. It was reduced 50 percent. My recollection in that regard is that the specific debt of the Allies themselves to the Government of the United States, after the 50-percent reduction, has been estimated at $11,000,-

Mr. LUNDEEN. Thereabouts. Mr. REYNOLDS. I was speaking of the sums due the United States in addition to the $11,000,000,000, recalling, as I do, that loans have been made to European powers, and credits have been extended to virtually every single one of the republics to the south of us, that is to say, in South and Central America and the West Indies.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am very much interested in the Senator's statement. We remember the able discussion in the Senate concerning loans to Brazil and other governments. We have in mind particularly the loan to Brazil, which, I think, is $120,000,000. The able Senator stated that part of that sum was to be used to pay off Brazil's obligations to Great Britain. Great Britain is very limited in funds and resources, having only about one-third of the earth-600,-000,000 people—and producing five times the gold we produce in the United States, producing in South Africa an amount equal to four times our gold production, and producing in Canada an amount equal to our production. Great Britain has no money, so we lend Brazil money so that Brazil can pay Great Britain. Of course, I need not mention the diamond mines of the Boer republics put down in a sea of blood to fill the coffers of the British Empire.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the able Senator from Missouri. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I do not wish to interrupt the trend of the Senator's argument; but when we begin to talk about the debt settlements, it seems to me we should remember that Great Britain and France were the only nations in the world which were willing to pay in any degree whatever their obligations to us incurred during the war. I hold no brief whatever for the so-called democracies of Great Britain and France; but they were the only nations in the world that were willing to pay in any degree. Does not the Senator remember that after Great Britain had agreed to settle with the United States on a basis somewhere between 75 and 80 cents on the dollar, the United States Government deliberately entered into an agreement with Italy, then under the dictatorship of Mussolini, by which we settled with Italy for less than 20 cents on the dollar?

I hold no brief whatever for either Great Britain or France, or for anybody else in the European melee. However, I feel that Americans should remember that Great Britain negotiated an agreement to settle on a basis somewhere between 75 and 80 cents on the dollar. France made an agreement to settle on a basis somewhere between 40 and 45 cents on the dollar. Thereafter the United States deliberately entered into an agreement with the dictatorship of Mussolini for a settlement on the basis of less than 20 cents on the dollar. So, when the Senator says that all these nations owe us money, a statement in which I fully agree, I think it is fair to say that the United States, by making a better settlement with the dictatorship of Mussolini than it made with the Governments of France and Great Britain, deliberately contributed to the present European situation.

NEGOTIATIONS ALL ENDED IN VAST CONCESSIONS TO EUROPE AT THE EXPENSE OF OUR OWN TAXPAYERS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator-and I am merely making this statement in the form of an inquiry as a result of the statement made by the Senator from Missourithat I was under the impression that there were negotiations with Great Britain for a settlement on a basis between 75 and 80 percent. My recollection is that there were negotiations with France on the basis of 38 or 40 percent, and with Italy on the basis of approximately 20 percent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Each of those settlements was a separate subject of very intense debate in both the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States; and the Italian settlement was the subject of one of the most virulent debates that ever took place in this body or the House of Representatives. The settlements were all enacted into law only by virtue of the approval by the American Congress of definite agreements made with the various

I return to the same statement with which I started, that Great Britain made the first agreement, in which she deliberately bound herself to pay approximately 80 percent of her obligations to us. Naturally, when the United States made different agreements with other nations, running down to less than 20 percent with Italy, Great Britain did not feel the same bond of moral obligation which she had originally

GREAT BRITAIN AIDED AT THE EXPENSE OF AMERICAN TAXPAYERS

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the Senator. However, I call the able Senator's attention to the fact that Great Britain—this great, powerful empire-did receive a very substantial reduction, and I can see no good reason for complaint of the

Mr. REYNOLDS. I likewise am very much obliged to the Senator for the information.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In that connection, let me say that if my recollection serves me correctly, we refunded and settled with Mussolini at an interest rate of about one-tenth of 1 percent for the first 10 years. At the rate of one-tenth of 1 percent, I would imagine that we were setting Mussolini up in business. If an American desires to build a house, he cannot obtain money for one-tenth of 1 percent. An American is out of luck; but Mussolini can obtain money at one-tenth of 1 percent from our world savers. It is about time we turned our minds and attention to the United States.

I now wish to continue and show that up to January 31. 1938, the United States Government received a total payment from the Government of Czechoslovakia of $20,134,000. The total indebtedness of the Government of Czechoslovakia to the United States as of January 31, 1938, was $165,241,000. That is the figure we see referred to in the press. That figure is more than $15,000,000 in excess of the figure we ask for the W. P. A.

The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, now so ably presiding over the Senate, yesterday battled nobly for socialized medicine in the small amount of $5,000,000. Now, this $15,000,000 is three times that sum. So this debt I now speak of, if paid, would take care of our W. P. A. problem, and three times the amount the Senator from Wisconsin asked for within 24 hours. Sir, what manner of men permit foreign interests to triumph over our own? As nearly as I can determine, the money is thrown into the ocean of international finance, and is lost overboard by our internationally minded financiers, who have no country, no flag, and no patriotism, and who worship only one god, the god of gold. These financiers receive vast commissions on their international transactions. If the Government loses, they can collect their private loans. I do not wish to go into that phase of it at this time.

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE, SR., HEAD AND SHOULDERS ABOVE OUR WORLD

In the case of Czechoslovakia, the amount not paid in this particular debacle, in accordance with the agreement, up to January 31, 1938, is $16,315,000. These statistics are from the Treasury Department, office of Commissioner of Accounts and Deposits, as of January 31, 1938. No wonder the little giant from Wisconsin, Robert M. La Follette, Sr., battled his life away against this suicidal, un-American policy, a policy which, if long continued, will lead us into abysmal disaster.

We should bear in mind several things. One of them is that when a refunding agreement is not lived up to, in my humble opinion, we revert to the original amount. I think the American people will hear much about that question in future years.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am just wondering, if the Senator will pardon me, what is the status of that settlement. Upon what basis was the settlement made? And was the basis upon which it was made such that the original amount becomes due in case the reduced, agreed-upon amount is not liquidated in accordance with the agreement? We are now back to the original amount due before the refunding.

Mr. LUNDEEN. In my humble opinion, it reverts to the original amounts which were due, and that is the amount that the loans are costing the American public-the principal of the bonds sold and the interest paid. I have not been able to secure the statistics on that subject all the way through, but it is my belief-and I am willing to be corrected by Senators-that it will exceed $50,000,000,000 when it is figured up.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Certainly. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What difference does it make whether we have a claim for 25 cents or a claim for $25,000,-000,000 if we can not collect even 1 cent on the claim?

I once heard of an old colored man who said he would rather have part of something than all of nothing. [Laughter.] That was the basis upon which this settlement was made with the various countries. The countries have not carried out in good faith the settlement which was made; but does not the Senator believe it is true that at the end of the war the United States, being then the greatest creditor nation in the world, deliberately pursued a war of economic aggression against every other country in the world? Having possession of the greatest gold supply in the world, we deliberately collected nearly all the gold in the world, and, while properly demanding payment in full of the debts incurred with us by other nations, we deliberately erected tariff walls and economic barriers by which we prevented them from paying us in the only medium in which they could pay us, which was in goods and commodities.

Mr. President, I feel very strongly in sympathy with the position of the Senator about the debts owed to us by other nations; but in all fairness to the other nations I must say that the United States has deliberately pursued a policy which prevented them from having any opportunity to pay the debts. I cannot bring myself to argue in favor of foreign

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. If the Senator from North Carolina will withhold his interruption for a moment. I should like to reply to the Senator from Missouri; and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

I have great respect for the judgment of the able Senator from Missouri; but I cannot agree with those who adopt the philosophy of the colored philosopher that "a little of something is better than all of nothing," or whatever it was. I prefer to follow the philosophy of Andrew Jackson in the settlement of the French war debt, to which I have frequently referred, which he collected in full as President of the United States from the French when they had refused to pay year after year for 25 years. That old warrier—true, red-blooded American that he was—stated to the French Government that if they did not pay the debt he would haul down the flag of France over the islands of the West Indies and take possession of them-that he would seize them-in addition to the gold and collaterals and papers of French citizens on deposit in American financial institutions, and permit me to say further I cannot bring myself to argue in favor of foreign

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I have very carefully read, not once but many times, all the diplomatic correspondence in connection with the collection of the French debt, and in all of that correspondence I have not been able to find any suggestion that President Jackson ever informed the French or informed anybody else that he intended to take possession of the French islands in the Western Hemisphere. If the Senator from Minnesota has any such information as that, I think it would be very interesting to have it pointed

Mr. LUNDEEN. Here is the information-page 5511, June 9, 1933, Congressional Record, Seventy-third Congress, first session, volume 77, part 6-and I am inserting this speech as part of my remarks. It is entitled "Andrew Jackson, American, and the French Debt." Failure of France to pay America installments due on World War and post World War debts recalls stern, successful measures taken by "Old Hickory":

ANDREW JACKSON, AMERICAN, AND THE FRENCH DEBT—FAILURE OF FRANCE TO PAY AMERICA INSTALLMENTS DUE ON WORLD WAR AND POST WORLD WAR DEBTS RECALLS STERN, SUCCESSFUL MEASURES TAKEN BY "HICKORY"

Mr. Lundeen. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the gentleman is recognized for 1 minute.

There was no objection.

Mr. Lundeen. Mr. Speaker, there has been a great deal of discussion about how to handle our foreign debts—the French debts and other debts. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks to show the wonderful statesmanlike manner in which

Andrew Jackson, a real fighting American and a great Democrat, handled a similar situation in his time. [Applause.]

The Speaker pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. Lundeen. Mr. Speaker, between the years 1800–1817 a series of unprovoked aggressions upon our commerce was authorized and sanctioned by the Government of France, most of which occurred during the time that Napoleon was conducting his many wars, and during the time that Napoleon was conducting his many wars, and particularly his wars against England. There is a striking parallel between the aggressions on our commerce at that time and the aggressions committed on our commerce by the contending parties in 1914, 1915, 1916, and 1917 during the World War, the only difference being a matter of degree, and the fact that lives were lost by reason of the aggressions during this last war.

Our Government during this terrific struggle between the Government of France, headed by Napoleon, and the other European countries, took the attitude that any damage to our commerce or injury that we received by reason of said war could be adjusted after the war was over. As a result, at the conclusion of these wars our Government insisted that the French Government pay for these wrongs perpetrated upon our commerce: and after considerable our Government insisted that the French Government pay for these wrongs perpetrated upon our commerce; and after considerable negotiations a treaty between our Government and the French Government was concluded and signed on the 4th day of July 1831, by which it was stipulated and set forth, as stated in President Jackson's message to Congress, December 1, 1834, that—

"The French Government, in order to liberate itself from all reclamations preferred against it by citizens of the United States for unlawful seizures, captures, sequestrations, confiscations, or destruction of their vessels, cargoes, or other property, engages to pay a sum of 25,000,000 francs to the United States, who shall distribute it among those entitled, in the manner and according to the rules it shall determine."

According to this treaty the French Government was to pay this 25,000,000 francs in six annual installments of 4,166,666 francs and 66 centimes each—

66 centimes each-

"The first installment to be paid at the expiration of 1 year next following the exchange of the ratification of this convention, and the others at successive intervals of a year, one after another, till the whole shall be paid. To the amount of each of the said installments shall be added interest at 4 percent theretill the whole shall be paid. To the amount of each of the said installments shall be added interest at 4 percent thereupon" * * *.

This treaty was duly ratified by both parties, and the ratification was exchanged at the city of Washington on February 2, 1832.

Jackson in his message goes on to say:

"No legislative provision has been made by France for the execution of this treaty, either as it respects the indemnity to be paid or the commercial benefits to be secured to the United States.

* * * Advice of the exchange of ratifications reached Paris prior to April 8, 1832. The French Chambers were then sitting, and continued in session until the 21st of that month, and although one installment of the indemnity was payable on February 2, 1833, 1 year after the exchange of ratifications, no application was made to the Chambers for the required appropriation; and in consequence of no appropriation having then been made, the draft of the United States Government for that installment was dishonored by the Minister of France, and the United States thereby involved in much controversy.

"The next session of the Chambers commenced on November 19, 1832, and continued until April 25, 1833. Notwithstanding the omission to pay the first installment had been the subject of earnest remonstrance on our part, the treaty with the United States and a bill making the necessary appropriations to execute it were not laid before the Chamber of Deputites until April 6, nearly 5 months after its meeting, and only 19 days before the close of the session. The bill was read and referred to a committee, but there was no further action upon it.

"The next session of the Chambers commenced on April 26, 1833, and continued until June 26 following. A new bill was introduced on June 11, but nothing important was done in relation to it during the session.

In the month of April 1834, nearly 3 years after the signature of the treaty, the final action of the French Chambers upon the bill to carry the treaty into effect was obtained, and resulte of the treaty, the mai action of the French Champers upon the bill to carry the treaty into effect was obtained, and resulted in a refusal of the necessary appropriations. * * * * * * The refusal to vote the appropriation, the news of which was received from our Minister in Paris about the 15th day of May, last (1834), might have been considered the final determination of the French Government not to execute the stipulations of the treaty, and would have justified an immediate communication of the facts to Congress with a recommendation of such ultimate the facts to Congress, with a recommendation of such ultimate measures as the interest and honor of the United States might seem to require. But with the news of the refusal of the Chamseem to require. But with the news of the refusal of the Chambers to make the appropriation were conveyed the regrets of the King and a declaration that a national vessel should be forthwith sent out with instructions to the French Minister to give the most ample explanations of the past and the strongest assurances for the future. After a long passage the promised despatch vessel arrived. The pledges given by the French Minister upon receipt of his instructions were that as soon after the election of the new members as the charter would permit the legislative chambers of France should be called together and the proposition for an appropriation laid before them; that all the constitutional powers of the King and his cabinet should be exerted to accomplish the object; and that the result should be made known early enough to be communicated to Congress at the commencement of the present session.

The French Government of 1834 had the decency to apologize for its failure to pay an obligation.

Andrew Jackson, relying upon these pledges, did not communicate the above facts to Congress, relying as he did, upon the assurances of the French Government. In this message of December 1, 1834, Andrew Jackson goes on to say:

"I regret to say that the pledges made through the Minister of France have not been redeemed. The new Chambers met on July 31 last, and although the subject of fulfilling treaties was alluded to in the speech from the throne, no attempt was made by the King or his cabinet to procure an appropriation to carry it into execution "

Andrew Jackson then makes this emphatic assertion:

Andrew Jackson then makes this emphatic assertion:

"The idea of acquiescing in the refusal to execute the treaty will not, I am confident, be for a moment entertained by any branch of this Government, and further negotiation upon the subject is equally out of question."

And then Andrew Jackson goes on to say:

"Our institutions are essentially pacific. Peace and friendly intercourse with all nations are as much the desire of our Government as they are the interest of our people. But these objects are not to be permanently secured by surrendering the rights of our citizens or permitting solemn treaties for their indemnity, in cases of flagrant wrong, to be abrogated or set aside."

Andrew Jackson was not a man who indulged in fine speech, but when he was through speaking no one could doubt the meaning

Andrew Jackson was not a man who indulged in fine speech, but when he was through speaking no one could doubt the meaning of his words. For example, he goes on to say:

"There is but one point in the controversy, and upon that the whole civilized world must pronounce France to be in the wrong. We insist that she shall pay us a sum of money which she has acknowledged to be due, and of the justice of this demand there can be but one opinion among mankind."

And a few sentences later in his message he said:

"It is my conviction that the United States ought to insist on a prompt execution of the treaty, and in case it be refused or longer delayed, take redress into their own hands. After the delay on the part of France of a quarter of a century in acknowledging these claims by treaty, it is not to be tolerated that another quarter of a century is to be wasted in negotiating about the payment. The laws of nations provide a remedy for such occasions. It is a well-settled principle of the International Code that where one nation owes another a liquidated debt which it refuses or neglects to pay, the aggrieved party may seize on the property belonging to the other, its citizens, or subjects sufficient to pay the debt without giving just cause of war. This remedy has been repeatedly resorted to and recently by France herself toward Portugal, under circumstances less unquestionable."

And then listen to the American attitude of a real American when he says:

"Since France, in violation of the pledges given through her Min-when he says:

"Since France, in violation of the pledges given through her Minister here, has delayed her final action so long that her decision will not, probably, be known in time to be communicated to this Congress, I recommend that a law be passed authorizing reprisals upon French property in case provision shall not be made for the payment of the debt at the approaching session of the French Chambers. Such a measure ought not to be considered by France as a menace. Her pride and power are too well known to expect anything from her fears and preclude the necessity of a declaration that nothing partaking of the character of intimidation is intended by us. She ought to look upon it as the evidence only of an infexible determination on the part of the United States to insist on their rights. That Government by doing only what it has itself acknowledged to be just will be able to spare the United States the necessity of taking redress into their own hands and save the property of French citizens from that seizure and sequestration which American citizens so long endured without retailasave the property of French citizens from that seizure and sequestration which American citizens so long endured without retaliation or redress. If she should continue to refuse that act of acknowledged justice and, in violation of the law of nations, make reprisals on our part the occasion of hostilities against the United States, she would but add violence to injustice, and could not fail to expose herself to the just censure of civilized nations and to the retributive judgments of heaven.

"Collision with France is the more to be regretted on account of the position she occupies in Europe in relation to liberal institutions, but in maintaining our national rights and honor all governments are alike to us."

The result of this message to Congress was the cause of great excitement in France, and the French Government instead of acknowledging that they were in the wrong and offering to make amends to pay the debt which they had solemnly declared to be due under the treaty dispatched war fleets to the coasts of this country, and bills were introduced in the French Chambers for increased military activity, looking to war with the United States.

country, and bills were introduced in the French Chambers for increased military activity, looking to war with the United States. In other words, France was on the point of going to war with the United States over 25,000,000 francs rather than pay her honest and acknowledged obligation. However, we had in the White House a man who not only was a real American but one who could not be frightened even in the early days of this Republic by the power and majesty of the French Government.

Without going into further details of this controversy, the firm American attitude of Andrew Jackson resulted in the full payment by the French Government of this obligation within a very short time, and without any war, and the net result was a greater respect for the American Republic on the part of the French Government than they had ever entertained before. It might also be added that during the Jackson administration the American Government had money coming from Denmark, from Spain, from the Two Sicilies, and that Jackson in each and every case insisted on the prompt payment of these obligations; and when he left the Presidency, every foreign debt due the United States had been paid in full with the exception of Portugal's, which was paid in 1851.

It might also be added that during the Revolutionary War France loaned the United States $8,000,000, and when the treaty of peace was signed in Paris, September 3, 1783, the French demand for a payment of this debt reached the United States before news

France loaned the United States $8,000,000, and when the treaty of peace was signed in Paris, September 3, 1783, the French demand for a payment of this debt reached the United States before news of the signing of the treaty of peace reached our Government. Our American forefathers did not in reply plead poverty, did not shout to high heaven that they had just emerged from a 7-year war in defense of human liberty, and ask for "funding" of the debt on ability to pay. They paid in full and with interest.

France must be taught the lesson in 1933 that a debtor who refuses to pay should be treated accordingly. That we Americans refuse to assume any more of her financial obligations to enable her to strut before the world, the most militaristic nation on earth, spending over $500,000,000 a year on armaments, while she has the second largest gold reserve in the world. She must be taught that breaking treaties and solemn obligations is just as dishonorable when perpetrated by France as when indulged in by any other nation. That dishonor is dishonor; that repudiation is repudiation. She must be taught that we have too high a regard for France herself to permit her in such a high-handed manner to flaunt the solemn obligation of her Government; and, lastly, she must be taught that we still believe what Jackson so forcibly said, that "in maintaining our national rights and honor all governments are alike to us." [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, ladies and gentlemen of the House, let me quote again from Jackson's fourth annual message. Speaking of keeping out of the quarrels of Europe, he said:

"Nor have we less reason to felicitate ourselves on the position of our political than of our commercial concerns. They remain in the state in which they were when I last addressed you—a state of prosperity and peace, the effect of a wise attention to the parting advice of the revered Father of his Country on this subject, condensed into a maxim for the use of posterity by one of his most distinguished successors—to cultivate free commerc Pent on us as a neutral nation, and our own citizens may equally rely on the firm assertion of their neutral rights."

Andrew Jackson's two terms as President of the United States covered the period from March 4, 1829, to March 4, 1837, and Europe, always on the brink of war, was in a dangerous frame of mind then, as now.

Having followed in the footsteps of the Washington-Jefferson policy, Andrew Jackson was able to say in his fifth annual message, policy, Andrew Jackson was able to say in his fifth annual message, December 3, 1833:

"A large balance will remain in the Treasury after satisfying all the appropriations chargeable on the revenue for the present year."

Jackson, in his sixth annual message, declared the country "free from public debt, at peace with the world."

The foreign policy he followed has been observed by every worthwhile statesman from Washington to April 6, 1917. Permit me to call attention to a changed foreign policy in recent years. I read here an editorial from the Minneapolis Tribune of January 27, 1929:

"AMERICA ARMS THE WORLD

"Senator Typings, of Maryland, wants the United States to use its money power as a club to force the rest of the world to disarm. He reasons that since the rest of the world is forced to come to America for loans, this country could exert an influence for good by putting an embargo on money against nations that maintain excessive armies and navies. To this end he proposes a resolution directing the Secretary of State to forbid American bankers to make the objectionable loans. This is perhaps a sample of the "hard-boiled" attitude which former Secretary of War Newton D. Baker was urging this country to adopt the other day toward bellicose governments. bellicose governments.

Secretary Kellogg has been doing something like this for the past Secretary Kellogg has been doing something like this for the past few years, exercising a veto on loans to governments which refuse to settle their war debts to America, but success of the plan depends on voluntary cooperation of the bankers. Although there is no power in the Government to compel submission of loans to the State Department for approval, the bankers in practice find it advisable not to run counter to the wishes of Secretary Kellogg. Whether they would submit so easily to a general embargo on all loans to half the world is another matter.

Senator Tydnos' resolution, however, has served the useful purpose of calling attention to the fact that America is lending many pose of calling attention to the fact that America is lending many countries every year about the full amount of their military expenditures. These loans, of course, are chiefly to private business, but the sums so released abroad thereby become available for use of armies and navies. Viewed in this rather indirect way, the United States is supporting about half the military establishments of Europe.

"The United States can hardly embark on any such crusade as Senator Typings wants, but it is a striking commentary on the inability of the world to learn from experience that 10 years after the war to end war Europe has an aggregate standing army of more than 3,000,000 soldiers. Europe is as much an armed camp today as in 1914, and so long as that is true, it is idle to talk of another war as 'impossible.'

another war as 'impossible.'"

And let me say this to our American people: That misrepresentatives of America have been supporting the military establishments of Europe and the emperors and empires of Europe ever since the World War. It is time to put a stop to the misleadership of these so-called 'gentlemen' who have been busily engaged in destroying American prosperity.

Serving in the Continental Army under George Washington, Andrew Jackson, American soldier lad of 14, flung back the taunts and insults of British officers whose boots he refused to clean, and suffered wounds at their hands.

This American soldier famous general and statement supreme

This American soldier, famous general and statesman supreme, drove the last of the British armies from American soil in a decisive and brilliant victory at New Orleans, and they never returned from and brilliant victory at New Orleans, and they never returned from that day to this, except as propagandists to propagandize us into the quarrels of Europe.

Can anyone doubt what the stand of Andrew Jackson would have been in 1917, when another Democrat plunged us into the quarrels of Europe after solemnly promising the American people that if they would reelect him he would keep us out of war?

I commend the state papers of Andrew Jackson as real American literature, virile, living today, as they were throbbing with life in his time. The greatness of Jackson resulted very largely from his virile Americanism and his following the precepts and advice of the founders of the Republic founders of the Republic.

I want you, my fellow Americans, to know the words of Washington, and I want you to know that they are pertinent today. I read you an editorial dated February 22, 1930, printed on Washington's Birthday, in the Minneapolis Tribune:

"WASHINGTON'S WORDS ARE PERTINENT TODAY

"Less 2 years, it is exactly two centuries today since George Washington was born.

"And 3 years before he died he left as a legacy to the American people a farewell address which formulated the main principles of the foreign policy this young Nation was to adopt.

"In words forever memorable he spoke as follows:

"Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmittles.

her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmittes.

"Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interests, guided by justice, shall counsel.

"Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why

"'Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand on foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?'

our destiny with any part of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?'

"These words are as pertinent as if they were spoken yesterday. They apply directly to two issues now engaging the attention of the American people.

"The first issue is the Mediterranean pact which France hopes to see adopted at the London Conference.

"The second is the Philippine situation.

"As regards the first, France wishes to make as a price for her participancy in the American reduction plan America's promise to aid France, in the event of war, in the Mediterranean. The proposition is not couched in terms quite that bald, but that is its clear meaning. Needless to say, the words of Washington, as quoted above, counsel rejection of any such proposal.

"As regards the second, the Philippine Islands, it is clear that had Washington's advice been followed they would never have been taken over. "Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation?" asks Washington, "Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground?"

"That is exactly the question the Northwest is asking today about our presence in the Philippines. Why are we over at Asia's doorstep at all? With two ocean frontiers and the best situation in the world for defense, why have we loaded ourselves up with a vulnerable possession at the other end of the globe—a possession which would automatically become our theater of war in the event of conflict with an Asiatic power?

"We acquired the Philippines in defiance of the advice laid down by the far-seeing founder of the Republic, and we have had nothing but trouble ever since. The agricultural competition from the Philippines is inflicting damaging blows upon an agriculture already in great distress; Minnesota today is paying out more for the Philippines than for running its entire State government. And naturally our whole agricultural population is fuming today about our continued retention of the Philippines.

"The foreign policy enunciated by Washington in his Farewell Address represented the final word on the s ever been able to find a better one. We have never experienced anything but grief when we ignored his message. We have never gone wrong in following his advice.

gone wrong in following his advice.

"Those individuals who are today seeking to make up their minds concerning the courses America should pursue in relation to the proposal to sign a Mediterranean pact or to free the Philippines should ponder the words spoken by the Father of this Country 134 years ago."

Jackson Americanism and Jackson democracy can save America today. Jackson was a follower of Jefferson, as Lincoln was a follower of Jefferson, and Lincoln were all followers of the foreign policy of the revered George Washington.

It is not enough to build monuments to the Father of our Country. That alone will not save us in this day and hour of trial. It

try. That alone will not save us in this day and hour of trial. It is not enough to read his Farewell Address in the House and Senate is not enough to read his Farewell Address in the House and Senate on February 22. It is not enough to print editorials in great dailies. In our foreign policy we must follow the immortal advice given by Washington in his Farewell Address.

I agree with the Minneapolis Tribune that the foreign policy enunciated by Washington in his Farewell Address represented the final word on that subject. I agree that nobody has been able to find a better one. I agree that we have never experienced anything but grief when we ignored his message. I agree that we have never gone wrong in following his advice; but I wish to remind the Minneapolis Tribune and the Minneapolis Journal and the great dailies of America that when Expert LUNDEEN followed Washington's advice: America that when Exnest Lunneers followed Washington's advice; when Charles A. Lindbergh followed Washington's advice; when the immortal Robert M. La Follette followed Washington's advice; when the great press of America forgot Washington, sneered at Washington, laughed at the disciples of Washington; but "while the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return."

Jackson says specifically, "I recommend that a law be passed authorizing 'reprisals' upon French property in case provision shall not be made for the payment of the debt at the approaching session of the French Chambers." Further he says, "The United States ought to insist on a prompt execution of the treaty, and in case it be refused or longer delayed take 'redress' into their own hands." That is good red-blooded American language. He made his position so clear, France finally understood he meant business and paid in full.

I refer the Senator to my speeches as a humble Member of the House of Representatives on several different occasions in the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses, in which I went into the subject quite fully, and quoted from Andrew Jackson's state paper, one of the greatest ever written. If there is any misunderstanding on the subject, I shall be very glad to refer to it again at some length.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. Assuming that what the Senator says is true with respect to what Andrew Jackson said at that particular time in his effort to collect the debt from the French, it would have meant a declaration of war upon the part of this country, would it not, if the French had not acceded to Jackson's demands and paid the debt?

JACKSON, AN AMERICAN UNAFRAID

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will say to the Senator that Andrew Jackson was an American unafraid and collected the money.

Mr. LUCAS. That is not the question.

Mr. LUNDEEN. That is the question, and that is my answer to the Senator.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator is evading the question.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am not evading it. He was a President unafraid, and he took the American stand and collected the money, come what might. I will say to the able Senator from Illinois that today, with France across the Rhine in fear of Germany, she is not going to make any hostile move against America 4,000 miles away. The Germans owe us money that we have loaned them. They are not going to make any hostile move against us, 4,000 miles away, with France and England right at their front door. We loaned a huge sum of money to the Kerensky government of Russia. I opposed that policy. Where is that money now? That is the question.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Six hundred million dollars.

WHERE IS THAT MONEY NOW?

Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes, I opposed that policy; and where is that money now? Who has paid it back? The American people want to know where that money is, and there is going to be an accounting of the billions of dollars that were squandered all over the earth to "rehabilitate" the earth. The great scholastic agriculturists and professors of universities dug up the word "rehabilitation," and they "rehabilitated" the farmers of Europe until they were cutting the throats of the American farmers. There may be those who say, "The world is my country." I do not say that. America is my country. I know no other country.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota further yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I do.

Mr. LUCAS. I do not disagree with the Senator's viewpoint so far as the debts are concerned. They are owed to us, and they ought to be paid. The only thing I am now discussing with the Senator from Minnesota is the method of payment of the debts.

Judging from what the Senator has said in referring to Andrew Jackson's strategy, he wants the administration today to use the same strategy that Jackson used in the collection of the debts. If we did so, that would mean, if the debtors did not pay, that we would seize, for instance, from Great Britain, the Bermuda Islands, and other islands that belong to Great Britain upon this side of the Atlantic. Is that what the Senator wants us to do now, in order to collect the British debt?

SCENTED LETTERS WITH LITTLE, WEAK BILLS NOT RESPECTED

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am in favor of proceeding along any line that is necessary, even unto that.

Mr. LUCAS. That perhaps would mean a war with Great Britain.

Mr. LUNDEEN. It would not, in my humble opinion. Great Britain is now shivering in her boots, according to able Senators on this floor, and wants America to cooperate and save her; and in the next breath we hear upon the floor of the Senate from Senators that she is going to come over here and make war on us because we insist on the payment of a debt which she honestly owes and dishonorably will not pay.

Mr. LUCAS. If I correctly understand the Senator, if Great Britain would not pay her debt to us, the Senator would advise this Nation to become an aggressor and immediately seize the British islands in the Atlantic or pursue any other method in order to collect the money Great Britain owes us.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will ask the Senator from Illinois what he does when he has a lien on a piece of land owned by someone who will not pay. He levies on the land and seizes it. That is what he does. What is wrong with that policy?

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator, in his present illustration, is dealing with individuals who live in this country. Mr. LUNDEEN. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. In the matter of the foreign debts we are dealing with nations. The Senator has not yet answered my question, and I should like to have it answered, because I have understood the Senator to be a very peace-loving citizen who does not want war at any price; and I undertake to say that if we should pursue the line of thought which the Senator is discussing upon the floor of the Senate we should be involved in war within a short time.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I can assure the Senator that we shall have no war, because no nation in Europe will come over here with its army and navy to prevent the collection of a debt which it owes. The debtor nations are 4,000 miles away, and they have the wolves at their own doors, and they cannot leave. We are now in a position where we can compel settlement, and if we had an Andrew Jackson in America now at the head of our Government we would collect these debts and believe it or not, there would be no war. The same threat that Andrew Jackson issued may suffice. If it does not, we are not cowards; we are not afraid; we must protect our own people here in America. We may not have to actually seize their islands or other possessions. I am not in favor of going any further than we need to go, but I am not afraid to go through to the end.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield? Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The mere fact that the wolves are at the doors of France and England, the Senator would not use as an excuse in order to become an aggressor to collect these debts by seizing the Bermuda Islands?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am not thinking in terms of France or Britain; I am thinking of America; I am thinking about the American people; I am thinking about our hungry and unemployed 12,000,000, the people of the United States; and I think that when a situation arises which gives us the advantage, we should seize the opportunity. I will be glad to yield further, but only for another question.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator make any distinction in his discussion between private and public debts?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I presume there may be distinctions. However, I believe that a nation should pay when they owe We have 12,000,000 unemployed in this country, some say ten and some say twelve million, and I am concerned about them. I am not trying to find arguments in my own mind to excuse foreign creditors for not paying their debts, and I am not entering into a discussion as to whether they should be paid in gold or goods. If we cannot get them in one way, we can get them in another. There are methods and means, and I hope that the able Senator from Illinois will, if he has not already done so, read Jackson's state paper, and I shall be very happy to discuss it with him later on.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President-

Mr. LUNDEEN. I will yield in a moment.

I wish to revert to these figures. I had no intention of entering into a long discussion, but I wish to make my position clear, because I feel strongly upon the subject, and should be glad to give further figures upon it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In view of the fact that there has been a very interesting discussion in reference to how we might be able to make collection of the war debts, I desire to bring to the attention of the able Senator from Minnesota a resolution which was introduced just a few days ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Longe] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], in reference to suggested negotiations with our debtor nations with regard to these debts. They have suggested, by way of the closing paragraph, which itself is the resolution-

That the President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with foreign governments which are indebted to the United States with a view to arranging for such governments (1) to furnish the United States with strategic materials for national-defense purposes, and (2) to make available to the United States geographical points which are of strategic importance for national-defense purposes, in payment or part payment of the indebtedness of such governments to the United States.

That is referred to as Senate Resolution No. 91. In my opinion it is a very interesting document, and I am confident, in view of the extremely able and unusually pertinent observations of the Senator, that this resolution will be interesting to him.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I ask that Senate Resolution No. 91 be made a part of my remarks. I thank the able Senator for calling it to my attention

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Senate Military Affairs Committee recently approved $100,000,000 authorization to purchase and store large stocks of sential war materials which are not available in this country; and Whereas the acquisition of such reserves of strategic war materials would materially contribute to our national security and to the creation of a sound national-defense program; and Whereas in view of recent developments in war-torn Europe it is not impossible that certain insular possessions of great strategic importance in the defense of the American hemisphere now held by certain so-called democracies may be lost to nations whose proximity to our coasts would be undesirable; and Whereas several foreign nations have debts, incurred during the World War, still outstanding to the United States; and

Whereas the payment of these debts might be used to fund the purchase of these war materials in part or full payment of their debts to us and to make available to the United States geographical points important in the defense of the United States; and Whereas the payment for these war materials would not compete with any American activity: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the President is hereby requested to enter into negotiations with foreign governments which are indebted to the United States with a view to arranging for such governments (1) to furnish the United States with strategic materials for national-defense purposes, and (2) to make available to the United States geographical points which are of strategic importance for national-defense purposes, in payment or part payment of the indebtedness of such governments to the United States.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I have heard other Senators advocate at least the acquiring, if not in so militant a way as I have expressed it, of these islands in payment of the debts.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In further pursuance of that point, if the Senator will be so good as to yield a moment more

Mr. LUNDEEN. I cannot resist the distinguished Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator is always so very polite and so kind that I hesitate to encroach upon the valuable time of the able Senator from the far North.

Let me say, in this connection, that we are considering now the matter of further fortifications of the Panama Canal. We are considering also the construction of an additional canal.

Great Britain, one of our debtor nations, as well as France, for that matter, have some very valuable holdings on the mainland, as well as islands, in the immediate proximity of the Panama Canal; as a matter of fact, just a stone's throw from positions which we have contemplated fortifying. I wanted to make the suggestion that we might be interested in acquiring that property, particularly the islands of the West Indies which belong to Great Britain and those which belong to the French, and the islands off the Mosquito coast. I will leave the mosquitoes for those countries. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

Mr. LUNDEEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was wondering whether we might not suspend at this time in view of the unlikelihood of collecting the debts today. [Laughter.] I thought the Senator was about to conclude.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, if the able Senator from Kentucky will permit, I have just a few rather discouraging figures which I wish to put into the RECORD. Then I will yield to the Senator from Washington.

It is my belief that if the Members of Congress and the administration will not proceed seriously with this matter, there may be a Congress here and an administration here in Washington in the not distant future which will proceed in a stern manner against foreign governments who gave their solemn and pledged word, and whose property and whose islands and whose resources we could well use at this time for the good of our own people.

The total of the Czechoslovakian indebtedness, if figured on a straight 4-percent interest rate over a period of 20 years, year by year, is shown in the figures I have for the first 20 -not 62-and they show the gradual increase. I ask that they be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the figures were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Austrian indebtedness to the United States

__ $26, 005, 480.99 As of Jan. 31, 1938

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President, I have already referred to the Austrian debt. We were not only financing Austria, however, now a part of the greater German Reich; we were not only financing this American Pittsburgh-made republic that was shipped over to Europe, made in Pittsburgh; we put it together and got it all boxed up and sent it over there and imposed it on Europe-brave, fine, wonderful people, but put together in such a manner that they were bound to die as a nation, and I so stated on many a public platform. If we do not beware, there may be some other put-together governments over there which will disappear before European history is complete.

We were not only interested in financing these people, but we had set out to destroy the Germans of the earth. We were going just to wipe them off the face of the earth—the brutal Huns. The Kaiser was going to be taken up the avenues of American cities in an iron cage like some wild animal and we were going to gaze upon him. I understand now that the King of England sends the Kaiser wires of congratulations on his birthdays, and we find Hitler and Chamberlain sleeping together, internationally speaking, anyway.

We finance Germany, we give Germany money, and Germany puts the money into playgrounds and parks, they put it into anything that cannot be shipped out on a train or ship. It is there forever. That is where they have located and fixed the funds we gave them; and when we asked pay-ment from Germany, of course Germany, observing the French and British and every other nation refusing to pay, said, "If you will lend us some more money, we will pay some interest on the money you have already loaned us." [Laughter.] That is the way we have been proceeding with the Treasury of the United States. That is not our money; it is the money of the people of the United States.

It is not our cash. We are only here as servants of the great American public. They put us here in these places and we are here for only a limited and a brief time, though I see many distinguished Senators who may be here much longer than I will be here, and other distinguished gentlemen who have been here nearly a lifetime. But most of the legislative servants of the American people are here only briefly, and are acting for the American public, and it is our sacred duty to protect every dollar of this money for our own people, for the people of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I make just one suggestion to the Senator from Minnesota relative to the inquiry of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lucas] as to whether he discerned any difference between a public and a private debt. We are so near March 15 that we are all painfully conscious that this foreign debt has been translated very much into private business. We should reflect that if we do not pay our income tax promptly we would be put into what my little boy calls the hoosegow. The public foreign debt due us, which has been discussed here today, has all been translated into a private debt which we now owe our Government, and we are sweating payment of it out of the hides of the American people. Am I not correct? Does anyone have any doubt about it? It is a private debt. That is the unhappy and awkward and vicious part of this whole business, that we translated the financial mistakes of government into private debts we must now pay our Government. The Senator from Minnesota pays the debt, I pay the debt, and every Member of this body pays it on March 15. He pays for the mistakes we made in these foreign loans. The tragedy of this thing is that men went to jail a few years ago because they objected to this crazy kind of prodigality.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I thank the able and distinguished Senator from Washington.

I wish to say in conclusion that if we had a little of the money which we loaned Mussolini, of whom we complain now, and whom we helped to set up in business, American money, at interest rates of one-tenth of 1 percent, the American people might find it a little easier to pay on their income tax. We need an American policy in foreign affairs. I thank the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate

EXECUTIVE REPORT RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under authority of the order of the Senate of March 14, 1939, Mr. Guffey, from the Committee on Finance, reported favorably on the 15th instant the nomination of A. Raymond Raff, of Philadelphia, Pa., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 11, with headquarters at Philadelphia, Pa. (Reappointment.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters

Mr. PITTMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the following nominations:

Laurence A. Steinhardt, of New York, now Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Peru, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics; and

William Dawson, of Minnesota, now Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to Uruguay, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Panama.

Mr. PITTMAN also, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, reported favorably the nominations of sundry persons for promotion in the Foreign Service of the United States.

Mr. WALSH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for promotion in the Navy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LA FOLLETTE in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

POSTMASTER, PORTSMOUTH, VA.

Mr. McKELLAR. From the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads I report back favorably the nomination of Samuel F. Kirby to be postmaster at Portsmouth, Va., in the place of Kemp Plummer, deceased. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be considered and acted on by the Senate at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and, at the request of the Senator from Tennessee, the Chair hands down the nomination, which will be read by the clerk.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Samuel F. Kirby to be postmaster at Portsmouth, Va.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the nomination be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the President be notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be entered.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT OF CONFIRMATION OF CERTAIN ARMY NOMINATIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, certain Army nominations were confirmed on March 13, and it would assist the War Department if those nominations could be released at once to the President, without waiting for the second executive session.

The reason for this request is based on the fact that one of these nominations will be effective on March 19, and if the officer does not accept on that date, because of a subsequent vacancy which has occurred, it will be necessary to renominate that particular officer with a different effective date. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the President be notified of the confirmation, on March 13, of the Army nominations referred to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas that the President be notified of the confirmation of certain Army nominations on March 13? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the calendar.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of A. Raymond Raff, of Philadelphia, Pa., to be collector of customs for district No. 11, headquarters at Philadelphia, Pa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Rude Jackson, of Maryland, to be aide (with relative rank of ensign in the Navy).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Coast Guard.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations in the Coast Guard be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Coast Guard are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, March 17, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received in the Senate March 16, 1939 ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL

Norman M. Littell, of Washington, to be an Assistant Attorney General, vice Hon. Carl McFarland, resigned.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS

Fannie Dixon Welch, of Columbia, Conn., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 6, with headquarters at Bridgeport, Conn. Reappointment.

COAST GUARD OF THE UNITED STATES

Ensign Bernard E. Scalan to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from May 27, 1938.

POSTMASTER

Samuel F. Kirby to be postmaster at Portsmouth, Va., in place of Kemp Plummer, deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, we wait in the deeper quiet that flows beneath the noisy streams of life. Thou hast said: "O man, all is thine." Spring's emerald, summer's glory, autumn's gold, winter's white, and eternity are thine. Morning, noon, and night are thine; Christ is thine, and He is God's. Praises be to Him from whom all blessings flow. We give thanks unto Thee, for we are fearfully and wonderfully made. Gracious Lord, let Thy blessing rest upon any who may find duty difficult and who may be burdened with care. Endue us with the spirit of divine charity. A good deed reaches the hearts of men. O Thou who hast known the way of sorrow and, through it, the way of immortal triumph, remember those who may be on the weary couch of affliction. Let Thy love sustain and comfort them. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PROCEEDINGS IN COMMEMORATION OF ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FIRST CONGRESS

Mr. JARMAN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Printing, I present a privileged resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

House Concurrent Resolution 12

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the proceedings at the joint session of the two Houses of Congress held in the House of Representatives on Saturday, March 4, 1939, in commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the commencement of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution, together with such additional matter as the Joint Committee on Arrangements in charge of these ceremonies may deem fitting and appropriate, in connection with this historical event, be printed, with illustrations, as a document; and that 1,000,000 additional copies be printed, of which 200,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 800,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JARMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachu-

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Jarman] if this is to be placed in the document room for distribution among the Members themselves?

Mr. JARMAN. For equal distribution. This is the folding room, as I understand it, but for equal distribution.

Mr. TABER. Has the gentleman any idea what the cost will be for 2,000,000 copies?

Mr. JARMAN. It is 1,000,000 copies.

Mr. TABER. What will the cost be? Mr. JARMAN. About $10,000, or about 1 cent apiece.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Coffee of Nebraska). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BARTON]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, a careful check of the messages and speeches of the President of the United States for the past 6 years reveals that we are now in the thirty-ninth emergency that has afflicted this country since March 4, 1933. I have made a brief chronological résumé of these emergencies in the President's own words, and I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks at this point in the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Barton]? There was no objection.

THE THIRTY-NINTH EMERGENCY

Mr. BARTON. Mr. Speaker, one who reads the messages and speeches of the President makes the startling discovery that we are now in the thirty-ninth "emergency," "crisis," "disaster," "serious situation," "danger," or period of "increasing urgency" which has befallen this Nation since March 4, 1933. This is at the rate of one new emergency every 6 weeks for 6 years-an all-time high in American history. Other administrations have come into power in an emergency, but this is the only administration that has sought to maintain itself in power by the manufacture and advertising of continuous crisis. Is it any wonder that the people are emotionally exhausted and demanding a change? All over the country the protest is rising. Press and people cry, "We are weary of government by emergency. Give us peace and a chance to go to work."

Mr. Speaker, here is a chronological list of these recurrent crises in the President's own words:

The national emergency is still critical (March 4, 1933). In view of such national emergency (March 6, 1933). An unprecedented condition (March 16, 1933). An emergency exists (April 3, 1933).

An emergency exists (April 3, 1933).

Said national emergency continues to exist (April 5, 1933).

The gravity of the emergency (May 17, 1933).

A period of national emergency exists (August 28, 1933).

Whereas I find, upon investigation * * * an economic emergency (January 31, 1934).

The emergency still exists (February 14, 1934).

It is part of an emergency program necessitated by the economic crisis (March 2, 1934).

Prompt and vigorous action to meet the emergency (June 9, 1934).

Prompt and vigorous action to meet the emergency (June 9, 1934).

As I have already stated, it is because of the current emergency of unemployment (January 24, 1935).

In recognition of this great national need (June 26, 1935).

With a resulting dislocation, restriction, and obstruction of interstate commerce (July 6, 1935).

A more potent danger at this moment to the future of civilization (October 2, 1935).

A critical situation prompts this letter (March 6, 1936).

Use of Government equipment in such an emergency is hereby authorized (March 18, 1936).

To relieve this serious situation * * * will require the expenditure of substantial amounts (September 2, 1936).

Emergency conditions still exist (January 14, 1937).

We propose to meet this emergency (January 30, 1937).

I need not emphasize to you the seriousness of the problem (February 28, 1937).

The increasing urgency (March 4, 1937).

A condition has been developing * * * so serious (June 1, 1937).

There is a crisis in American affairs which demands action now (September 17, 1937).

The political situation in the world * * is such as to cause grave concern and anxiety (October 5, 1937).

The pressing nature of this problem (October 24, 1937).

This presents an urgent problem (November 29, 1937).

Since that time events have caused me growing concern (December 29, 1937) ber 29, 1937).

This is an urgency which must be met by complete and not by partial action (January 3, 1938).

A serious menace to the fiscal system (April 25, 1938).

Seriously impairing the economic effectiveness of private enter-prise (April 29, 1938).

A matter of great public concern (May 20, 1938).

Since my relief message to the Congress 6 weeks ago the unemployment situation has grown worse (June 2, 1938).

The fabric of peace * * * is in immediate danger (September 26, 1938)

The dead line of danger from within and from without is not within our control (January 4, 1939).

I trust, therefore, that the Congress will quickly act on this emergency program (January 12, 1939).

In view of the foregoing considerations I report to the Congress that in my opinion an emergency exists (February 8, 1939).

I feel impelled again to call the attention of the Congr the very serious situation that exists (March 4, 1939). the Congress to

Mr. Speaker, the people cry "Peace! Peace!" but there is no peace. They now understand that so long as the New Deal is in power there will be no genuine appeasement, nothing but a succession of crises, each one calling for more debt. Young people will do well to tighten their belts and fix their hopes on 1941; jobs in industry will continue to be scarce until after the election. Private industry cannot create jobs in an atmosphere of tumult and terror. Any national administration is entitled to one or two emergencies in a term of 6 years. But an emergency every 6 weeks means plain bad management. And, in the words of the President himself-January 12, 1937:

A government without good management is a house builded on

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, about 2 years ago there was great concern among the shoe manufacturers and shoe workers of this Nation with regard to the reciprocal-trade agreements proposed by Czechslovakia and entered into with them and the Chief Executive and Secretary Hull.

That agreement, when finally consummated, continued the tariff rate at 20 percent ad valorem and limited the amount to 11/4 percent of our production that could come into the country. We note by the press reports that Germany has taken over Czechoslovakia, and that agreement, I assume, will no longer stand. Under these conditions there will be no limit to the number of pairs of shoes that can come into the country. In other words we are dealing no longer with Czechoslovakia, but with Germany with whom we have no agreement. The 20-percent tariff rate will prevail but the 11/4-percent limit of our production-which by the way was to my mind very much too high on account of their manufacture being on one particular shoe and not a general linewill not be in effect and our market can be flooded with cheap shoes unless some immediate action is taken.

I call the attention of the Members of the Congress to the fact that some immediate action should be taken to protect this great industry.

I also want to call to the attention of the Tariff Commission that to my mind the tariff should be increased to at least 30 percent ad valorem and the allotment should not be more than one-half of 1 percent of our production.

I feel certain that all of the Members of this House who are interested in this great industry will join with me as they have in the past in order to protect our thousands of workers and manufacturers in this Nation. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a letter I have written

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

BUSINESS APPEASEMENT

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, in the press for the past 2 or 3 weeks there have been appearing constant references to Democratic conferences being held with regard to tax appearament.

I wish to call attention to two facts, first, that this is entirely contrary to the announcements made earlier in the session that there would be no tax revision at this session of Congress, and second, that such a procedure would not be necessary if serious mistakes had not been made by the majority in placing upon the statute books such repressive and destructive tax legislation as has been passed in the last few Congresses, such as the tax on undistributed profits.

The appeasement program is simply an effort to cover up the errors the Democratic majority has made, contrary to the advice and without the assistance of the Republican minority. Nothing has been said about the fact that these laws were placed upon the statute books by insistence of the majority over the protests of the minority, who time and time again called attention to serious consequences which would follow from the enactment of these measures. Further, the changes that are being suggested will in no way lessen the tax burden but will transfer from one taxpayer to another the same burden. It is evident that the administration is frightened by its own errors.

The leaders of the administration have finally waked up to the fact that we cannot have lasting recovery and reemployment without cooperation with business. The administration's efforts during the last few years to harass and restrict business and to impose unwise and repressive taxes has been a large factor in holding back recovery.

Now the administration is talking about "business appeasement."

Of course we all know what has brought about this change of attitude. The administration leaders have been reading the election returns of last fall. They are now rushing to the forefront to claim credit for backing down on the policies which they previously advocated. The people, however, will not forget where the responsibility lies. The administration cannot relieve itself of the blame for the present distressed conditions by taking steps now to correct its errors, however commendable that course may be.

What is the necessity for business appeasement? Simply that the administration has in the past put into effect policies which never should have been adopted in the first place. If the Democratic majority had listened to the admonitions of the Republican minority the present appeasement program would not have been necessary. We, of the minority have consistently pointed out the dangers involved in the various administration tax programs of the last several years and we have seen our predictions come true.

Too many of the administration's tax policies have been dictated by other motives than the raising of revenue. Moreover, those in authority have overlooked the fact that there is an immutable economic law of diminishing returns, which recognizes that when rates of taxation exceed a given point they cease to be productive of more revenue.

The American people have never forgotten the manner in which the administration forced the adoption of the vicious undistributed-profits tax, nor the disastrous consequences of its enactment. The country has been paying for the mistakes of the present administration from the time it first took office.

The current business appeasement program is still in rather nebulous form. No definite suggestions for amendment have been made, although we hear rumors of a flat corporate tax of 22 percent or more, to take the place of the several taxes now assessed against corporations. If that is the kind of appeasement we are going to get, it may have the effect of depressing business still further rather than helping toward recovery. The best way I can think of to appease business is to eliminate the necessity for such high taxes by starting in to reduce expenses.

The repressive taxes which the administration has imposed during the last several years have all had their origin as distinctly partisan measures. Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee have been excluded from the sessions in which the tax policies have been formulated. The present so-called appeasement program likewise is a partisan proposition. No Republican Members of either body have been consulted in any of the conferences which have been held. Doubtless there has been a good reason for this, namely, that the business appeasement program is a part of the Democratic strategy to offset the trend of the electorate toward the Republican Party.

I am sure that I speak for the Republican minority when I say that we will gladly cooperate with the administration in any program to revise the tax structure in the interest of business recovery. We will be glad to help the Democratic majority correct their mistakes. But we want to make sure that the substitute program of taxation which is adopted is not worse than that which we now have. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk, and following the legislative program of the day, I may be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for I minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday morning of this week the President sent a message to the Congress asking for $150,000,000 for W. P. A. in order that thousands of deserving men and women throughout our country may receive continued employment on W. P. A. projects. According to his statement that amount is an absolute necessity in order to give the unemployed adequate relief.

On this same Tuesday the German Reich under Chancelor Hitler completed the annexation of the proud little Republic of Czechoslovakia in the same way that Austria was annexed about a year ago.

Austria had been an independent country for over 900 years and enjoyed excellent international credit. On March 1, 1939, the public debt of Austria to the United States was $26,011,672.09. At the time of her annexation by Germany, Austria owed the United States $25,980,460.66 in principal, which in view of her credit record Austria would have paid every cent owed this country. But Austria no longer exists as an independent country. Because of the annexation of Austria, Germany should be responsible for the Austrian debt. On a previous occasion I brought this matter to the attention of the House.

Now Germany has actually annexed the very respectable country of Czechoslovakia. Czechoslovakia enjoyed fine credit for a new country. On March 1, 1939, Czechoslovakia was indebted in the amount of $165,729,490.80 to the United States. This is well over $15,500,000 more than the sum the President is now asking for the W. P. A. In the annexation of Czechoslovakia, Germany should also assume this debt to the United States.

It is time this Government, through our State Department, should take a very strong stand regarding these debts. Are we going to permit the American taxpayers to lose this money in order that Chancelor Hitler can use it for armament and war? Are we going to allow Germany to get away with $191,741,162.89 of American money belonging to the American people?

It is time the entire international debt question is settled. Certainly it will not be settled unless this Government demands it. This settlement should be on the "now" list of this Government. I appeal to the House to act immediately upon the concurrent resolution which I introduced in the House today. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas it is reported that the Nazi Government has occupied the major part of Czechoslovakia and for all intents and purposes is in control of the affairs of the country; and Whereas from current reports there is no doubt as to whether

Whereas from current reports there is no doubt as to whether or not Czechoslovakia may be said to be an independent state: Therefore be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Congress of the United States that the reciprocal-trade agreement be abrogated; and further be it Resolved, That the President demand that the Nazi government assume the debt of Czechoslovakia of $165,729,000.80 to the United States

On March 7, 1938, a reciprocal-trade treaty was signed by Czechoslovakia and the United States. This treaty went into effect on April 16, 1938. In view of the fact that Czechoslovakia no longer exists as an independent country, I appeal to the Congress to request the State Department to nullify immediately this treaty. Until Germany acts favorably toward the United States regarding the contracted debts of the countries Germany has annexed and until Germany's trade activities are on a favorable basis with the United States, she should not be permitted to enjoy the advantages of a trade treaty with the late Czechoslovakia by the annexation of that country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. IGLESIAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record in regard to the extension of the Social Security Act to the island of Puerto Rico and to include therein a short bill of my own.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Commissioner from Puerto Rico?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record at this point and include therein certain excerpts from the Congressional Record.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana?

There was no objection.

Mr. THORKELSON. Mr. Speaker, before entering upon discussion of the main subject, I shall speak a few words on cockeyed legislation. I wish I could avoid using the word "cockeyed," but I think it expresses a general viewpoint of the people with whom I have come in contact.

On March 13, 1939, the whole afternoon was spent in debate on the source from which the District of Columbia should receive its milk and cream supply. Four hundred and thirty-five Members of Congress spent 4½ hours considering a perfectly obvious proposition, one which should be under the control of the Health Department of the District of Columbia instead of taking up the time of Congress.

It should be perfectly clear that the citizens living within the District of Columbia should have the right to be supplied with food from every State in the Union. Milk and cream should receive a most careful consideration because both are used as food for children as well as grown people. The danger in milk comes from contamination with such bacteria as bacillus coli, typhoid, and others. Congress cannot determine this, so must therefore rely upon inspections conducted by the health department. Milk and all food subject to contamination must be under the control of a body capable of determining if such contamination exists.

The shipment of milk and cream which was seized by the authorities of the District, and which, I believe, was shipped in from the State of Indiana, was 100 percent pure. It did not contain any dangerous bacteria, and the citizens should be very glad that such a source of food supply is open to them. There is another angle to this: If the District permits free competitive importation of food, the people living here can only benefit from such act because it will cost them less to live

Congress is supposed to represent our Nation at home and abroad, but it is not the constitutional duty of Congress to deal with food supplies, regulations of business, or any units within industries. The duty of Congress is to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States, but all other matters must be left to the State and to the various departments thereof. It is the duty of Congress to govern the District of Columbia, but the detail of such government is, of course, performed by the proper departments. For Congress to act as a food arbitration board, or a milk committee, is, if nothing else, ridiculous.

I shall now discuss the Reorganization Act of 1939, an entirely different piece of legislation, for it involves fundamental principles. The passing of this bill was assured by the Democratic majority in control of the House. As a new Member of Congress, I can only say that the rules invoked to assure passage of this legislation should not be tolerated in a republican form of government, such as ours, for they restrict free discussion.

I now declare, as a Member of Congress and a representative of a sovereign State, that such rules are not evidence of freedom, but represent instead coercion in its rankest form. The responsibility for this legislation must forever rest upon the Democrats in the Seventy-sixth Congress.

Much may be said about this abnormal procedure, whereby the House incarcerates intelligent discussion in a mass of rules. The principal point of interest to me, and one which I want my colleagues to bear in mind, is the unfairness of such rules to those Members who are sincere in their desire to restore sound government, for its nullifles their efforts to act as intelligent representatives. If all legislation were constitutional and could be proven so upon the Constitution, simple rules of debate would suffice. Restrictive rules such as those employed on March 6, 1939, are subject to severe criticism.

The pretended economical policy now discussed by the Democratic Members is, in my opinion, for public consumption only. Consolidation, simplification, and reduction in the operative cost of the Federal Government is nothing but a gesture; however, I shall let the future decide, for success or failure of this legislation must be accepted by the Democrats, and the final verdict will be given by the American people.

I do not agree with some of the statements made on this floor in referring to reorganization, and I deny that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] is justified in making this statement:

We now know from long and bitter experience that Congress does not want to do it. We know that Congress is not going to do it, and furthermore, we know that Congress cannot do it.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN] may speak for himself, but he is not speaking for me; for my greatest desire is to bring about economy not only in the Federal Government but in Congress itself. I realize that if we are to survive Congress must resume its constitutional duty. I therefore favor reorganization by Congress; and we have plenty of men in this body capable and willing to perform this duty, in spite of the gentleman from North Carolina's [Mr. WARREN] presumption.

The pitiable attitude displayed by some of the Members on the majority side is not that of statesmen or men with knowledge of sound business principles. It is, instead, that of servants to Federal departments, and particularly to the head of the Democratic Party.

I said on March 6, 1939, that the Reorganization Act is clearly unconstitutional; and I repeat that now and shall prove my point by the remarks of the three gentlemen who sponsored this reprehensible legislation. I further say: The rules of procedure for the passage of this legislation are an insult to Congress and to the people. The gentleman bragged about it when he said:

Why do we have the rule? This was drawn solely for the opponents of any particular plan of organization. I went to Mr. Deschler and told him that I wished that rule to be like fences we used to build down there in North Carolina; that I wanted it horse high, bull strong, and pig tight. I invite and challenge criticism of it. It will do the work, and it will make a filibuster in either body absolutely impossible.

I can only say that it does not require expert knowledge or ability for two votes to beat one. It requires no extraordinary ability and very little knowledge for the majority in Congress to destroy constitutional government or to enact any legislation as long as the majority favors such stupid procedure.

The parents of the reorganization bill—the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Warren], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox]were indeed apprehensive about its constitutionality. This was clearly revealed when the gentleman from Kentucky said:

Mr. May. We find that when we undertake to bring out legislation Mr. MAY. We find that when we undertake to bring out legislation on reorganization here and get it through the House we have never been able to do it. The continual creation of new bureaus and agencies proves the necessity for this legislation. This bill, as a matter of fact, is not a bill setting up a reorganization plan. It is merely a bill directing the President to submit to the Congress his plan for reorganization for the approval, or rather the disapproval in its present form by the Congress, if it so desires, of whatever plan he may submit plan he may submit.

The distinguished gentleman from Kentucky is correct in part. Congress has attempted reorganization by legislationa wasted procedure. Congress does not need legislation for that purpose. Congress has the power to appoint its own Members to reorganize the Government, which is the proper procedure. First, it is constitutional; second, such appointees have all power necessary to reorganize the Government when selected by Congress to perform such duty. I want to say at this point that we have such men in Congress-so let us use them.

I must, however, disagree with the distinguished gentleman when he says:

The continual creation of new bureaus and agencies prove the necessity for this (H. R. 4425) legislation.

It does not prove the necessity for new legislation, but proves instead that Congress has allowed incompetent people to run the Government. It proves the failure of Congress to act within its constitutional capacity and requires for correction the repeal of legislation.

The gentleman is correct when he says this bill directs the President to submit to Congress his plan for reorganization for its disapproval. Unfortunately it is true.

Upon the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. May], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox] became much alarmed. One of his own colleagues on the Democratic side of the House was on the verge of revealing the real intent of this act, which is for the President or his appointees to act as the Congress of the United States by the majority request of the Congress.

Mr. Cox. I hope the gentleman will not adhere to the statement he has just made. This is not the President's bill. This does not call for a plan of the President. This is the action of the Concall for a plan of the President. This is the action of the Congress. The plan will be the plan of the Congress and it must be if the measure is to stand the test that will hereafter be made. This will be a plan of the Congress made by its agent in accordance with its positive instruction.

Mr. Max. I did not say that this was the President's bill, and I do not say it now. I said this was simply a direction or request to the President to submit his plan to the Congress for approval or disapproval.

or disapproval.

Mr. Cox. I must take issue with the gentleman on that statement. This is not a request, this is an instruction—
Mr. May. Well, call it a direction, if it suits you better.
Mr. Cox. And the President is empowered to exercise discretion because we cannot delegate to him a legislative function—
Mr. Dondero. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question? tion?

Mr. May. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. Dondero. The gentleman referred to the bill as having only one controversial section in it, and I assume the gentleman refers section 5. Mr. May. Yes.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. May], whom I respect as a good Democrat, questioned the constitutionality of the bill, and particularly the validity of section 5, which I now quote, and which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Don-DERO] refers to in his question.

SEC. 5. The reorganizations specified in the plan shall take effect in accordance with the plan:

(a) Upon the expiration of 60 calendar days after the date on which the plan is transmitted to the Congress, but only if during such 60-day period there has not been passed by the two Houses a concurrent resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the reorganization plan.
(b) If the Congress adjourns sine die before the expiration of the 60-day period, a new 60-day period shall begin on the opening day of the next succeeding regular or special session. A similar rule shall be applicable in the case of subsequent adjournments sine die before the expiration of 60 days.

In the debate the following question was propounded:

Mr. Dondero. Does the gentleman know of any reason why this bill should not be amended to take the same course as any other bill before the House, and require affirmative action on the part of both branches of Congress rather than to remove practically all opposition to it by using a negative concurrent resolution as now opposition to it by using a negative concurrent resolution as now provided?

Mr. May. I do not know of any reason why it should not be such as would require affirmative action by the Congress, and I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that I am very seriously considering the question of whether I shall vote for the provision which requires that the bill become law if the Congress does not act, or whether I shall vote for an amendment that will provide that the bill shall not become effective unless it is approved by the Congress. Whatever form the act may take, we must all realize that there must come a time, and that very quickly, when expenditures of government, both State and Federal, must be greatly curtailed—otherwise we may witness a complete collapse of our economic structure. We may face chaos as a people. To that, I am sure, all will agree. It is either a case of reduction of expenses or burdens of taxation beyond the endurance of our people.

I have taken the liberty of quoting the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. May] in full because I regard his opinion very highly, and I am positive that he is sincere in his statement.

Now, let us examine this plan, for it is not open and aboveboard; it is instead very subtle:

SEC. 4. Whenever the President * • • (d) (4) make provision for winding up the affairs of the executive agency abolished or the affairs of the executive agency with respect to the functions abolished, as the case may be; and

(e) transmit such plan (bearing an identifying number) to the Congress, together with a declaration that, with respect to each transfer, consolidation, or abolition referred to in paragraph (a), (b), or (c) of this section and specified in the plan, he has found that such transfer, consolidation, or abolition is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a). The delivery to both Houses shall be on the same day and shall be made to each House while it is in session.

The President, in his message transmitting a reorganization plan, shall state the reduction of expenditures which it is probable will be brought about by the taking effect of the reorganization specified in the plan.

It is my desire to call your attention to the last paragraph, that is, reduction of expenditures. Nothing is said in this paragraph about increase of expenditure in the new department created by such consolidation. I mention this as a point of interest.

Now, here is what happens: The executive agency transmits a plan—bearing an identifying number. What sort of a plan is it? Is it not possible that it may be an executive resolution? This is presented to both Houses. If no action is taken, it becomes a law in 60 days. It must for that reason be presented in the form of legislation.

Now, what happens? Is it returned to the President for his signature, or is it unnecessary? He is in reality the agency who proposed the measure, but, according to the Constitution, he must sign it before it becomes a law. it is returned to the President, will he sign it? If it is vetoed by him, will it be returned to the Congress for reconsideration? If Congress overrides such veto, what will happen?

Suppose again that Congress deny this request, plan, or executive resolution. It must be done by a concurrent resolution introduced in both Houses. This will deny the President's request. To be constitutional it must be returned to the President for his signature before it becomes valid.

Now, suppose he vetoes the concurrent resolution? It will be returned to both Houses and must then be passed by twothirds majority. It places Congress in a very embarrassing position, because it will require two-thirds majority to save the honor of the Nation.

I shall now recapitulate the discussion of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio:

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read, page 2, beginning with line 15, strike out down

The Clerk read, page 2, beginning with line 15, strike out down through line 19, the following paragraph:

"SEC. 1. (b) The Congress declares that the purposes specified in subsection (a) may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this title, and can be accomplished more speedily thereby than by the enactment of specific legislation."

Mr. Jenkins. Mr. Chairman, I have offered this amendment because I am very much interested in this matter that I wish to have stricken out.

Mr. Cox. It refers to (a) in section 1.

Mr. Jenkins. If it refers to subsection (a) in section 1, then there is little wonder that all of this learned discussion has not been especially enlightening for it referred to subsection (a) over in section 5.

Mr. Cox. Subsection (a) contains everything down through line

Mr. Cox. Subsection (a) contains everything down through line 14, on page 2, does it not?

Mr. Jenkins. That is what I maintain, too. Now what does the gentleman think about this? Why cannot that whole section be stricken out? What does it do?

I shall now let the eminent gentleman from Georgia speak in reference to section 1 (b), already quoted:

Mr. Cox. That section is retained there for the purpose of supporting the constitutionality of the act. The Congress is here setting up its reason why an agent is being appointed to do the work which the Congress has not the facilities to do.

Mr. Jenkins. It strikes me yet, and I think I am absolutely right in my position, that this section does not do anything in the world toward making this law a constitutional act. I took that position yesterday, and I take it now.

Mr. Cox. The bill sets up justification for the law.

Mr. Jenkins. Yes; but that is not necessary.

Mr. Cox. And is most essential to its validity.

Mr. Jenkins. It is not necessary to set up explanatory language to make an act constitutional. If it has any constitutionality it gets it on its own wording.

to make an act constitutional. If it has any constitutionality it gets it on its own wording.

Mr. Cox. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. Of course, the membership of this House, if interested in the setting up of a law that will stand the test in the courts, will not support the amendment to strike this provision of the act, and * * * I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the section simply sets up the reason for the law, and that if stricken it is doubtful if the act could withstand a test in the courts on the ground of its constitutionality. its constitutionality.

In other words, the three gentlemen, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], felt a little bit apprehensive. They were not willing to take advantage of the Constitution on the main street, but were perfectly agreeable to committing the crime in the alley.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is perfectly correct. A statement of policy by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN], and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] does not make this act constitutional, but it must instead rest for such validity upon the Constitution itself. I further say: None of the eminent gentlemen can designate where in the Constitution such power is given to them; that is, to make the Reorganization Act of 1939 constitutional by a statement of policy, as set forth in section 1, subsection (b)

It is my opinion that in the debate on this bill it is clearly shown by the majority itself that the bill is not only unconstitutional, but that it is also a direct and violent threat on constitutional rights and liberties. Nothing is constitu-tional in the bill except the paper it is written on. I understand their anxiety for enactment of this legislation.

The people's hope now lies in the Senate which is supposed to be composed of sane and sensible men, thoroughly appreciative of their responsibility. The Nation must rely upon this body when the House of Representatives fails in its constitutional duty. If both Houses fail to observe the Constitution, the last resort of the people rests upon the fairness of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is the last resort upon which all of us must rely if the Nation is to survive. If the House, Senate, and the Supreme Court do not recognize unconstitutional legislation and stop the same, the people will then be forced to take the law into their own hands.

The constitutionality of this act must not be based upon previous decisions, but must rest instead solely upon the Constitution of the United States, with due consideration for amendments 9 and 10.

I question the soundness of rules which allow the majority in the Congress power to force legislation of this sort through the House without lengthy and serious consideration, not only by the Congress itself but by our people who in the end will be martyrs to congressional blunders.

I can readily understand why Members of Congress are ridiculed. It is indeed a pity that we are pilloried as public clowns; however, we are responsible for it, because of our boastful admissions of incompetency. I have been a Member of this Congress for 21/2 months and during the whole period we have done nothing but enact legislation and appropriate money, not in the millions but in the billions. are irresponsible as 8-year-old boys. God pity us. We have not the courage to assert ourselves and take command according to the power delegated to us by the people we represent and according to the Constitution of the United States. I recommend the reading of it—it is a very wonderful document. It might stiffen the spines of some of my colleagues.
This is the duty of Congress: The constitutional duty of Congress is to represent our Nation in all its foreign relations and to provide protection and to promote the general welfare of the United States. The first duty of Congress is to enact nothing but such legislation as is clearly constitutional and definitely limited by the Constitution. The second duty is to operate the Federal Government with the most drastic economy and for the greater welfare of the people who are paying the expenses of the Government.

Congress is supposed to manage the Government in a positive manner, from the President down to the most unimportant department. It must provide for armaments of all types, to protect our Nation, our colonies, our merchant marine, our trade routes and foreign markets.

It is the duty of Congress to guarantee to each State a republican form of government, for which each State must assume responsibility. The State must operate free from Federal interference. The State is responsible for the business within the State and for its population. has no business to meddle with industries, with business, with labor, or with anything else within the State, but each State must assume complete responsibility for administration of its own affairs.

This is a rough outline of the duties of Congress and of the States. Congress can help the people best by the most drastic economy in the Federal Government, and an absolute minimum of taxation. It is the only way to restore sound government.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD by including therein an address delivered by Mr. H. A. Church, national legislative chairman of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, over station WOL on March 10, 1939.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday we adopted an amendment to the paragraph making appropriations for the United States Housing Authority which limited to $3,500 the amount to be spent per dwelling unit. Today I received a letter from the Administrator of the Authority which stated that the Authority had entered into contracts and obligations amounting to millions of dollars, for which this Government is responsible. If this amendment remains in the bill, it will destroy these obligations and contracts entered into by the Government, and we will be repudiating the act of 1937 that gave this agency authority to enter into such contracts. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein the letter to which I have referred, together with data and other material regarding contracts that have been entered into by the Government.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, the data to which I have referred are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,

UNITED STATES HOUSING AUTHORITY,
Washington, March 16, 1939.
Gentlemen: In accordance with your request, we are writing to advise you regarding the effect of the amendment which would limit annual contributions to dwelling units on which the cost limit annual contributions to dwelling units on which the cost does not exceed $3,500. This amendment, if adopted, would result in abrogating contracts already made, with the approval of the President, by the United States Housing Authority with local housing authorities throughout the country. The present amount of these contracts calls for loans of $346,460,000 which are to be made from the proceeds of bonds issued by the United States Housing Authority. No appropriated moneys are used in making loans.

Attached hereto is a table showing the costs per dwelling unit in small communities, middle-sized communities, and large communities, broken down to show:

ties, broken down to show:

(1) The over-all cost including nondwelling facilities, the construction cost of dwellings, equipment, architects' and overhead expenses, and the cost of slum buildings to be demolished. It is to these items that the $3,500 limitation would apply, and it is apparent that all projects now being developed would become ineligible. This is no indication that the U.S. H. A. costs have been high, as may be seen from the second table showing how much lower the costs of U.S. H. A. aided projects have been than the costs in private industry and the cost of F. H. A. housing.

(2) Cost of new housing, which includes all costs except the cost of slum buildings to be demolished, as these costs should not properly be regarded as a cost of rehousing but rather as the cost of the slum-clearance portion of the program.

(3) The net construction cost, which includes the same items as are included in the private residential construction costs compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics on the basis of building-permit figures.

as are included in the private residential construction decided in the Bureau of Labor Statistics on the basis of building-permit figures.

Table II, which is attached, compares the average per-dwelling unit net construction costs of U. S. H. A. aided projects with the average in the same communities of private building and shows that the U. S. H. A. costs have been $1,000 less per dwelling unit than the private building costs in the same locality. This table further shows that the over-all average estimated cost per dwelling unit for U. S. H. A. aided projects has been $1,000 less per dwelling unit than the average value of new housing insured by U. S. H. A.; and, finally, this table shows that the U. S. H. A.'s actual average construction dwelling facilities costs per room and per dwelling unit are very materially lower than the limitations on such costs fixed in the United States Housing Act. These lower costs have been achieved by the United States Housing Authority even though the dwelling units built under its program are designed to last 60 years and are built with labor paid the prevailing wages.

It should be especially noted that the adoption of the $3,500 over-all cost limitation would result in the abrogation of obligations already incurred by the United States Housing Authority with the approval of the President. Under the provisions of section 10 (e) of the United States Housing Authority Act "the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment of all annual contributions contracted for," and local authorities and private lenders have already made binding commitments in reliance upon the Government's fulfilling its obligations under these annual-contributions tions contracted for," and local authorities and private lenders have already made binding commitments in reliance upon the Government's fulfilling its obligations under these annual-contributions contracts. The $5,000,000 proposed to be appropriated for annual contributions is merely to meet payments which will accrue under these annual-contribution contracts that have already been made.

Moreover, the adoption of this over-all cost limitation would make it necessary for the United States Housing Authority to stop all further projects, because the limitation is so broad and all inclusive as to make the contemplated low-rent housing program impossible of achievement. As table II shows, the United States Housing Authority has been setting a remarkable record in the achievement of low cost, and its costs have been on the average of $1,000 less per dwelling unit than those achieved in the same localities by private lenders or under the Federal Housing Administration.

If the United States Housing Authority program is to continue and if the Government is to fulfill its obligations under existing contracts, it is essential that the $3,500 over-all cost limitation be not imposed.

Please communicate with us if there is any additional informa-tion which your committee desires in connection with the pending appropriation bill.

Faithfully yours,

NATHAN STRAUS, Administrator.

HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

TABLE I.-Costs

The proposed amendment would set a $3,500 limit for the over-all cost of a dwelling unit. In order to see what the effect of this limitation would be, the figures on costs taken from 140 U. S. H. A.-aided projects, approved by the President as of December 31, 1938,

A DESCRIPTION OF THE PROPERTY	Average per dwelling unit cost in small municipalities	Average per dwelling unit cost in middle- sized munici- palities	Average per dwelling unit cost in large municipalities
1. Over-all cost: This includes land, nondwelling facilities, the construction cost of dwellings, equipment, architects and overhead expenses and the cost of slum buildings to be demolished 2. Cost of new housing, which includes all the items in No. 1 above, except the cost of slum	$4,000-$4,500	$4, 500-$5, 500	$5, 500-$6, 000 above, except the cost of sum buildings to be demolished 3. Net construction cost: This in- cludes the construction cost of dwellings, that is, struc- tural, plumbing, heating and electrical items. This comprises the same items as are included in private resi- dential construction costs compiled by the Bureau of	3, 500-4, 000	4,000-5,000	5, 000-5, 500
Labor Statistics on the basis of building permit figures	2, 000-$2, 700	2, 700-$3, 400	3, 400–$4, 000

It is clear from this table that the imposition of a $3,500 over-all cost to include not only structures but also land, nondwelling an cost to include not only structures but also land, nondwelling facilities, equipment, overhead, and slum clearance and demolition as well as new housing, would rule out all U. S. H. A. aided projects, despite the fact that, as shown in table I, judged by valid comparisons, the costs for U. S. H. A. aided projects are remark-

TABLE II.—Comparable costs

TABLE II.—Comparable costs

There are three costs with which the costs of U. S. H. A. aided projects may be compared. One is the comparison between the net construction cost of U. S. H. A. aided projects with the comparable cost of private construction. Another is the overall cost for new housing on U. S. H. A. aided projects compared with the average value of new housing insured by the F. H. A. in 1938. The third is a comparison between the dwelling-facilities cost on U. S. H. A. aided projects and the applicable statutory limitations. These three comparisons are set forth below.

1. Net construction cost per dwelling unit. This item is significant in view of the statutory requirement that the average construction cost of dwelling units in U. S. H. A. aided projects be not greater than the average construction cost of dwelling units currently produced by private enterprise in the locality concerned. RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday afternoon I received a letter, addressed to me as Speaker of the House, from the Honorable Jesse Jones, Chairman of the Board of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in answer to certain charges that had been made on the floor of the House by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Taylor] with respect to two matters, one relating to the refusal of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make a loan to a certain business enterprise in Tennessee, and the other containing a criticism of the action of that Board with reference to advancing moneys for the construction of a building here in the city of Washington. I think this matter should be inserted in the Congressional Record for the information of all Members of the House and the country. I therefore ask unanimous consent that it may be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The letter referred to follows:

RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION.

Washington, March 15, 1939.

Dear Mr. Speaker: The March 10 issue of the Congressional Record carries, on pages 2563 and 2564, observations by Mr. Taylor of Tennessee reflecting upon the R. F. C., and entirely inconsistent with the facts.

Because of the nature of these charges and the insinuations and misrepresentations contained in the article which Mr. Taylor inserted in the Record, I give you the following facts which, under the circumstances, we would appreciate having inserted in the Record.

Mr. Taylor refers particularly to a loan application from his district that we had not been able to qualify. When he called at our office February 8 to discuss this application, he was advised that there appeared to be no basis upon which a loan could be granted. However, further study is being given the application as is true with all applications that cannot be approved on the basis requested, but where the circumstances indicate a loan might be worked out. worked out.

The fears expressed by Mr. TAYLOR to the contrary notwithstanding, we try very hard to qualify every application for a business loan that has any merit, particularly the smaller ones. Every application receives the most sympathetic consideration. Overviously, it is more pleasant to grant loans than to deny them. We try to administer the law as it is passed by Congress, giving the broadest possible construction to the act where employment is involved.

We have authorized more than 5,000 business loans of $25,000 or less, the amount Mr. Taylor used in his remarks. Two thousand seven hundred and ninety-eight of our business loan authorizations have been for $5,000 or less, and 3,979 for $10,000 or less. Eighty-three percent of all our business loan authorizations have been for $50,000 or less.

Eighty-three percent of all our business loan authorizations have been for $50,000 or less.

The facts about the loan for the construction of an office building in Washington, to which Mr. Taylor referred in a none too complimentary manner to the directors of this Corporation, follow.

To aid employment and stimulate business, we have long been offering to finance the construction of sound building projects anywhere in the United States that a need for them can be shown and the borrowers can furnish a substantial equity.

When this loan was tentatively applied for, we were told that the property (a large plot opposite the Veterans' Building fronting the entire block on Vermont Avenue from H to I Streets) could be bought for $3,000,000, or possibly a little less, and that the proposed building company could furnish a substantial cash equity, in addition to builders', engineers', and architects' fees. The applicants stated that they could readily rent the building for commercial purposes on a profitable basis.

After consideration by our directors and a conference with the President, I advised the applicant that if the property could be bought for approximately $2,000,000, which upon investigation we thought would be a conservative but fair price, and the borrower would provide $500,000 cash equity, in addition to the builders', engineers', and architects' fees, the R. F. C. Mortgage Co. would lend the balance of the cost up to $5,600,000, provided it could lease the building at a satisfactory rental and have an option to buy it at cost. When the space is no longer needed for R. F. C. activities, it can be rented easily for sufficient to pay interest and amortization on our mortgage.

We have been badly in need of adequate quarters for several to an be rented easily for sumcient to pay interest and amortiza-tion on our mortgage.

We have been badly in need of adequate quarters for several years, occupying space in four buildings, none of which is very well suited for our purposes nor convenient and economical in the ad-ministration of the Corporation.

After several months' negotiations the court and the trustee for the estate owning the property approved the sale at $2,000,000.

the estate owning the property approved the sale at $2,030,000, although the interested parties testified at the hearing before the court that it should be worth substantially more than this price.

Mr. Corcoran Thom, president of the American Security & Trust Co., trustee, testified that members of the executive committee of Co., trustee, testified that members of the executive committee of his bank were of the opinion that $2,500,000 was a probable value; that an offer of $3,000,000 some years ago had been refused; and that the recent $2,000,000 offer submitted by the prospective borrower was originally declined. Mr. Thom further stated that his committee, in view of the heavy obligations of the estate owning the property, felt that while the price was not full value, taking everything into consideration, they should recommend the sale.

Rear Admiral Mark L. Bristol, committee for Edward B. McLean, filed an answer in the proceedings stating that the price offered, $2,000,000, was inadequate. He testified at the hearing that since a trust of $1,500,000 had been placed on the property, it must have been considered by the people who had put that trust upon it as being worth close to $2,500,000 or $3,000,000.

I recite these facts to show the value of the land securing our loan.

Our directors regard the loan as a thoroughly sound investment and, in addition, it creates a substantial amount of work, both in its construction and in the preparation and fabrication of materials required, fully in keeping with the purposes of the act and the efforts of the administration.

materials required, fully in keeping with the purposes of the act and the efforts of the administration.

The architects' and engineers' fees aggregate only 5 percent of the cost of the building, which is 1 percent less than the standard rate fixed by the American Institute of Architects. The builder, one of the oldest and best-known construction companies in the country, is to have a fee of 8 percent of the actual cost of the building, which includes its overhead. This is a reasonable contractor's percentage and not all profit.

The $500,000 cash provided by the building company, together with all fees and services by the contractors, architects, and engineers, and the conservative price at which the land was bought, gives the Mortgage Co. a margin substantially in excess of $1,000,000.

The rental on the building is to be sufficient only to cover interest on our mortgage, taxes, 5 percent per annum on the equity, plus approximately 1 percent per annum to cover depreciation on the building and amortization of the investment.

The Mortgage Co. has an option to buy the building at cost, the construction and cost of which will be at all times under the supervision of its engineers. Under these conditions and the terms of the trade, there can be only a moderate profit to the builders, engineers, and architects, and that will be invested in the equity of the building.

In view of the crowded condition of many governmental agencies and the indequate and uneconomical querters that there are

In view of the crowded condition of many governmental agencies and the inadequate and uneconomical quarters that they are forced to occupy, we would be glad to finance the construction of other such buildings in Washington on similar terms.

Very truly yours,

JESSE H. JONES, Chairman.

Hon. WILLIAM B. BANKHEAD, Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that a very material saving could be effected to all the Members of the House and the Post Office Department by changing the form of the present Congressional Record. If we could provide that Members could secure mat copies of any material in the Congressional Record so it might be reprinted in standard newspaper columns in the press throughout the country we could relieve Members of the expense and trouble of putting out speeches through the usual channels by permitting them simply to secure an impression of the matter in the RECORD and send it to the local papers.

With this end in view I have prepared a bill which I am introducing today. I sincerely and earnestly commend it to the attention of the Members of the House. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, that this bill may appear at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Idaho?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That beginning with the second regular session of the Seventy-sixth Congress the Public Printer, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, shall supply to Members of the Senate and House of Representatives, at cost, newspaper mats of such parts of the Congressional Record as they may desire; and the width of columns, size of type, and other matters of arrangement and style of the Congressional Record shall be modified as to the width of the column in the printed page of the Congressional Record and made standard and interchangeable with columns of standard newspapers, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to such extent as may be advisable in order that such mats may be suitable for newspaper use.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a radio address by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SMITH] in his debate with Senator TAFT.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 218. An act for the relief of Manuel D. A. Otero, as administrator of the estate of Teresita S. Otero, deceased; and S. 219. An act for the relief of Emma Gomez.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4852) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852, with Mr. Buck in the

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the reindeer item and all amendments thereto conclude in 30 minutes, and may I say in support of this suggestion that this is an item that has been discussed not only for several hours in the past but for several years. The Members are advised, I think, about the item, and yet there is no disposition on the part of the committee to prevent anyone from discussing the matter who desires to do so.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I may state that the gentleman from Oklahoma was a little LXXXIV-181 reluctant in mentioning the fact we are going to talk about reindeer. There is going to be quite a controversy over this subject. This means that somebody is going to take a sleigh ride, and we are going to have the reindeer, 180,000 of them, to lead us on, and, Mr. Chairman, we could not do justice to this subject in 30 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. This is no time for the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make a speech.

Mr. RICH. I object to the 30 minutes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if we can agree at this time on a reasonable amount of time. I believe the Committee does not want to discuss the reindeer item all the afternoon, and I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that I have no reluctance about discussing it. I have discussed it more on the floor of the House, probably, than any other Member, and there is no reluctance on my part about discussing it and no reluctance on my part about giving the Members all the time they want to discuss it.

Mr. RICH. I may say to my colleague that if he will let the debate run along for 10 or 15 minutes, then, if there is no great demand for time, I am willing to close debate in half

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. But the gentleman does not want to agree at this time on any limitation of time?

Mr. RICH. It seems the minority members of the committee feel we ought to run along for 10 or 15 minutes before limiting the time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman on the minority side if he would not agree to 40 minutes? I think that would give us ample time to discuss this matter.

Mr. RICH. We do not know, Mr. Chairman, how many of our Members want to speak on this item. If those who want to speak will indicate the fact now, we can arrive at some conclusion about the time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I would suggest then, Mr. Chairman, that those who have a speech they want to make on this subject rise and we can determine the matter.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 10 minutes by unanimous consent or under any other arrangement that may be possible.

Mr. COLMER. I would make the same request, Mr. Chair-

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that we let debate run along for a few minutes and then I think we can enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to close debate. We have no desire to prolong debate unduly. We want to close it as expeditiously as possible, but we have no way of knowing now how many Members desire to speak and some who are not here now will arrive a little later and will want to speak and if we foreclose them now they will not have that opportunity.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes. This will give everybody a chance to get a speech off his chest.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. There is pending before the Committee the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]. Does the gentleman desire recognition?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss the matter at the present time. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Colmer] had the floor yesterday, and I suggest that he be permitted to address the Committee.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, if I understand the regular procedure, the proponent of the amendment should first present the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The proponent of the amendment does not desire to be recognized and the Chair will recognize anyone in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in oposition to the amendment.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi vield?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk again may report the amendment pending before the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield for that purpose?

Mr. COLMER. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 60, line

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 60, line 23, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Reindeer industry, Alaska: For the purchase, in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem advisable, of reindeer, abattoirs, cold-storage plants, corrals and other buildings, and communication and other equipment, owned by nonnatives in Alaska, as authorized by the act of September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 900), $820,000; and for necessary administrative expenses in connection with such purchase and the establishment and development of the reindeer industry for the benefit of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, as authorized by said act, including personal services in the District of Columbia (not to exceed $2,300) and elsewhere, traveling expenses, erection, repair, and maintenance of corrals, fences, and other facilities, $250,000; in all $1,070,000, to be immediately available: Provided, That under this appropriation not exceeding an average of $4 per head shall be paid for reindeer purchased from nonnative owners: Provided further, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply to the purchase of reindeer located on Nunivak Island."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Mississippi suspend for a moment until I can explain to the Committee why the amendment was offered? Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, that is the position I took a moment ago.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman yields, it is to be taken out of his time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee who has offered this amendment be allowed to have my time so that he can explain the amendment, and then I can oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Oklahoma be permitted to explain the purpose of this amendment without the time being taken out of the 50 minutes previously agreed upon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the pending amendment which was offered by me was to take the place of the provision in connection with the purchase of reindeer in Alaska, stricken out on a point of order on yesterday. It is simply for the purpose of eliminating that part of the bill objected to by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] and which was held to be legislation on an appropriation bill and subject to a point of order. My amendment simply eliminates the language of the item which was objectionable.

May I add, Mr. Chairman, that I presented the pending amendment as the necessary formality on my part, having this bill in charge? The amendment is offered for the purpose of giving Members an opportunity to vote on the so-called reindeer item, and does not necessarily present my own opinion on this particular item.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, this is the third time that I have appeared in the Well of the House in opposition to this authorization and appropriation for the purchase of reindeer in Alaska. It was my purpose to move to strike this item. I know there are those who differ honestly with me on this proposition and I know that in many instances they are perfectly conscientious in the matter. But for the life of me I cannot understand, as I said before, why the Government of the United States, with the present condition of the Treasury, when we are holding out the olive branch to business and talking economy in Government, when we are trying to reestablish the confidence of the people in the Government, should go into a new venture like the reindeer This is purely a Santa Claus proposition. Someone explained his opposition to our position in this matter because he believes some of our constituents would object because Santa Claus would not have sufficient reindeer otherwise. Someone else suggested that the Government had gone into so many questionable businesses, and so many people had gotten the idea that the Government really is Santa Claus, that we ought to have these additional reindeer to fill out the picture.

The cold, hard facts about this situation are that some people named Lomen started in the reindeer business in Alaska. They started in that business not to help the Eskimos, but to make money for Lomen Bros. They constructed abattoirs and other buildings and equipment and then went broke. It was not a successful venture, and what happened? They came down here to Washington to get the Government to pull their chestnuts out of the fire, to have the Government make them whole and escape the loss on this unsuccessful venture. That is the situation and the record shows it. It is shown by the hearings that it is proposed to buy 180,000 reindeer for which $4 a head will be paid except some 15,000 that are claimed by the Lomen Bros. on this Nunivak Island. They can pay $25 or $50 a head for those deer if they want to. I want to be perfectly frank about this. Lomen Bros. own other deer in addition to those on this particular island, and those on the island are exempted, and the Government is to purchase 180,000 reindeer. I have the record of the hearings that show that Lomen Bros. claim to own 275,000 deer up there. When the Government gets ready to buy these other deer, in many instances it will be buying its own reindeer, and I shall prove that statement to you.

The Government went up there some years ago and placed some reindeer in there. There has been a natural increase. They cannot tell who owns those reindeer. I appeal to the membership to show good faith in economizing by defeating this item.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels that the time was allotted at the time the agreement was entered into.

Mr. COLMER. I withdraw the request, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask if any member of the committee desires to use time at this point?

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak in favor of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some member of the committee desires to proceed, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania for 5 minutes.

Mr. FADDIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not one of those who believes it is either possible or desirable to place everyone within the confines of the United States of America on W. P. A. I believe it is absolutely necessary that among our population we have a certain amount of people who are able to support themselves. That is the reason I am supporting this amendment. I believe that this proposition to give the Eskimos of Alaska reindeer, which will enable them to be selfsustaining, is the most practical item in this entire bill. To provide for their subsistence is a duty that this Government owes to the Eskimos, since they are wards of the Government, just as much as we owe the unemployed throughout the United States an opportunity to earn a living. [Applause.] I believe if we would follow some system such as this and apply it to the other unemployed in the United States, we would be a great deal closer to a solution of our problems today than we are under our present plan.

The Eskimos are wards of this Nation. They are wards of this Nation just the same as the Indians are wards. They are located in an area where living is a hard proposition. When these herds of reindeer are given to the Eskimos it will mean a living for them. It means that those Eskimos are not going to be put on the public pay roll of the United States if this plan works out as we have every reason to believe it will work out. If we could only devise some system to make the other unemployed in this Nation self-supporting and make them the assets to the Nation which they should be,

we would be making progress.

I want to call the attention of the Committee to the fact that in the past several years several commissions have gone to Alaska to investigate this proposition. Last year, I believe, we expended some $50,000 in sending a commission up there to investigate them. This commission has reported favorably upon this proposition. It is not a matter of bailing somebody out of a poor financial investment. It is a matter of practical common sense all too unfamiliar in this day and The real gist of the matter is, are we going to adopt a policy today on the floor of this House whereby we express our willingness to allow some of the wards of this Nation to be self-sustaining? Or, are we going to adopt the same policy toward these people as we have adopted toward the other unemployed of the Nation? Are we going to throw up our hands over the whole situation and admit our total incompetency to work out the salvation of any of the people of this Nation and admit that the dole and W. P. A. are here to stay? If so, it will be all right to deny these Eskimos the reindeer and put them on W. P. A. or on relief. But if we are going to allow these people the same privileges that American citizens should be allowed, if we are going to give them an opportunity to work out their own salvation, then it is necessary that we furnish them in this section of the United States with a means of sustenance which is adaptable to their climate and to their habits.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. FADDIS. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. As I understand this proposition, in Alaska there are two kinds of reindeer-those owned by the natives and those owned by nonnatives. The whole trouble in this matter has been that the native-owned reindeer have mixed with the non-native-owned reindeer and have brought confusion and trouble, and nobody knows to whom these reindeer belong. If we pass the amendment which the committee has proposed, it takes out of operation all the nonnative-owned reindeer and will enable the Eskimos, about whom the gentleman has so eloquently spoken, to have an opportunity to be self-supporting and self-respecting.

Mr. FADDIS. I believe the gentleman is correct. I imagine someone who is better acquainted with the local situation than I am will bring that out in the debate. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and appeal to the Committee to take a practical view of this matter.

I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. The act of Congress approved September 1, 1937 (50 Stat. 900), to provide subsistence for the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska by establishing for them a permanent and self-sustaining economy; to encourage and develop native activity in all branches of the reindeer industry; and for other purposes; included as section 16 thereof, an authorization for the appropriation of $2,000,000 for the use of the Secretary of the Interior in carrying out the provisions of the act.

The Congress at its last session authorized the appointment of a committee to make a survey of the reindeer industry in Alaska and to submit a report of its findings to Congress together with recommendations. This committee visited Alaska during the summer of 1938 and made a thorough study of the situation with respect to the reindeer and the condition of the Eskimos in northwestern Alaska where the reindeer are located.

This committee in its report to Congress recommended that an appropriation be made for the purchase of non-native-owned reindeer, non-native-owned reindeer equipment, and for administrative expenses in carrying out the purposes of the act. In accordance with the expressed wish of Congress and the recommendations of this committee, the Interior Department prepared an estimate and submitted it to Congress through the Bureau of the Budget. The amount of this item now before Congress is less than the amount recommended by the committee. The amount recommended by the Department was $1,370,000, which was identical with the recommendation of the reindeer committee. The amount as approved by the Bureau of the Budget was $1,285,500. The amount before Congress at this time is $1,070,000. The investigating committee's recommendations fixed an average price per head at which reindeer should be purchased of not exceeding $5. This amount was reduced by the Subcommittee on Appropriations to not exceeding $4 per head.

For a number of years there has been a great deal of controversy between the Eskimo owners of reindeer and the nonnative owners of ranges on which the reindeer grazed and the mixing of a considerable number of reindeer owned by nonnatives with the herds owned by natives. As a result of this controversy there has been very little herding of reindeer during the past few years, and the reindeer have tended to stray farther and farther away from the Eskimo villages, becoming wilder each year. In addition, wolves have invaded the reindeer country and are committing very severe depredations among the herds.

At the present time the supervisory personnel consists of only six persons—one acting general reindeer supervisor and They cover a grazing ground five district unit managers. whose area is a third of all Alaska, or 170,000 square miles. Practically all of the local work with the Eskimo stations must of necessity be performed through the teachers in the Indian Service schools. The only possible way to clear up the controversies between the natives and nonnative owners of reindeer is to purchase all non-native-owned deer and such equipment in connection with these reindeer as can be used to advantage. Unless this is done in the near future, it is feared that it will soon be impossible to save the reindeer industry in Alaska for the Eskimos. As stated above, the estimate submitted by the Department was in accordance with the expressed wish of Congress and of the reindeer committee appointed by Congress. The Department of the Interior is of the opinion that the appropriation is needed to save the reindeer industry for the Eskimos in Alaska, but it is, of course, willing to be guided by the judgment of Congress with respect to the appropriation of funds for the administration of the reindeer industry in Alaska.

The object of the appropriation is not, as has been claimed in some quarters, to take care of somebody who failed in business. The merit of such contention is a matter to be worked out by the Secretary of the Interior, who is not to pay more than $4 for each reindeer except on a certain island, where it was pointed out that the situation was more satisfactory in that the population was already self-supporting. The point at issue is whether or not the Government is morally obligated to do something to preserve these reindeer for the benefit of the Eskimo population. They are the source of livelihood for a considerable part of the native people in Alaska. Will these reindeer continue to increase and be available to the natives, whether or not the Government takes control of the situation? Here is the testimony on this subject. This was given by the chairman of the committee which made the investigation last summer, Mr. C. E. Rachford, in reply to our questions, "Are the reindeer increasing or decreasing? Will they require attention? Will they require herding?" He submitted the following figures.

I will not read the names of the places, but in 1932 the grand total of reindeer counted on certain ranges was 123,148. In 1938 the number of reindeer on the same ranges was 26.340, indicating that the reindeer herds are seriously decreasing. Possibly some of them may have drifted to other fields, but there is no question, however, that there have been heavy losses from wolves and from the lack of proper herding. Something has to be done to keep these herds up if these native people are to be kept alive and prosperous.

The next witness was J. Sidney Rood, another expert in charge of the reindeer.

He stated that unless the herds are constantly tended they will steadily disappear. This is evidenced by the following excerpt I read from page 618 of the hearings:

J. Sidney Rood gives the following statement:
"But unless the herds are constantly tended they will gradually "But unless the herds are constantly tended they will gradually disappear. In 1932 the Kivalina Reindeer Co. corralled 42,000 deer; in 1934, 38,000; 15,000 in 1936; only 12,000 in 1937. In 1935 the Selawik corral count was 12,778, whereas in 1937 only 2,722 deer were corralled. At the Kivalina marking of this month the fawn increase was found to be only 10 percent; at Koyuk during July the fawn increase was only 7.3 percent; the Egavik marking of September showed a fawn increase of one-half of 1 percent. Poor success of round-ups and heavy fawn loss is due to the deer being untended while glaciation covers large spots of pasture, to wolf depredation, to the wildness of the reindeer, and so forth."

One of the unit managers in 1936 stated:

wolf depredation, to the wildness of the reindeer, and so forth."
One of the unit managers in 1936 stated:
"The situation is far more serious than reports indicate and far more desperate than reindeer owners and the Government realize. Three years ago, previous to the first appearance of wolves, in the above-mentioned area (Kotzebue) there were between 18,000 and 20,000 reindeer. These herds permitted the butchering of over 4,000 deer annually by the native owners. Today the Noorvick herd numbers less than 1,500 deer, Shungnak has no more than 1,300 deer, and Selawick less than 1,500, a total of not more than 4,300 deer. With the most stringent curtailment of butchering and model herd management, these herds are doomed to extinction within 2 years unless the wolves are completely eliminated or disappear immediately, and we know this will not occur."

The fact is these reindeer herds are being decimated, they are being killed by wolves and possibly disease and hunger. Something must be done by the Government to take care of them as a humanitarian effort. They are a large part of the livelihood of the native people of Alaska, who are spread over one-third of the area of the entire territory.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. SIROVICH. A joint committee of Congress last year went to Alaska to investigate this matter. Has the committee reported that the amendment here offered should be approved?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. These recommendations are almost entirely in line with the committee report except the amount asked for is less.

Mr. KITCHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. I yield.

Mr. KITCHENS. My predecessor in this Congress, Mr. Goodwin, was very instrumental in protecting the seal herds on the Pribilof Islands, a fact which was very successfully used against him in some of his campaigns for reelection. His only object, however, was to try to protect the seal herds. It was charged against him that he was doing it for the benefit of certain people. Does the gentleman believe that the reindeer face the same certainty of destruction as the seal herds did a few years ago?

Mr. SCRUGHAM. If they are not tended and herded that will be their fate, according to the testimony given to the committee in the hearings on the Interior Department bill.

Mr. SIROVICH. This is a conservation measure.

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Yes. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Massingale] for 4 minutes.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Chairman, I do not know a great deal about the reindeer situation in Alaska, but I received the impression, from hearing those who have made some investigation of it, that there seems to be no real ownership of these reindeer. They run at large on the commons of that country and the fellow who has the greatest force of men in his employ is the owner of the larger number of reindeer. The reindeer belong to most anybody who has the authority or the force sufficient to round up the most reindeer when that time of the year comes around; in other words, it is something like buying the birds in the air for the Government of the United States to spend probably $2,000,000 buying reindeer in Alaska.

It seems to me it would be a mistake to authorize the expenditure of more than $1,000,000 to buy reindeer in Alaska when the facts are such that we do not know whether we are getting title to them or not when we buy them. They belong to anybody, and I do not believe we shall get any more title to these reindeer it is proposed to buy in Alaska than we would get to the birds in the air were we to buy the birds that fly over the lands of Alaska.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman realize that it will cost in the neighborhood of $200,000 a year to take care of these reindeer after they are purchased?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I have heard statements to that effect. The fact of the matter is I cannot get any tangible information on these reindeer. While I am pretty liberal minded, so far as I am concerned I am not going to vote for the expenditure of this $1,000,000 in order that somebody may be compensated perhaps for some loss that has been sustained in a reindeer venture in Alaska. I believe such deals should be made upon more of a business basis than apparently exists in this case.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASSINGALE. I yield.

Mr. DIMOND. Has the gentleman read the hearings of the special joint committee appointed by the chairmen of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations, which special committee asserts that ownership of these deer is well established; that every deer the Government will buy belongs to somebody else and that title can be acquired? All the facts relating to the situation are set forth with the greatest degree of detail in the hearings held by that special committee.

Mr. MASSINGALE. Yes; I have read a part of that testimony and I have come to the conclusion that buying these reindeer is not a proper undertaking at this time when the matter of title is so uncertain. There would be no more security of title to the Government if we spend this money for these reindeer than there would be security to title of wild ducks flying over Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. DEMPSEY] for 4 minutes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, almost every Member who has talked against the purchase of these reindeer admits at the outset that he knows nothing whatever about the situation.

The Committee on Territories, of which I was a member, listened carefully to the evidence submitted to us by those who were in a position to tell us intelligently and informatively all the facts. One of the gentlemen who appeared was the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. E. K. Burlew, who the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rich, says, is one of the finest men in the Federal service. I most heartily agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania in that regard, for I have found Mr. Burlew to be a capable, efficient, and most reliable public official. I have no interest in this situation except to be frank and tell the Members of the House what knowledge I obtained as a member of the Committee on Territories. Not only did I listen to those wellinformed people who came before us, but I consulted with Members of the Senate who went to Alaska to investigate this very problem.

They came back and recommended purchase by the Federal Government of these reindeer. Then we sent up another committee, financed with $25,000 which we voted. That committee came back and made the same recommendations.

The situation is quite different from that which has been presented to this House. In the first place, the range is entirely owned by the Federal Governent, and I am advised there will not be reindeer permitted to graze on that domain except those owned by the Eskimos if this bill passes.

Mr. Chairman, the Eskimos were in that country before we obtained Alaska. We have not done very much for them, but we have done much to them. In my opinion, it is simply a question of whether the membership of the House desires to provide relief for the Eskimos for years to come or whether we desire to make them self-sustaining by making this purchase and turning these reindeer over to them.

Mr. SIROVICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.
Mr. SIROVICH. May I call the attention of the distinguished gentleman to the fact that the issue in this matter is just one thing? We have native reindeer owners, the Eskimos, who are trying to make a living, and we have nonnative owners of reindeer whose reindeer intermingle with those of the natives, which bring about quarrels. If we eliminate the nonnative owner, we will have only the Eskimo reindeer owner, who will be able to make a proper living.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The gentleman is correct, and may I say the testimony is conclusive that these reindeer have a brand, the same as cattle in the West have a brand.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.
Mr. CARTER. I am sure the gentleman wants to be accurate. These reindeer are not branded. They have earmer's

Mr. DEMPSEY. I may say to the gentleman from California that whether you put a brand on the rump of a reindeer or you brand him by clipping his ears, it is still a brand which is recognized in Alaska.

Mr. CARTER. It is recognized as a mark.

Mr. DEMPSEY. It is the only way to mark him.

These reindeer are rounded up each year and branded by this earmark. May I say that the Director of the Budget has approved this item; the President of the United States has approved it; the Interior Department has recommended it, and every committee that went to Alaska and knows anything first hand about the matter has recommended this item.

Are we here, thousands and thousands of miles away, going to allow ourselves to be influenced by a bit of ridicule, which is the greatest weapon of destruction, and turn down a proper amendment and a worthy item simply because of ill-founded prejudice? I believe not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobbs] for 4 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, the Good Book says, "Blessed are the peacemakers," and with this we all agree, I am sure. But, in actual practice, all too frequently, the peacemaker gets hurt. So at the risk of being put in the position of the ordinary peacemaker in a neighborhood scrap, very reluctantly do I inject myself into this fight, as one of the middlemen.

The distinguished gentleman who has just taken his seat—and I hold him and his opinion in high esteem—stated that much has been done to the Eskimo by the white man. I would not quarrel with him about that, nor do I admit that I know nothing about this matter for I have studied every word of the hearings. However, I would point out to him that the white man, and the white man's government of the United States, imported 1,280 reindeer into Alaska between 1880 and 1902, and they have now multiplied in the hands of the Eskimos until now their admitted ownership is 320,000 head. So, while we may have done much to the Eskimos, at least we have done that much for them.

There is one single proposition to which I desire to direct my remarks and ask your careful consideration. There is no more intelligent, no more earnest, no more honest man in this House than Anthony J. Dimond. I am using him as the text of my remarks, and I hope that all of you gentlemen, whether you are proponents or opponents of this amendment, will listen to what he has to say.

In addition to other things, there has been mismanagement and very serious mistakes made in administration. Up until 1925, under the leadership of an excellent administrator and a high-minded, self-sacrificing man, William Thomas Lopp, the Eskimos were taught and trained in the herding of reindeer, but along about 1923, when the white men's herds increased, the Government officials were persuaded by the white owners that there was no use herding the reindeer, but that they should be turned out on the range. That was very fine for the white owners, and it was very bad for the natives.

I submit that that statement ought to challenge our serious thought. If we are in the plight we are in today because of an error in judgment and a change of administration and policy adopted with reference to these herds in 1923, then, I ask: Why not correct that error, reverse that trend, and put another man like Mr. Lopp there to see that these Eskimos properly herd their 320,000 Government-gift reindeer and that they are protected and helped in every possible way? This could be done for a few thousand dollars a year instead of the initial million, plus $100,000 a year, which this amendment seeks to appropriate. The Eskimos are entitled to consideration, but so are the taxpayers. We are trustees for the Americans who foot the bills. I am old-fashioned enough to believe that public office is a public trust and that the funds we administer are trust funds. But, again, please let me remind you that, operating as we are under a staggering debt and on borrowed money, we are making a mortgage for our children to pay whenever we appropriate a dollar. We should be awfully sure of our ground before we spend this million, which we do not have, by signing the names of unborn taxpayers to our mounting mortgage. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] for 5 minutes.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was passed at the last session of Congress authorizing the purchase of reindeer in Alaska there certainly was a lot of outside force used to try to put that bill through Congress. We also passed a resolution last year to have a committee investigate the reindeer situation in Alaska because of the fact the bill had been passed authorizing the purchase, and they were to investigate as to whether it was a feasible thing to do. The committee went to Alaska with the idea that it was their duty to see whether these reindeer could be purchased. came back with a report and showed us pictures of what they had done when they went up to Alaska last summer. The committee did the best they knew how and tried to carry out the instructions of Congress, but they found it was a very difficult proposition for them to get over the territory. They went only about half way up through Alaska, and the northern half they did not investigate at all, nor were they in northern Alaska at all.

It seems to me that to spend $1,070,000 in the purchase of 180,000 of these animals, which belong to one company, when there are 43 different nonnative companies or individuals in Alaska who are owners of reindeer, is not right. It is the intent and purpose now, in line with the committee's recommendation, for the Government to go in Alaska and compel everybody to give up their reindeer whether they want to or not. It is not right, it is not just, and it is not honorable that the Government go in and tell the people to give up what they now enjoy, and force this Government into the reindeer industry; buying all the equipment of the Lomen Co. and other concerns. Government in business.

We have taken care of the Eskimos in Alaska, and we are willing to do it, but when we take over these 180,000 reindeer that belong to the Lomen Co., and pay them for them, we are only being a Santa Claus to the Lomen Co. It seems to me we have been a Santa Claus long enough; and it is going to cost us $100,000 to $200,000 a year to take care of the reindeer, if we do buy them. An annual expenditure.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Briefly.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Uncle Sam has played Santa Claus to foreign countries and perhaps that is why they think Santa Claus needs some reindeer.

Mr. RICH. It is all right to have a few reindeer but when we propose now to buy 180,000 reindeer it seems to me the New Deal has gone beyond the point of being a Santa Claus. In my judgment, this is more of a joy ride.

Let us imagine that we would hook 180,000 reindeer to a sleigh and put there as a driver the President. Then we would add those three great Americans without any relatives, Uncle Sam, Santa Claus, and Charley McCarthy. Then we would load on the sleigh all the Members of Congress and would start down Constitution Avenue. We would then drive out to the Blue Ridge Highway, 800 feet wide, and would take a sleigh ride over that Blue Ridge Highway to the Natchez Trace Highway down in Mississippi. We would have to strew cotton all along this pathway to get rid of the cotton we owned, so we would have something that looked like snow. Then we would go up through the shelter belt, clear up through the northern part of this country, with this sleigh load. Do you think every Member of the Congress would want to hang onto a sleigh like that? Yet that is what we are doing, wasting the Government's money on a joy ride with Santa Claus. We are now becoming too much of a Santa Claus and trying to hand things out to the people of this country; what we want to do for our people is get jobs for them. What we want to do is to establish confidence in the minds of the people of this country. We have to get out and work. We need jobs. We need confidence restored. We are not going to do it by being a Santa Claus to everybody especially to Members of Congress. It is time we

What we should do is to permit the reindeer to remain in the possession of those who now own them and let them handle the reindeer as they see fit. We have more reindeer in Alaska now than is necessary for the Eskimos. The Eskimos will be taken care of because they have the opportunity to go out and get reindeer to furnish them food and supplies. No Eskimo in Alaska is going to suffer nor will any Eskimo starve. We have tried to do our best to take care of them. It is not necessary to waste $1,070,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] for 1 minute.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, any individual or concern that has a legitimate claim against the Government of the United States has my sincere sympathy. The opponents of this proposition have tried to kill it off with sarcasm. The preceding speaker, for whom I have the highest regard, plainly shows that he either withheld certain information from the committee or is not aware of it.

I happen to have been born in a country where they had the same problem as exists in Alaska. I refer to Norway. Over in the Arctic Circle region there are natives called the Laplanders. The Government bought and turned over reindeer to them as a means of subsistence hundreds of years ago. Today these people are absolutely self-sufficient and are self-governing to a large extent, and the Government spends nothing for their maintenance. If we do not pass this legislation, we are going to have a permanent problem on our hands up in Alaska. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Carter] for 5 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement of the gentleman who has just preceded me, turn to page 55 of this bill and you will see about this permanent problem in Alaska. Begin at line 14, "Natives in Alaska," and then turn to the next page, where you will find nearly $1,000,000 is provided for the maintenance of the Eskimos and other natives of Alaska, the exact sum being $951,380. They are cared for very well; in fact, much better than many of our citizens here.

This is for the education, medical attention, and everything else that these natives of Alaska need.

Now, there are just two problems in Alaska relative to this reindeer situation, and one of them is range management. There has been a conflict of interests there among the various owners. This has caused much trouble and can be worked out by the Interior Department. The second is that there is an overproduction of reindeer in Alaska at the present time. The Eskimos of Alaska have more reindeer at the present time than they can possibly consume, and anybody who will read the hearings cannot find one single line in there to the effect that there is any shortage of reindeer. They cannot find one request on the part of the natives of Alaska for additional reindeer.

I would like to quote from Mr. Baldwin, one of the men who invested some money in Alaska and who at a hearing on this matter, said:

No outlet has been provided for the Eskimo herds.

He was talking about the surplus reindeer that the Eskimos have—

This must be found or their herds will devastate the winter ranges of northwestern Alaska and ruin its reindeer industry.

I have read all the testimony I could get hold of in reference to this matter, and my firm conviction, based on the statements of these gentlemen from Alaska and my interrogation of them, is that every Eskimo in Alaska has all the reindeer he needs at the present time, and that there is absolutely no occasion to buy these 180,000 additional reindeer that belong to the nonnative owners.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CARTER. I regret I cannot yield at this time.

Now turning to the amendment that was offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, while there is a limitation of $4 per head on some of these reindeer, I want to call your attention to the fact that there is no limitation as to the purchase price of the reindeer that are to be purchased from those ranging on the island of Nunivak. That is an island of 1,000,000 acres of land. The largest company, backed by New York interests, is the one that has its range on that island. How many deer on this island no one knows, but the owners are in a position to get any price that might be agreed upon or any price that a jury in Alaska would say was a reasonable price for those deer.

I was interested in the questions of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sirovich] who, the humanitarian that he is, is thinking of the welfare of these natives. I want to assure you, my good friend, I share your views and the solicitude that you have for those people. I want to see them well cared for. They have all the reindeer they need. They have 380,000 reindeer there at the present time and there are only 15,000 Eskimos in all of Alaska, according to the special committee which visited Alaska last summer. What they want and what the investigations disclose they need, is direction in reference to the care, propagation, and the rearing of these reindeer. They need someone to come in there and assign the ranges to the various individuals and give the natives instruction in raising these herds. This purchase is not necessary. [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak briefly on this matter. Has the time for debate been limited? The CHAIRMAN. The time has been limited.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, if you Members who are discussing this reindeer problem will give me your attention for about 3 minutes and not disturb me, I think I can give you a real business statement about this affair.

The United States Government paid to Russia $7,200,000 for the entire Alaskan country. We have taken out of Alaska since that time something more than $2,000,000,000. For each dollar we put in there we have taken out $277. Each year we do $180,000,000 worth of business with Alaska, $80,000,000 of that comes here and $40,000,000 goes to Alaska.

The Eskimos are and always have been our charge and always will be until they come to a point where they can stand on their own feet.

The Americans who went to Alaska did these things to the people of Alaska: When they went there the caribou was plentiful and abundant for all the Eskimos there were in Alaska at that time. The Americans went there and slaughtered the caribou and thereby took away from the Eskimos their meat source. The white people practically destroyed the whaling industry from which the people of Alaska obtained a large part of their food supply. We reduced the number of seals very largely and have beaten the Eskimo to the taking of the seal fur. The same is true of the walrus. American hunters and trappers are so much better equipped than the Eskimos that they have taken from the Eskimos the ability to hunt and get the furs that they used to use for their clothing, supplies, and the like. The reindeer came in there at the time the caribou was just about extinct. They do provide a very much stronger animal and they have thrived well there and will go on thriving well in Alaska. This bill will return to the Eskimo the meat supply which the destruction of the caribou took away from them

We cannot go on with a diversified interest of ownership there, because the stronger ones, just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] said that whoever had the force got the reindeer, of course. There is only one solution therefore, and that is to buy out at $4 a head the reindeer that are there now and turn them totally over to the people of Alaska, the Eskimos, in place of the caribou we took from them. It is a small enough reward and, certainly, the least thing we can possibly do along that line, and when we have done that, we will have done what we ought to do for these people, and until we do, we will not have done so. It is not only a business proposition, but a proposition of justice and humanity that we ought not to dodge, and we are not so poor that we have to mistreat our wards in Alaska or any place else.

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. KELLER. Yes.

Mr. SIROVICH. Supplementing the very splendid address the gentleman is making, I call his attention to the fact that in the exploitation of Alaska, from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000 worth of salmon and other fish are taken every year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, during my service in this House I have given considerable study to our military prob-There is no part of this great country that offers us the military protection that does Alaska. Look at your maps and you will see that Nome and other cities of Alaska are nearer to many of the cities of the Orient than they are to many of the cities on the Pacific coast of the United States. In my opinion, Alaska offers greater military protection to this country than does Hawaii or the Aleutian Islands. When I make that statement I am giving you not only my own opinion but also the best thought of the best-informed military men in this country. It has been known for the last 10 years that we must build in Alaska a strong, well-constructed air base in the vicinity of Nome or some other Alaskan city. That means that there will be a large military force in Alaska, especially a large air force, capable, if necessary, of going to most any part of the Orient over a land route, not a water route. I know nothing about the ownership of these reindeer and I care not about that, but I do insist that as a military protection, our country should see to it that reindeer are preserved for the food and clothing necessary for the armed forces of the United States located in Alaska. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I want to state what appears to me to be the justice of the amendment offered. United States Government can take the 49 nonnative Eskimo owners out of the picture without paying them a single penny, if we think that is just and ought to be done. Of these 49 owners, 42 are Laplanders, 4 of them are missions, and 3 are corporations. We can charge a range fee for the next 2 or 3 years, as we do here in continental United States, and they will have to surrender all their property, because they could not afford to pay such fee. These people went into the matter of having reindeer in good faith, and I feel that they should be paid, rather than to take them. We cannot pay what they want, but enough so that the Government can get rid of this eternal conflict that exists between the native Eskimo and the white owner. This is what we finally agreed to do in this bill. I was not for this matter and did not believe in it at first, but after the matter was presented in these hearings, nearly 100 pages, I changed my mind; and if you will read them, they will convince every one of you that it would be grossly unfair for this great Government of ours to say, "We will confiscate your property." What we do say here is, "We will not give you what you ask for your deer, but we will give you what they are reasonably worth under the unusual conditions there prevailing." In the end I was convinced that it would be money in the hands of the United States to own the reindeer, unless we want the Eskimos to starve to death, because that is the only source of living for 50 percent of the Eskimos of Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. DIMOND. Mr. Chairman, I am not any more anxious than any other Member of Congress or any other citizen of the United States to spend the money of the Government, but unless this item is kept in the bill, the Eskimos of Alaska and the people of the United States are sure to lose a very valuable resource, because unless the reindeer are herded and taken care of, unless the industry is administered for the Eskimos, and principally by the Eskimos, but to some extent by the aid of the Federal Government, I know that in 20 years there will not be enough reindeer left in Alaska to fill this Hall of Congress.

An error has been made in the debate as to the number of Eskimos in Alaska. I have before me a report of the census of 1930, which lists 19,028 Eskimauan people in Alaska at that time, instead of the figure furnished by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. Carter]. In addition to the Eskimos there are, in my judgment, 5,000 other native people, Indians, who desperately need reindeer in order that they may have a supply of food and clothing. They have no reindeer at the present time and there is no reasonable chance that they can get any reindeer unless an appropriation is made to buy the deer now owned by others than natives of Alaska. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY] stated it well. We do not have to spend a cent to get all these white men's deer. We can expropriate them, or confiscate them, or take them under some other name if we want to enter upon that policy of confiscation. If you want to adopt that policy of confiscation, I leave it to you to do it, because I refuse to be a party to it, and because I think it is better for everybody to confiscate the reindeer owned by the white men than to permit the present condition to continue. I, for one, reject the very concept of expropriation.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DIMOND. Not now. Mr. Chairman, I have some pride in the position of this Government in rejecting the idea that when one man, one nation, one government wants the property of its citizens or the property of some other citizens, it can expropriate that property. I hope we will forever reject that doctrine.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Is it not a fact that this is a matter of humane necessity and a solemn obligation on the part of the Federal Government to preserve these reindeer from extinction, and in doing that to preserve the Eskimos from becoming extinct?

Mr. DIMOND. The distinguished gentleman is quite right. It is a matter of humanity. In addition to that, it is good business policy to preserve the reindeer, because if they are taken care of now, the day is not far distant when we will have a million reindeer in Alaska; and the time may soon come when that resource of food will be of the utmost consequence to the people of the United States.

It has been said that the special committee sent to Alaska has not said that we needed the extra reindeer. On page 544 of the hearings we find the testimony of the chairman of the committee:

Now, the question was also raised as to whether the 500,000 deer would be necessary to supply the needs of the natives. It is the judgment of the committee that it will require the 500,000 head to furnish all the natives with all of their requirements for food and clothing.

So the question was answered. The committee whom you trusted to go to Alaska to secure for you information about this subject has returned with the information and says that it is a wise thing to purchase all of the reindeer, and that it is the only alternative to extermination of the reindeer of Alaska.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. If the reindeer are essential for the sustenance and welfare of your people, then we should do for them what we have done for the people of this country in conserving the soil which we say is necessary to sustain the people of America. We are spending money in every State of this Union to save our soil, just as you want to save the reindeer industry necessary to those people.

Mr. DIMOND. That is quite right.
Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIMOND. I yield.

Mr. GREEN. Did it not develop in the Committee on Territories when we held hearings on this bill that this was the only logical and right thing to do in the premises?

Mr. DIMOND. Of course, Mr. Chairman, the able chairman of the Committee on Territories is absolutely right. This whole proposition was argued out on the floor of this House in 1937 and the House passed the bill authorizing and directing the purchase of reindeer and authorizing an appropriation of $2,000,000 for the purchase of the non-nativeowned reindeer and reindeer-range equipment and to establish a native Alaska reindeer industry.

May I remind the House again that the Eskimos and Indians of Alaska are considered in the Department of the Interior, and by the Congress, to be the wards of the Government and, as a consequence, the Government of the United States is under the highest obligation to do whatever is reasonable and right for the welfare of the Alaska natives. When the white men came to Alaska they took pretty much what they wanted and paid comparatively little attention to the age-old rights and claims of the Indians and Eskimos. In northwestern Alaska the advent of the white man was accompanied by a large degree of exhaustion of the food supply of the Eskimos. As the gentleman from California [Mr. Carter] has pointed out, the Federal Government is giving recognition to its duty by making increasingly adequate appropriations for the education and the medical assistance of the natives. But education and medical aid, and even the very small amount included in the bill for relief of destitution of the natives, are not sufficient. As a matter of wise policy, as well as a matter of justice, the Government should take reasonable measures to insure to the natives a self-sustaining economy, and it was in obedience to that moral mandate that Congress in 1937 passed the Reindeer Act. To nullify that piece of wise and beneficient legislation by a refusal to make an appropriation in pursuance to the authority of that act would be indeed a tragedy for the natives of Alaska, and a tragedy also for the people of the Nation as a whole.

It is a singular and comforting circumstance, Mr. Chairman, that as Members of this body learn more of the Eskimos, and of the natives of Alaska, and of the reindeer, and of all of the problems involved in the legislation now under consideration, they are the more convinced that the Reindeer Act offers the only permanent solution of those problems. When this matter was first brought to the attention of the Appropriations Subcommittee several years ago, I doubt if a single member of the subcommittee favored the legislation. But as the members of the subcommittee became more fully acquainted with the facts of the subject and with actual conditions they were irresistibly forced to the conclusion that the legislation was meritorious and wise. The able gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] has candidly stated to the House that he at first opposed the reindeer bill but, with more complete knowledge, he now is convinced that the reindeer legislation was well conceived, and he definitely supports the appropriation carried in the bill now before us. My only regret is that all of the Members of this body are unable to take the time to become as well informed on the subject as are the members of the Territories Committee, who reported out and carried through the Reindeer Act, and the members of the Appropriations Committee, who support this appropriation. It is particularly reassuring and of the highest consequence to me personally that the able and distinguished chairman of the House Appropriations Committee [Mr. Taylor] has just now expressed his whole-hearted approval of the reindeer legislation and of the appropriations now sought. The House knows that he would not recommend this appropriation unless he had full knowledge of the subject and unquestioned conviction of the wisdom of making the appropriation.

But the best and most convincing example of the way in which comprehensive knowledge of the facts leads to the conclusion that the Reindeer Act is right and that the appropriation, now under consideration, should be made is to be found in the report of the special committee which made a complete investigation of the whole matter last summer.

Last Friday I put in the RECORD excerpts from the printed report of that committee showing the unequivocal recommendation of the committee that the Reindeer Act should be carried out by purchase of the non-native-owned reindeer and reindeer-range equipment. If this special committee represented the executive branch of the Government, we might justly be more skeptical of its conclusions and recommendations. But the members of the committee are able and distinguished men. They received their appointments by the chairmen of the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate. The members of that special committee are responsible to the Congress of the United States and not to any administrative or executive agency of the Government. That committee made a thorough, complete, and comprehensive survey of all of the various factors involved in the ownership, breeding, and use of reindeer in Alaska. The committee has warned us that if things are allowed to go on as they are the inevitable end will be the total elimination of the reindeer just as the caribou were eliminated in the early days. A reference to pages 581 and 582 of the hearings embraces this part of the committee's report. The report of the committee clearly shows that the reindeer of Alaska must be herded continuously for otherwise they will eventually be exterminated; that the reindeer owned by the natives and nonnatives are inextricably intermingled so that if the natives herd their own deer they must by force of circumstances herd also the white men's deer and, I know that the natives will feel a sense of outrage at being obliged to do any such thing; that the natives are in actual need of all of the reindeer now in Alaska, and that if the natives who now have no reindeer are adequately supplied with them the total number of reindeer required for such purpose cannot be supplied from those now owned by the natives; that the natives need additional range for their reindeer and that many of the non-native-owned reindeer now occupy the best and most accessible range; that the white men's reindeer tend to increase faster than the natives' herds because the natives must kill a good many reindeer in the course of a year to supply themselves with food and clothing; that if all of the reindeer are not under control-such a control as would be exercised by ownership in the natives and supervision by the Government-some of the best reindeer ranges will be ruined for years and years through overgrazing; and perhaps most important of all, that the reindeer largely unherded are already being startlingly reduced in numbers through straying and, more particularly, through the inroads of wolves and coyotes, for we see from the report of Mr. Rood, the reindeer superintendent, that the Kivalina herd has been reduced in 5 years from 42,000 to 12,000 reindeer, and the Selawik herd from approximately 13,000 to approximately 3.000 reindeer.

Such reductions are not isolated instances but are fairly typical of what is happening to the reindeer of Alaska. I know from personal conversations that the Eskimos are alarmed, confused at the conflicting policies of the Government, and outraged at the stupidity which has permitted the present condition to come into existence.

The natives of Alaska, Mr. Chairman, are among the most kindly and lovable people in the world. Tom Lopp has called them, and I quote, "a kindly, pleasant, smiling people." As I said last Friday, many of them will share everything they have to the last ounce of food not only with their children. relatives, and friends, but even with the stranger within their gates. Sometimes I think it may have been an Eskimo who gave us the example of the Good Samaritan. It seems a tragic pity that this race which offers so much promise should be in such grave danger of economic disaster at the present moment. I am thoroughly convinced that the faithful carrying out of the Reindeer Act, and that is what is sought in the appropriation here offered, will remove from the Eskimos and many of the Indians of Alaska, the ever-present threat of gradual starvation and provide them with what, in the language of the Reindeer Act, is called a self-sustaining economy. What we seek here is social security for the natives of Alaska and the price to be paid for it is really infinitesimal when compared with the benefits which are bound to flow from the conservation of the Alaska reindeer. May I refer particularly to pages 538, 539, 542, 544, 564, 581, 582, 607, 612, and 613 of the hearings.

Much has been said during the debate to the effect that this appropriation is for the benefit of some of the nonnative owners of reindeer. Nothing could be further from the truth. Those of us who support the appropriation requested are animated only by the desire to aid and make self-supporting some 20,000 to 25,000 natives of Alaska through the establishment of a true reindeer industry, and at the same time treat fairly and justly the nonnatives who may be required to sell their reindeer and reindeer-range equipment. First and last, Mr. Chairman, this measure is designed to aid and assist the natives of Alaska. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLMER. The parliamentary situation, as I understand it, is that the question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]. If that amendment is voted down, the appropriation for the reindeer goes out of the bill. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no section in the bill at the present time. This amendment is necessary for the inclusion of the reindeer section.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma) there were ayes 96 and noes 101. Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma and Mr. Rich to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided, and the tellers reported there were ayes 113 and noes 151.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For the Commissioner of Reclamation and other personal services in the District of Columbia, $115,000; for travel and other necessary expenses, $35,000, including not to exceed $15,000 for printing and binding; in all, $150,000.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday I informed the Committee as to what would happen with the slum clearance in the large cities if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] was adopted.

I have received the following telegram today:

As chairman of the American Federation of Labor housing committee I request that every effort be made to defeat the amendament offered limiting the cost of the United States housing appropriation to $3,500 for each family. Average costs are now below this figure, but in larger cities where low-cost housing is needed most it does exceed this limitation in some instances. I hope the friends of labor in the House will rally to your support in defeating this amendment.

That is signed "Harry C. Bates, chairman of the American Federation of Labor."

I hope the Members will realize when this amendment comes before the House that they will not repudiate the contracts and obligations made by the United States Government to the local authorities, and they will vote down that amendment. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I yield.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. How does John L. Lewis and his crowd stand on that?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I did not hear from John L. Lewis; but I will support any legislation that is beneficial to the workers of this country no matter who makes the recommendation. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Yakima project, Washington: For operation and maintenance, $260,000: Provided, That not to exceed $25,000 from power revenues shall be available during the fiscal year 1940 for operation and maintenance of the power system.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 68 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, what is the nature of the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. It pertains to Indian roads, page 68, line 15.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to returning to that item.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Cartwright: On page 68, line 15, strike out "$2,250,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$2,500,000."

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I often marvel at the industry and devotion to duty of members of the Appropriations Committee when I think of their untiring and unselfish work in connection with a big bill like the Interior Department bill under consideration. In return for their conscientious delving into mountains of detail, and their patient and courteous dealing with scores of people of all types with pleas or demands for more and more money, instead of thanks and expressions of appreciation for their labors they more frequently receive criticism and condemnation from Members and others specially interested in some particular item.

In reporting a bill providing for several million dollars less than the Budget Bureau recommended, the Appropriations Committee is doubtless performing an unpleasant duty. My feeling is one of commendation rather than criticism.

And I have been reluctant to offer an amendment to increase this item. I do so only because I feel very strongly and sincerely that the Indian road work now being carried on in 23 States should not be curtailed.

The record shows that about 65 percent of the Indian road money is paid to needy Indians for labor. Many of these Indians gladly work for $1 a day, and they all take pride in these special Indian road projects. The work is being carried on very efficiently under the able direction of Mr. Morgan Pryse, and of capable engineers in the field, like Mr. Eugene Wheeler, of Muskogee, in my State. Good, serviceable roads and bridges that are badly needed are being built in an economical manner and with a minimum of administrative cost.

Indian road work has been carefully considered for years by the Roads Committee, and for the past 4 years Congress has authorized the sum of $4,000,000 annually for this purpose, to be apportioned to about 200 Indian reservations in more than 20 States. Road improvements play a vital part in the education, health, agriculture, forestry, and other Indian Service activities.

A road program cannot be properly planned or economically operated unless the regularly authorized amounts are appropriated, and there can be some continuity and stability about it.

Congress appropriated $4,000,000 for Indian road work in the fiscal year 1936, $3,500,000 in 1937, $3,000,000 in 1938, and $3,000,000 in 1939. The House unanimously passed the Cartwright bill last year, which authorized $4,000,000 for each of the years 1940 and 1941 for this purpose. The Senate, as part of a general reduction movement, reduced the Indian road authorization to $2,500,000 for 1940 and $3,000,000 for

The Department requested $4,500,000 for this work for 1940, and the hearings show the fullest justification for an appropriation of $7,000,000. Surely we are not justified in reducing this amount below the $2,500,000 authorized by the Hayden-Cartwright Act, which unanimously passed both Houses of Congress last year. If we adopt this amendment we still leave $2,000,000 of previous authorizations for this purpose unappropriated, and provide $500,000 less for next year than the amount appropriated last year and the year

May I quote a statement I made before the appropriations committee when it held hearings on this bill:

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, as chairman of the House Committee on Roads and as Representa-tive of the Third Congressional District of Oklahoma where thousands of the poorest Indians in the United States exist, we could hardly say live, I am greatly interested in good roads and Indian employment. I have made special effort to look into Indian affairs and Indian road work in particular. I am glad to say that the Indian Service road work has been carried on efficiently and the Indian Service road work has been carried on emciently and to the great benefit of the Indians in Oklahoma, both as to completion of good, serviceable roads and bridges and the furnishing of employment to Indians in my State.

The Hayden-Cartwright Act provided for an appropriation of $4,000,000 per year for continuation of Indian roads, although I must say Congress has not appropriated the full amounts, as authorized.

Upon inquiry, I find that the Bureau of Public Roads and the Indian Service, in cooperation, have made engineering surveys covering a 5-year plan, and that the Indian Office, if it keeps up with ering a 5-year plan, and that the Indian Office, if it keeps up with its end of the program, should have $8,000,000 per year. Therefore, the request for four or five million dollars per year is indeed very conservative and will allow an average of approximately $20,000 per Indian reservation, of which there are some 175 to 200 scattered throughout 23 States. Every dollar spent on roads means over $3 in business turn-over in this country. Gentlemen, it is self-supporting through gas and other tax from the road user. I am sure this committee can develop by inquiry the facts and figures bearing out the excellent results obtained by Indian Affairs in road building and the need of continuing road and relief employment among the Indians.

employment among the Indians.

Mr. Chairman and ladies and gentlemen of the Committee, I earnestly urge you to support this amendment and increase this item for Indian roads to $2,500,000, the amount both the House and Senate last year unanimously authorized. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment because in my district there are six Indian reservations, supporting in the neighborhood of 27,000 Indians. In some of these reservations road work has already been started; and if we are not allowed more money for the construction of our roads in these reservations, we shall not be giving the Indians the same kind of square deal we are giving the white men in this country.

I have heard criticism upon the floor of the House with reference to appropriations and bills favoring Indians. Let me call attention to the fact that the Indians are an involuntary subjected race. We forced the relationship of guardian and ward upon the Indian against his protest. The least we can do for them today is to give them what they are reasonably entitled to.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Following out that same idea, may I say to the Committee that in my State the Apache Indians, known for their fighting qualities, have been among the best workers in road construction and all that sort of thing. I could make the same truthful statement concerning Pimas, Papagos, and some other Indians.

One more point, if the gentleman will permit me to take another half minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. There are a half dozen large Indian reservations in my State, where we have a total of at least 50,000 Indians. In building a State highway system north and south and east and west across Arizona the highways must cross Indian reservations. Without the help, therefore, that this amendment would give, the road-construction work in this vast territory will be greatly hampered. For this reason, I favor the amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Let me also call attention to the fact that in the Crow Indian Reservation a highway is under construction that has been needed for years. The Crow Indians, we must remember, are the one tribe that stands out in the history of this country as making the greatest Indian contribution to the civilization of the West through the aid it rendered to the Army in connection with quieting down the troublesome Indians.

Unless we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, curtailment of work on this needed road will take place. Let us treat the Indians as we ourselves want to be treated. I am now appealing to gentlemen on the Republican side of the House who are always talking economy. I believe in economy just as much as any Member of this House, but I do not believe in economy at the expense of humanity and at the expense of the red man. [Applause.]

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we have another confession today from a New Deal leader, the gentleman who proposed the pending amendment. In the Well of the House a few moments ago he admitted that the Federal Government, the Department of the Interior, administered by Mr. Ickes, is violating the New Deal wage and hour law by employing Indians at $1 a day.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I did not say they were employing Indians at $1 per day. I said that we must not overlook these good, honest, hard-working Indians. We have a lot of them. There are 10,000 of them who want work.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman does not mean to tell me that he is standing on the floor of the House and advocating that the Federal Government, through the department managed by Mr. Ickes, shall violate the fundamental New Deal principle enunciated in the wage-hour law?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. No; I do not intend that, and the gentleman knows I do not.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I sincerely hope that the members of the Republican Party who are in charge of this bill will offer a motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations for further study with instructions to report the bill back to the House with the total amount appropriated in the bill reduced not less than 25 percent, and get a roll call to let the people of the country know who acts as well as talks in favor of economy. This bill is loaded with unnecessary and indefensible appropriations, including political pork and reindeer.

This New Deal drunken spending spree must be checked or the time will soon be at hand when the American Government will be bankrupt. We will then have inflation with resultant hardships, suffering, misery, and distress such as this Nation has never before witnessed.

We have observed in the press recently that the New Deal, under the direction of Secretary of State Hull and Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau is going to build a pipe line from the Federal Treasury to the South American dictatorship countries to carry many millions of the American taxpayers' hard-earned dollars into South American countries, which are now in default in their obligations to American investors, who are holding the bag to the tune of almost $300,000,000. The operation of this Hull-Morgenthau pipe line will further help wreck our American cotton industry in the South. The facts show that under the New Deal, Triple A production-for-destruction program conceived and put into operation by Prof. Mordecai Ezekiel, the South has already lost a great part of their cotton export market to Brazil. Now the New Deal plans to hand Brazil almost a hundred million of our American taxpayers' dollars in order to make it easy for that dictatorship-controlled country to absorb the rest of the American cotton export market.

I am opposed to the Hull-Morgenthau-New Deal Brazilian pipe-line drain on our Federal Treasury. In the fight on this raid I will take the place of some of the representatives of the cotton farmers in the South who ran out on them in order to rubber stamp internationally minded Mr. Hull and Mr. Morgenthau, who seem to think more of people in foreign lands than those in America. [Applause.]

Mr. LEAVY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LEAVY. I want to ask the gentleman what his views are on the pending amendment?

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. The gentleman knows my record. I said that I am opposed to the amendment. I am in favor of reducing the total appropriation provided in this bill not less than 25 percent and to go on record on a roll-call vote. I believe in practicing economy, not merely rendering economy lip service the way you New Deal Democrats have done during and since the 1932 elections.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I have sat here in my seat almost since the beginning of this session. I came here believing that every man who is a Member of this body is a Member of the greatest parliamentary body in the whole world and I still believe that. I am anxious that the Record be kept straight.

I see in the balcony some young people, some school people, who have come here to watch their Representatives in session. I am anxious that they get a proper idea concerning this great body.

I have heard the gentleman from Wisconsin, the man who made Milwaukee famous, stand upon this floor a good many times. He is an estimable gentleman. I like him very much when he is not in the Well of this House. I have seen him come out with a hand that only he possesses, a hand like a ham, and grasp this delicate instrument until it groaned from mad torture. I have seen him come on the floor and stamp up and down like a wild man.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I demand that the gentleman's words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York demands that the words of the gentleman be taken down. The gentleman from California will take his seat.

The gentleman from New York will indicate to the Clerk the words objected to.

Mr. TABER. "Stamping like a wild man" and "a hand like a ham."

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, I am not objecting to the words. I will handle him at a later date.

Mr. TABER. I believe the integrity of the rules of the House should be preserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the words taken down at the request of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

I have seen him come on the floor and stamp up and down like a wild man.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, there were some other words about "a hand like a ham."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the additional words.

The Clerk read as follows:

I have seen him come out with a hand that only he possesses, a hand like a ham, and grasp this delicate instrument until it groaned from mad torture.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buck, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4852), the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, certain words used in debate were objected to and, on request, were taken down and read at the Clerk's desk, and that he herewith reported the same to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words objected to in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the

The Clerk read as follows:

I have seen him come out with a hand that only he possesses, a hand like a ham, and grasp this delicate instrument until it groaned from mad torture. I have seen him come on the floor and stamp up and down like a wild man.

The SPEAKER. The rule governing situations of this character provides as follows:

OF DECORUM AND DEBATE

When any Member desires to speak or deliver any matter to the House he shall rise and respectfully address himself to "Mr. Speaker," and, on being recognized, may address the House from any place on the floor or from the Clerk's desk, and shall confine himself to the question under debate, avoiding personality.

The words objected to and which have been taken down and read from the Clerk's desk very patently violate the rule, because the words alleged do involve matters of personal reference and personality.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the gentleman who had the floor had any intention of violating the rules. He was just carried away by the debate. I rise to ask if the words cannot be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The words can be withdrawn by unanimous consent.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Wisconsin for his very generous attitude, and I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the words in question.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Committee will resume its sitting. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852, with Mr. Buck in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for $3\frac{1}{2}$ minutes.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GEYER of California. I do not yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOTT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the proceeding just had takes the gentleman off the floor, and he may proceed only by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may state that, by unanimous consent, the House permitted the gentleman to withdraw his words. That leaves the gentleman in the position he was before the words were uttered.

The gentleman from California will proceed.

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a further parliamentary in-

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. GEYER of California. I do not care to yield for another one, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOTT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has not expired. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Chairman, I think it is very fine of the gentleman from Wisconsin to take the attitude he has taken. I want to continue in the same vein without, of course, doing or saving anything that is unbecoming a Member in this Well.

Mr. MOTT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order. Mr. GEYER of California. So I wish to say to you that this matter of attacking these New Deal agencies

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman is not addressing himself to his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman has not proceeded far enough for the Chair to ascertain whether or not he is speaking to the amendment. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman just said he was proceeding along the same line.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. GEYER of California. This amendment to the Interior appropriation bill, which has been opposed by the splendid gentleman from Wisconsin, I believe is particularly-

Mr. MOTT. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOTT. I make the point of order that the gentleman is clearly not addressing himself to his amendment, which was to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is an amendment to the pending amendment. The gentleman may proceed and discuss the Interior appropriation bill.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the dilatory tactics of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Morri are out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed in order. Mr. GEYER of California. Now, when it comes to deciding on this amendment, let us not be carried away by emotion. Let us remember little Spotty in the story of the Big Bad Wolf. Let us not worry about those, whoever they may be, in discussing this amendment that huff and puff and puff and huff as though they were going to blow the New Deal house in. [Laughter.] Let us remember that the New Deal is like Spotty's house, built out of brick and firm, and when the huffing and the puffing comes let us do as little Spotty did and let us remember like little Spotty that music hath charms to soothe even a wild beast-the big bad wolf. [Laughter and applause.] So let us say, along with little Spotty-

Who's afraid of the big bad wolf, The big bad wolf, the big bad wolf? Who's afraid of the big bad wolf? Tra-la-la-la-la-la.

So I hope that everyone here will not vote along with my splendid friend the gentleman from Wisconsin. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order the House is not in order. The gentleman should be given a respectful hearing.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that when the gentleman from California yodels the House ought to be in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Chairman, I submit that when the gentleman from California yodels he is not addressing himself to the amendment. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will suspend. The gentleman from California [Mr. GEYER] is entitled to a respectful hearing, and the Committee will be in order.

Mr. KNUTSON. Do we have to listen to the yodeling? Mr. GEYER of California. In conclusion, let me say this:

This fine gentleman from Wisconsin is one of the finest men on the floor, and to the people who are spectators I may say he really does not mean these things. He is being complimentary, and we love him; we love him, every one of us; but I do hope that you will remember which is the proper way to vote when it comes to the amendment on the matter which we have before us. [Applause.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I have great respect and admiration for the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Cartwright], who has done such splendid work in building up the road system of our country. As chairman of the Committee on Roads, he has been responsible in large degree for the legislation which has built the splendid network of highways throughout this broad country; but I suggest to him that this amendment is not exactly the right way to secure an addition to the road appropriations.

The committee has considered this item very carefully, we have gone over it very systematically, and we ask that the decision of the committee be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Cartwright) there were—ayes 25, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Paonia project, Colorado, $300,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 83, line 17, strike out

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment for the purpose of making a statement in reference to some of the items we have now on this page—the Gila project, the Colorado-Big Thompson project, Colorado, $1,500,000; the Paonia project in Colorado, $300,000.

All of these projects could be cut down 50 percent, and it would be for the best interest of the country, but I call your attention particularly to this Paonia project.

When the committee put this amount in the bill there was no Budget estimate for it. The Bureau of the Budget had not acted upon it when we reported out the bill on March 8. On March 11 the President of the United States approved a Budget estimate for the item. It does not seem to me the committee should approve these items without having a Budget estimate previous to the time when the committee reports out the bill, even if the chairman of the committee requests it.

I want to call your attention to the fact also that we could offer numerous amendments here, but in view of the present temper of the House and the fact the Members want to get through with the bill, I question whether there would be any good consequences from such action. However, we are going to offer a motion to recommit this bill and ask for a certain percentage of reduction, and I hope the Members of the House. whether on the Republican or on the Democratic side, who are interested in economy will vote for the motion to recommit.

The genial chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], has always been a friend to all the Members of the House, and he is very desirous of having this appropriation made, as it will probably be the last project he will ever ask for, and we all love him and we all think he is a fine gentleman, and I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WHITTINGTON). The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to withdraw the pending amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Tucumcari project, New Mexico, $250,000.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to call the attention of Members of the House to this project, the Tucumcari project in New Mexico. They expended two and a half million dollars on that project through the P. W. A. before the Budget would recommend going ahead with it. It does not seem right for us to squander two and a half million dollars before we bring a project to the point where the Bureau of the Budget would recommend further expenditure of funds upon it. I call it to the attention of the House to show some of the things we are doing. We ought to be careful and ought not to spend money foolishly, which we certainly are doing.

The Clerk read as follows:

General investigations: To enable the Secretary of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, to carry on engineering and economic investigations of proposed Federal reclamation projects, surveys for reconstruction, rehabilitation, or extensions of existing projects, and studies of water conservation and development plans, including Colorado River Basin investigations, such investigations, surveys, and studies to be carried on by said Bureau either independently, or, if deemed advisable by the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with State agencies and other Federal agencies, including the Corps of Engineers, National Resources Committee, and the Federal Power Commission, $400,000.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Gilchrist: On page 84, strike out from lines 12 and 13 the words, "proposed Federal reclamation projects" and also from line 15, strike out the words "and development plans."

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, I am quite conscious that what I have to say here will be like a voice crying in the wilderness. I am quite conscious that when it comes to these particular appropriations for reclamation, there is such an overwhelming vote from Members who represent reclamation States, that it is impossible to overcome that vote. I have heretofore spoken on such questions and have called the attention of the House to the inconsistency of taking land out of production and at the same time appropriating millions and millions of dollars for reconstruction and for irrigation and for construction of these projects that bring more land into cultivation. It seems to me that that is extremely foolish. We are either wrong at one end or at the other. It is well known that the farmers are in distress. That fact has been taught to you in a hundred speeches.

We know, for example, that if I tried to put a shoe factory in Massachusetts, to compete with the shoe factories already there, I would meet with extreme and perhaps violent opposition; but that is exactly what you are doing with the farmers of the districts such as I represent. I am not trying to prevent the continuance of the reclamation projects that have already been commenced or authorized. You have authorized them, and you ought, in fairness, to go ahead with them, because people have invested their money and their lives in these enterprises.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Let us take the Colorado River, for instance. Would the gentleman from Iowa prefer competition from reclamation projects in Mexico or from reclamation projects from the United States?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I am saying that I prefer no competition by public grants that my farmers must themselves help to pay. It makes no difference where it comes from. But we can cut off unfair competition from Mexico by adequate tariff; we cannot stop subsidized competition from New Mexico. On the other hand, we are compelled to help pay for this unfair competition ourselves. I do not want to appropriate money to bring in new projects at a time when there is no need to bring in more agricultural projects. I know that a hundred gentlemen here are interested in reclamation. My amendment does not affect them, because I am trying to stop huge appropriations for new proposed Federal reclamation projects only. It does not affect projects already authorized. That is as far as I am asking you to go; to stop appropriating for new projects at this time. What is the use of spending money to open up new or proposed reclamation projects, and of spending money for them when we know that the area producing agricultural crops is already too large. and when we are making appropriations to cut that area down? Distressed farmers should not be put into competition with Federal grants of this kind. The farmers are entitled to consistency. If these people want to get new projects, they ought to be forced, exactly as we were in Iowa, to pay for them themselves. We paid for our reclamation districts out of our own pockets and we expended millions and millions of dollars. We did not come to this Congress to ask for a hand-out. So far as my amendment is concerned, it merely strikes out the provision for proposed new Federal reclamation projects and nothing else. [Applause.]

has expired.

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. I believe that one thing which hampers us in our dealing with the great West is a lack of scientific knowledge on the part of this membership. I listened with much interest to the debate on items in this bill pertaining to Alaska. Since my schoolboy days I have been told that Alaska is a great treasure house of natural wealth and economic resources, but I believe we are overlooking that fact in our dealing with that far-off corner of our country. I feel that we ought to develop the mineral resources and also the grazing possibilities of that northern possession. To do that we need to know more about Alaska.

I know positively that the great West, the Rocky Mountain region from which I come, is a comparatively undeveloped portion of our country, and even we who live there do not know adequately the facts and resources and possi-bilities of that region. This provision which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gilchrist] seeks to strike out appropriates funds for the further study of the development of that country in regard to reclamation and water facilities as it should be developed.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I do not have time just now. Let me finish my statement, please. It is true that we have great reclamation projects, some completed. I feel that the premier reclamation project of the entire country lies in my State. I refer to the Salt River Valley project, begun away back under the law of 1902 with the Roosevelt Dam, named after Theodore Roosevelt; begun in 1906 and completed in 1911. It is true that we have numerous other projects like that in magnitude and in worth, but with all these we have barely begun to develop the West as it should be developed. This $400,000 aims to give us a scientific study whereby we can go ahead properly with the development of the West.

I have gone to school at the University of Iowa. I know the country where the tall corn grows. I want to tell the gentleman from Iowa that we do not grow tall corn or short corn down in Arizona on the white man's reclamation projects, except that the Indians grew short corn there before white men grew tall corn in Iowa. We do not produce entirely our own food for the mining camps in Arizona on our irrigated land. It is true we produce some surplus of head lettuce and that sort of thing, but it is not in competition with the tall corn of Iowa.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Does not every dollar that comes from the reclamation fund come from the public lands of the West?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. That is certainly true. This money comes originally out of the West and should be returned there. I thank God that in the last Congress we replenished that diminished fund, but we did so through the O'Mahoney-Hayden amendment, which provided funds from the oil resources of the West. I also want it understood that these reclamation items are reimbursable, so that they represent an investment and not a gift. We have "multiple use" of both water and money for water out West.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman know we are having an investigation by the Army for these projects; that the Department of Agriculture is making an investigation; and the Interior Department is making an investigation of the same things?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. The Army engineers are making investigations concerning flood control, but this $400,000 amendment would make an investigation into our further small-water developments; not all under the Bureau of Reclamation, but some under the Jones Act, for instance.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURDOCK of Arizona. Not now. Out in the West where water is life, where it means everything to us, the digging of a well is as important to us as it was back in Palestine in the days of Jacob and Abraham. "He went forth and digged a well" was said of one of the patriarchs. We need to do that west of the one-hundredth meridianover one-third or one-half of the area of the United States of America. We want to know where may these water resources be found. How can we best utilize our streams? Those are the things we want to find out from this investigation. It is money well spent when we survey these resources and discover our possibilities.

Mr. GILCHRIST. This amendment does not touch a study of the water resources at all.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MURDOCK of Utah. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the item beginning at line 10, on page 84, general investigations, for which the bill carries an appropriation of $400,000, to be used to carry on engineering and economic investigations of proposed Federal reclamation projects in the Colorado River Basin and elsewhere. These surveys are intended to bring to light possible reclamation projects in the arid West, which would enable us to utilize the irrigation resources of our mountain streams and rivers. I desire to call attention to the fact that the Federal Government has already expended many millions of dollars in the construction and maintenance of Boulder Dam, resulting in equating the flow of the Colorado River below Boulder Dam. It is entirely possible, indeed probable, that unless new reclamation projects are undertaken in the Colorado River Basin the results accomplished at Boulder Dam and the millions spent by us will be taken advantage of by the people and Government of Mexico by appropriating Colorado River water through new reclamation projects. It should be constantly borne in mind that, under existing law, once Mexico establishes rights in and to the waters of the Colorado River, by the appropriation of such waters to beneficial use, the United States and the people of the West will be forever precluded from acquiring rights to such water. The potential agricultural wealth of the Rocky Mountain area is unlimited, providing water for irrigation is made available. But once we lose, by inaction or by mismanagement, the right to the water which now flows unused through our Western States, the possibility of further agricultural development of that-region is lost forever. We will throw away a priceless heritage if we fail to protect our rights in the Colorado River. We will place unnatural but inexorable limits on the progress and development of the West if we do not find ways and means to use the waters of that river for irrigation purposes.

I call attention to the fact, Mr. Chairman, that more than 60 percent of the water which flows in the Colorado River rises in the States of Utah and Colorado. In those States millions and millions of fertile acres await only adequate water to make them fabulously productive. Adequate irrigation water can be made available for these acres only by reclamation projects, and one question of transcendent importance to the people of the United States is, Where and how shall such water be made available? Countless sites for reclamation reservoirs may be found along our streams and The problem is to determine scientifically which of these sites are best; which can be made productive of the most good to the West and to the Nation. This problem can be solved only by proper investigation by the Bureau of Reclamation and other Federal agencies cooperating with the proper State agencies. It is the purpose of this item, "General investigations," to provide for such surveys. Mr. Chairman, this item will be a safe investment in the future greatness of the West. We have heard on the floor today speeches which indicate that the sectionalism which made the Civil War inevitable still exists in the minds and attitudes of some Members of this body. It is time the statesmen of America realized that the Nation as a whole is prosperous only as the component States which comprise it are prosperous. What benefits Utah benefits Iowa. What benefits California benefits New York. If we of the West sought apparent sectional benefits which would be detrimental to the rest of the country, we would be betraying the best interests of our own constituents. What harms America harms Utah, and what harms Utah harms America. Some of the Members who have spoken today seem to be of the opinion that if the farms of Arizona are sterilized by drought, that will aid Iowa; that if the farmers of Utah suffer for the lack of water, their suffering will react to the benefit of the farmers of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, such an attitude is not statesmanship-it is blindness; and the sooner the deliberations of this body are divorced from narrow sectionalism, the sooner will its acts result in the promotion of the general welfare.

It is the solemn duty of the Congress of the United States to do everything in its power to make the West prosperous and productive. The appropriation of funds for reclamation surveys is one means of fulfilling that duty. It should be kept in mind that this appropriation will not come out of the pockets of the farmers of Iowa or the bankers of New York. The $400,000 provided by this item will come out of the reclamation fund which was set up by the Reclamation Act of 1902, sponsored by Theodore Roosevelt. This fund is made up from revenues exclusively from the public lands of the West and of repayments accruing under reclamation projects, repayments made by farmers living and working on the projects constructed under the supervision of the Bureau of Reclamation. This fund is a revolving fund out of which comes the money with which we build reclamation projects, and into which goes the money repaid by the farmers living on and benefited by those projects. And it cannot be too often emphasized that western farmers have made their repayments practically without default. Every reclamation project shows repayments of practically 100 cents on the dollar expended, except during years when depressed conditions have made moratoria necessary. If there ever was a self-liquidating program in this country, it

In closing I desire to call the attention of the committee. and especially the attention of the Republican foes of reclamation, to two brief excerpts from the message of President Theodore Roosevelt to Congress in December 1901, in which he became the author of the reclamation program and policy of the United States. He said:

It is as right for the National Government to make the streams and rivers of the arid regions useful by engineering works for water storage as to make useful the rivers and harbors of the humid regions by engineering works of another kind. * * * Our people as a whole will profit, for successful homemaking is but another name for upbuilding of the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILCHRIST].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gilchrist) there were—ayes 65 and noes 79.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

is reclamation.

Grand Coulee Dam project, Washington: For continuation of construction of Grand Coulee Dam and appurtenant works, $23,-000,000, of which not to exceed $350,000 may be used for the purposes set out in section 2 of the act of May 27, 1937 (50 Stat. 208): Provided, That this appropriation and the unexpended balances of appropriations heretofore made for the construction of this project shall be available until expended and shall be accounted for as one fund, entitled "Grand Coulee Dam project, Washington."

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Culkin: On page 89, in line 10, after the word "works", strike out "$23,000,000" and insert "$3,000,000."

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, lest I be charged with being illiberal and opposed to the due and proper development of the West, I call the attention of gentlemen on both sides of the aisle to the fact that on yesterday I voted for the Bonneville project. [Applause.] That is a normal and correct development. The development of the Grand Coulee stands in a distinct and different category. The Grand Coulee is a reclamation project. If it is other than that, it is simply a scheme for decentralizing existing industry in the East and moving it to the West. I am opposed to it, because it will bring 1,200,000 acres of land into production in competition with the farmers now on the land. I call the attention of the gentlemen from the West or the Near West to the fact that I am making bold to speak today for the farmers not only on the lands of the East but the present farmers on reclaimed lands of the West. This amendment which I have offered proposes to cut this appropriation down $20,-000,000. It leaves in the pot for the purpose of meeting existing contractual relations in this situation $10,000,000.

I am not going to indulge in any discussion of the condition of the Treasury. Every Congressman knows about that.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULKIN. I cannot yield; I am sorry.

I want to call to the attention of the House, as I did the other day, that here is a definite place where Members on both sides of the aisle can stop, look, and listen, and save $20,000,000.

I say that this project should cease until the hard-pressed farmers of the West and of the East have caught up. And now I want to read to you a letter which I received, if you please, from a resident of the district where Grand Coulee is. It came through Mr. Fred Brenckman, the legislative representative of the National Grange. The writer states:

The fixed charges on land in the Wenatchee district is $599 per acre. A tabulation from the files of a similar project—the Yakima project—shows that they are capitalized at $286 per acre.

I want the House to note the words of this hard-pressed farmer.

This information-

Says this writer to the representative of the National Grange—should be of value to you in your effort to prevent further irrigation developments in the State of Washington. The placing of more lands under irrigation at this time is nothing short of confiscation of the homes and ranches of those people who have already invested their life savings in this State.

I have that letter in my files, and if the gentleman from Washington or any other Member of the House desires to see it and see the original signature thereon I shall be very glad to let him examine it.

I have another letter from a resident of Kennewick, Wash.—and note I am calling as witnesses the people from that very section. This writer says:

The pitiful feature of this whole mess is that the western irrigation farmer is never allowed to catch up. If the poor fellow imagines he sees daylight ahead his hopes are dashed by a new reclamation proposition starting somewhere. The Reclamation Service—

And he spells the word Reclamation "Wrecklamation"—should be in the Department of Agriculture, not in the Interior Department.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CULKIN. And so, Mr. Chairman, I am making bold to speak not only for my farmers—who are like the farmers of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gilchrist] when they do any reclaiming, as they have done for generations, they go down in their lean purses and do it themselves—but I am speaking also for those who have written me and are on the reclaimed lands of the West. If I had the time I would put in the Record a great number of other similar letters.

I am for the normal development of the West—do not mistake that—I am for giving the West all funds needed to feed its people, but this procedure here simply wrecks the eastern farmer, it wrecks the western farmer, and it wrecks the farmers on the reclaimed land.

Those are the human documents involved, and I mention rather more softly the fact that it is an unwarranted, bold, and audacious raid upon the Federal Treasury at this time when all patriotic Members should be watching expenditures. [Applause.]

Mr. DIRKSEN and Mr. WHITE of Idaho rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen], a member of the committee, for 5 minutes.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sensible of the futility with which one often addresses himself to questions of economy in expenditure, but in connection with this Grand Coulee item I fancy I ought to submit what I deem to be a consistent design that the Congress must ultimately follow. We have been spending money with a lavish hand on hydroelectric projects. It is about time, in view of the fact that we are rushing along in a course of reckless expenditure, that we take a little inventory.

The first item in the inventory would seem to be the deficiency committee that is sitting right over next to this Hall contemplating a request for additional appropriations for the Works Progress Administration for $150,000,000. Obviously it is going to add to the deficit which will probably reach $4,000,000,000 for 1940, as well as $4,000,000,000 for 1939.

Congress is faced with one of two alternatives: Either a decent and reasonable limitation upon expenditures and a policy of economy; or else we must find new sources of taxation in order to bridge this gap that is constantly widening before us. This brings me to what I really want to say this afternoon, and I want to hang my remarks upon three bills that were introduced yesterday. They are Senate 1796, introduced by Senator Norris; H. R. 5068, introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin]; and H. R. 5069, introduced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Sparkman].

These bills provide for the issuance of not to exceed $100,000,000 in bonds by the Tennessee Valley Authority. For what purpose? For the purpose of purchasing the transmission lines and the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. Having purchased them what will be the effect? The effect, according to the Taxpayers Association of Nashville, Tenn., will be that the State of Tennessee will lose over $3,500,000 in revenue. Another effect will be that the Federal Treasury, through the loss of capital stock, excess profits, and gross energy taxes, and so forth, will lose more than $1,200,000. Now, do you see the inconsistent position in which the Congress finds itself almost daily?

The funds derived from the sale of bonds as proposed in the bills, which I have alluded to, are to be used for the—Construction or acquisition of dams with appurtenant facilities, generating plants, transmission lines, rural distribution lines, and other electric utility properties as authorized by this act, including the purchase of electric properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of section 12a of this act.

These bonds shall bear interest at a rate not in excess of $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent. Both the principal and interest on these bonds will become obligations of the taxpayers throughout the land.

The funds will be used to buy up the private utilities in Tennessee. When these properties pass to the Federal Government they no longer pay taxes. According to the Tennessee Taxpayers' Association, transfer of ownership will mean a loss of $3,512,095 in revenues to the State, the municipalities, the counties, and the school districts. The Federal Government will lose $1,204,346 in income taxes, capital-stock taxes, social-security taxes, and the excise tax of 3 percent on electrical energy. The over-all loss to the State and Federal Government will be more than $4,700,000.

To compensate the State of Tennessee, the T. V. A. pays over to the State 5 percent on the gross sales of energy. According to the audit made on December 6, 1938, for the T. V. A. by Lybrand, Ross Bros. & Montgomery, certified public accountants of New York, at a cost of $40,000—exhibit IV—total payment to the States of Alabama and Tennessee for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, under the 5-percent provision totaled $93,246.69. Payments for the entire period of operation of the T. V. A., from 1933 to June 30, 1938, were only $268,463.91. Assuming that one-half of this tax was paid to the State of Tennessee, it indicates that for a loss of more than three and one-half millions in revenues it received in return a trifle over $46,000. T. V. A. engineers estimate that by 1945, which is 7 years hence, the 5-percent tax may return as much as $645,000 per year to the State. This would amount to 17½ percent of the State's revenue loss.

How will the balance be provided? The answer is obvious. Additional State taxes will be imposed. Cheap power is supplied by means of appropriations out of the Federal Treasury and then the power consumers are handed extra taxes to make up for losses of State revenue. To say the least, it is a merry-go-round which makes the taxpayers dizzy and then assails them with extra taxes.

As for the Federal Government, it will lose more than $1,200,000, which must be supplied from some other source. To date the House has enacted five supply bills which aggregate an increase of more than $568,000,000 over 1938. With one hand we increase expenditures; with the other we propose to destroy existing sources of taxation. The result is what? A continuation of the dead-center stagnation which now besets the country.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin], in support of his amendment and in opposition to this particular item in the appropriation bill. I was also interested in the remarks made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen].

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] went into the development of the West. Let me remind the gentleman of the history of the development of the West.

The Congress some time back gave in one land grant to one railroad company land 20 miles wide on each side of the railroad, the Northern Pacific Railway, all the way from Duluth, Minn., to Portland, Oreg., so that that railroad might be built. Every alternate section along that entire right-of-way was given to one railroad in order to get this country opened up. After the railroad was built the promoters and the stockholders went across the country to see this country. The land was a barren, undeveloped one. After the trip was made and the stockholders saw what they had, they were so disgusted with the country that had been opened up by the railroad that they discharged the promoter—Henry Villard.

It was not until reclamation came along; it was not until the people began to move in and settle on the land and bring water to the land that the West became one of the most prosperous sections of the country. I call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that his factories and mills depend for a market on the great western country which has been developed slowly and brought into production by reclamation. It has brought the people to the land. It has built up production. Wonderful communities have been built up in the West which have made additional markets for the manufactured products of the industrial sections of the East.

If we were to strike down and undo the work that has been done in reclamation, his State would be one of the first to suffer. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] or the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] want to arrest progress in this country and thereby stop the development of new markets and production from new land.

I want to remind the gentleman from the great State of Illinois, who speaks of W. P. A. appropriations, that this money is being used to support the 10,000,000 unemployed. What are you going to do with them? Where are we going to place them? Let them go out on the land and take their substance out of the ground, as their forefathers did.

This is not spending money. It is making an investment. Let us make a distinction between putting money into this great conservation project, that will utilize the water that flows to the sea and build up a great, prosperous country, as we have in the past, and spending money for relief. Are we going to stop? Where will the gentleman from Illinois, with his corn, hogs, and his distilleries, find a market if we do not continue to build in this country?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I regret my dear friend the gentleman from Idaho completely mistakes the premise I assumed, namely, if you are going to spend money, on the one hand, what a wholly silly and insensible thing it is to rub out the sources of existing revenue when we need that for the purpose of making the expenditure considered here, as well as for the ultimate balancing of the Budget.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The balancing of the Budget will be done through the payment of income taxes by prosperous business. We are making an investment today to develop industry and communities which will make this land a brighter, a more prosperous, and finer country. We will take the unemployed off relief rolls. We can put them on land, build up the country, and follow the great program started by the leaders of the gentleman's party, which has given us the country we have today. Let us continue and build up the communities. Let us put this barren land to work and put these 10,000,000 unemployed people on the land, so that they may build up finer communities.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am glad to see my friend agrees with me that these funds must come from the income tax and other sources. We are taking over a lot of power properties and there will be no income taxes, no excess-profits taxes, no capital taxes. Those will all be gone.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. The gentleman must remember new communities and new industries will add the tax income to meet Government expenses.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I shall address my remarks in opposition to this amendment to the necessity for more power, more electrical energy, in the northwestern country. In 1937 Montana was required to look to the State of Washington for electrical energy. The Missouri River was unprecedentedly low and the Montana Power Co. was unable to furnish the necessary power with which to run the mines at Butte and the smelters at Anaconda and Great Falls, also the contracted quota for Fort Peck. As a result of this dearth of power, mines in Butte had to be closed down, putting miners upon the streets and making hungry their families, and causing us to come to Congress for aid. In addition smelters were closed and smelter men were turned out of employment in the city of Anaconda and in the city of Great Falls, and their families were likewise made to want all because we did not have sufficient electrical energy.

You may say that is a local matter, but it is not, because when these people are working in the mines and in the smelters they are purchasing goods manufactured in the East. You may say this condition may never occur again. As the Montana Power Co. said, and truthfully so, the Missouri River was the lowest in its history. What was unprecedented at that time for aught we know may become the normal and the usual thing in the future, hence we must guard against it. Our condition out there is reflected throughout the country.

I may say also in this connection that the farmers in that territory, numbering hundreds of thousands, are entitled to the use of electricity just the same as are the people in the cities. When we develop these power projects we are enabled by reason thereof to bring electrical energy to the farm homes at such a rate the farmers can afford to use it. The farmer's wife is just as much entitled to use electricity in washing her clothes and in washing her dishes and for lighting purposes as is the wife of the city dweller, and the farmer is entitled to use electrical energy for pumping water for irrigation and power purposes. So, from the standpoint of electrical energy alone, this appropriation should stand as it is because it is needed in the Northwest. We have to develop the Northwest in order that you in the East may have a market for your manufactured products, so the West's problem is your problem and your problem is our problem.

I want to say to the Members of this House I have never been prouder of my membership in this House than I have been in the last 2 days when I have seen Congressmen from the South and from the East and from the North supporting these western reclamation and irrigation projects. Even Members from the economy bloc have come to our aid. I am going to ask you this afternoon to support us in developing our western country.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Has the distinguished gentleman from Montana ever thought about balancing the Budget or voting for economy?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We will never balance the Budget or vote for economy as long as humanity needs a dollar, as far as I am concerned. This is a case of human beings against a dollar, and in my opinion, humanity rises above the dollar; and in the gentleman's own heart he thinks so.

Mr. RICH. After you wreck this Nation of ours and then the people have no business and no jobs, what are you going to do?

Mr. O'CONNOR. We are trying to make jobs in the East by developing the West. That is where you will have your market. I want to tell you we might as well not kid ourselves any longer. Our export trade is gone and we are going to have to live within ourselves. We may just as well start to do it.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the gentleman that if our export trade is gone, why not retain our own market for our own manufacturers and our own employment and our own industry. That is what we want to do.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not yield for a speech.

In developing the West we are making a market for the manufactured products of you in the East.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. O'CONNOR. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. DUNN. We have been informed, and the statement is true, that one-third of the people of the United States are in need of food, shelter, and clothing. It seems to me that we should consider balancing people's stomachs with good food before we consider balancing this mythical thing called the Budget.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is absolutely right, and I thank him for his contribution. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, in view of the legislative trends during the current session, the Seventysixth Congress will be placed in the pages of history for its attempt to bring Government economy to what may be termed a "boiling point." At this stage of the session and while that history is being made, we must guard against placing our constituents into what is known as "hot water."

A sound economy program is a distinguished brand to place on any session of Congress but at the same time economy at the expense of humanity is a sorrowful stigma. During our consideration of the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, many attempts were made to prune appropriations. Economy is an admirable trait, but we cannot conscientiously decrease the respective funds at the expense of the scientific and sound upbuilding of our natural resources and our country as a whole.

With the income tax filing deadline just past, it is readily understandable that we are concerned with economy in Government. However, we must not be accused of nearsightedness.

As a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I am not satisfied with the appropriations which we have set aside for the upbuilding and restoration of the Indian race. We must never forget that they are an involuntarily subjected race and we imposed a guardianship over the Indian and then contributed in the past to his race's becoming vanishing Americans. I entertain great prospects for the Indian in the future of our country when it is realized that with proper training and treatment he is the equal of the white man, and it is my belief that he should be given every consideration possible.

As I said in a way before, it is significant and inspiring to note the enthusiasm toward national duty of this Congress. Congressmen, from the South, from the West, from the North, and from the East are not confining their work to their respective districts. No longer are Congressmen from the South and East fighting our projects in the West. They all realize that the West is the market for what is manufactured or produced in the South and the East. Projects which tend to upbuild the West provide additional cash markets for the East and South. Each year we are becoming more of a self-sustaining Nation. And that has been brought about largely by the Congress's taking a national viewpoint rather than a smug sectional stand. I am prouder of my membership in this House more than ever before, after noting the splendid support given with alacrity to our reclamation projects by Congressmen from all sections.

We Members of Congress from the West have first-hand knowledge of the value of reclamation, irrigation, and the rehabilitation of the West. We know from personal experience that the sole hope for the future of the West lies in projects as covered in the appropriation bill we now have under consideration.

I need not point out the importance and necessity of land restoration, irrigation canals, water power, rural electrification, and other earmarks of a civilized country in the West. The Nation as a whole can never be stronger than each of the integral sections. Therefore, it is of indisputable value to our national standing that western projects be considered in the light of an all-embracing national program.

And if we prune appropriations below the figure deemed necessary by authorities, we then contribute to the weakness of our western United States, and the United States as a whole.

Again permit me to say that economy is an excellent procedure, but not at the expense of humanity. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I have been deeply interested in this proposal from the standpoint of our colleague from Iowa who spoke here. I do not know whether or not the Members of the House realize the condition of the farmers of this country, but I do know that if this project goes through—and I hope it will sometime, at the proper time, because I have been there, and I know about the projects out in that territory and have looked them over—more acres will be put into production, and to put more acreage into use in this country at the present time is a very serious matter.

I do not know whether or not the House realizes it, but in the State of Wisconsin, my own State, there were 779 foreclosures from January 1 to June 30, 1938. There were 21,599 foreclosures in the United States during the same period. Eighty-three percent of the Monroe County, Wis., farms are mortgaged; 44 percent of the mortgaged farms in La Crosse, Monroe, and Juneau Counties are delinquent. Not only that, but the Government is holding a great many of these mortgages. So the question arises, What are we going to do with these farms that are being taken back by the Government? And up until last July 1 we had about 60,000 of them, and 100,000 homes.

The question arises, Should we take care of these farms the Government owns and put people on them who want homes, or should we put more acreage into production and let other farms go into default? The United States Government holds 40 percent of the farm-mortgage debts. This has increased from 12 to 40 percent in the last decade.

The Farm Credit Administration said on February 23 that about 35 percent of all farms in the United States carried mortgages in 1938. The debt was estimated at about $7.082.-000,000. Federal land banks and land-bank commissioners held mortgages totaling $2,835,900,000. The increase on Government holdings came, of course, through refinancing many of these farms in 1933 and 1934. Many of them are in

So at the present time the Government could take over a number of these other farms if it wanted to do so.

There is $35,000,000 of default in mortgages outstanding in the State of Virginia, with 16,472 farm-mortgage loans.

It seems to me we should think seriously about this, because some of these days, and before very long, there is going to be a day of reckoning and we are going to have to take care of these losses.

I could take you up into the State of Wisconsin where, in a particular case which I investigated, I found a man had borrowed $10,000 on 160 acres of land. He never paid anything on it, and they took a foreclosure judgment of over $13,000 against him and then turned around and sold the property to an individual for $3,000. Now, the question arises just how long can they continue with these farms and what the ultimate loss would be.

In the State of Wisconsin, in one day in one county, there were 16 farms that were foreclosed.

Barron County is one of the leading dairying counties of the State of Wisconsin, where they have a great number of cows and where the price of cheese has gone down to 11 cents a pound, where butter went down 31/2 cents a pound when the Government support was knocked from under it. where in 1920 to 1932, we received on the average 46 cents a pound for butterfat, at the present time we are receiving about 29 cents. Last August the price reached a low point of 28 cents a pound.

These are some of the things we must consider here when we are thinking of bringing more land into use at the present time.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if we cannot reach an agreement as to time for debate on this amendment. There were some six or seven Members who stood up a moment ago and said they wanted to speak on this matter.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Buck). The Chair has the names of nine Members who expressed a desire to speak upon this amendment who have not yet spoken.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 50 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, Coulee Dam! I want to remind everybody who is listening that these two words mean the greatest thing ever conceived by the mind of man, and when it is finished it will be the greatest thing every constructed by the hand of man-greater than the Pyramids of Egypt, greater also than the Great Wall of China and greater than the Panama Canal.

I now want to correct an impression that was given by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] when he said that this is entirely and solely a reclamation project. Like so many of the statements of Members on the other side, this is untrue. It is a power proposition as well as a reclamation proposition, although it comes under the Reclamation Bureau. It will generate power and the sale of the power from the Coulee Dam in 40 years will pay for all the money that will be spent in the construction of the Coulee Dam.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. HILL. Yes; if you have just a brief question.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. When the gentleman speaks about the amortization of these bonds, chargeable to power, what percentage of the total cost is going to be allocated to power?

Mr. HILL. I will leave that to the other gentleman from Washington, who will answer that question, as I have not the figures before me.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I ask that question because yesterday on the Bonneville Dam we discussed that matter and I was amazed to hear that only 321/2 percent of the cost of the Bonneville Dam was being charged to power, when before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors 2 years ago it was stated then by those high in authority that the charge would be 50 percent.

Mr. HILL. I call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that reclamation is the settled policy of the United States. It was begun by a great Republican, Theodore Roosevelt, and I sometimes wonder if there are not some members on the other side, and there must be, who have the same vision that Theodore Roosevelt had when he started reclamation. There were other Republicans like Mr. Goethals, and I might mention those who preceded us in the Senate and the House-Senator Jones and Congressman Summers. They were strong for reclamation. When my friends on the other side say we are taking this out of the Treasury and paying for this reclamation again, they are making misstatements. The reclamation projects in the Yakima Valley have paid back at least 95 percent of what has been paid in on those projects.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HILL. The figures show that. I cannot yield.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HILL. For a brief question.

Mr. RICH. The gentleman means they paid it back into the reclamation fund, but that in turn is used for that particular purpose again.

Mr. HILL. In the first place, that money is paid out of the reclamation fund, that comes out of the reclamation States, and you are not paying anything out of the Treasury.

Mr. RICH. But the original amount was paid, and we never got it back and never will get it back.

Mr. HILL. If the gentleman studies the records in his hearings, he must know that that is not true and this is a misstatement like he made the other day.

That is not a misstatement. Mr. RICH.

Mr. HILL. When the Bituminous Coal Commission proposition was under consideration here on the floor of the House the gentleman said that we were spending money out of the Treasury, and the gentleman knew at the time that they were assessing the coal companies and employees, and he was making a misstatement then, as he is making it now.

Mr. RICH. I did not make it then and I am not making it now, so why go on?

Mr. HILL. Read the RECORD, and the gentleman will see he made a misstatement with reference to the Coal Commission. It was not paid out of the Treasury. I want now to answer the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen]. I lived in Illinois, was born there. I lived also in Wisconsin and I have also lived in the West. The gentleman made the statement that we are going to take off the tax rolls these private utilities, and turn them into public utilities and thus lose the taxes.

In the first place private utilities pay no taxes; they simply add that as overhead expenses. Every time we turn a switch we, the consumers, pay the taxes; the power companies are merely the collectors. Moreover, the taxes are inconsiderable. In the State of Washington some 20 years ago when the Bone power bill was up for a vote, a survey was made of power companies and their valuation. It was found that for rate-making purposes their valuation was 30 times as great as for taxation purposes. Thus they are avoiding their fair share of tax burden as compared to farmers and home owners. Furthermore, we who favor public utilities urge taxation of same—that is our policy in the State of Washington. For this reason the people of our great State favor Government ownership and operation of power utilities. [Applause.]

ington has expired.

Mr. CLEVENGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment and in the interest of 100,000 of the best farmers in the world, and who live in my district. These men in most cases hewed out of the old black swamp of Ohio some of the finest farms in the world. They combated the ague and "shakes" and milk fever and all that went with pioneering. They have accepted every artifice of diverse farming to make it possible for them to live and exist under the competition put upon them. We have canning, poultry raising, stock feeding, milk condenseries, cheese and butter factories, and lately sugar. Since I came to Congress, the farmers of my district have written me in defense of a right to raise a little more sugar on their land that is lying idle because of crop restrictions. The Secretary of State suddenly filled the newspapers with stories of racketeers-sugar racketeers in the city of Washington. I wonder sometimes if some of you realize what being a farmer in one of these milk-cow States means. I am going to define what I mean by a milk-cow State. That is a State where you collect two or three dollars of Federal income for every one you leave in it and you build reclamation projects and dams and power projects, and you collect your money from States like Ohio, from Illinois to Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITE of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVENGER. In a moment. I have some figures comparing my State with what it gets and pays with three of these T. V. A. States. I will give you some of the high lights.

According to the 1930 census, the population of my State is 6,646,697 and the population of Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama combined is 7,272,625. In 1935 Ohio paid an income tax of $58,476,000, Mississippi paid $1,740,000, Tennessee $7,342,000, and Alabama $3,334,000. In the amount of money paid in the State to take care of her own citizens, Ohio pays $28.26 per capita, Tennessee $13.18 per capita, Mississippi $12.96 per capita, and Alabama $14.61 per capita. From January 1, 1937, to June 30, 1938, the Agricultural Adjustment Administration paid to the farmers of Ohio, the fourth agricultural State in the Nation, $14,335,000; Tennessee, $14,986,000; Mississippi, $20,027,000; Alabama, $15,239,000.

In the interest of John Q. Taxpayer, and in the interest of these Ohio men who want to save their homes and farms, I wish to say that last week we were called upon to provide millions of dollars we do not have and must borrow to put six or seven hundred thousand acres of rich bottomland in Tennessee and Kentucky under water, for power that we do not need, and this week we are called upon to provide millions we do not have and must borrow to irrigate a million acres in the State of Washington for farm land and power that we do not need. Next week we will be asked to provide hundreds of millions that we do not have and must borrow to retire millions of acres of natural farm lands from production that Mr. Wallace says we do not need.

With proper apologies to "Bugs" Baer I would like to inquire, "Who is crazy now?" [Applause.]

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. CLEVENGER. I yield.

Mr. GIFFORD. I want to make the observation that these Members from the West are great boosters. I have watched them for 17 years, and they are such boosters that they generally get all they ask for. Why? She said to him "Thank you so much for this beautiful fur coat, it will keep me so warm." He replied. "Keep you quiet." [Laughter.]

so warm." He replied, "Keep you quiet." [Laughter.]
Mr. CLEVENGER. In conclusion, I want to say this: We know you will take our golden eggs, but in God's name do not perform a Caesarean section on our geese to get tomorrow's eggs. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. ROBINSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, almost a century ago the founders of my home State left their homes in the Mississippi Valley and pushed westward across the great unexplored domain beyond the frontier. This territory had previously been traversed only by Indian tribes and a few scouting parties, which returned with reports which were far from encouraging to a people seeking a home. While the land in this great region west of the hundredth meridian was oingreat fertility, because of the fact that rainfall was so infrequent during the growing season, sagebrush and scrub cedar were practically the only forms of vegetation which subsisted there.

A less hardy people would have been dismayed by the prospect which confronted these pioneers when they arrived in Salt Lake Valley and their leader told them that they had arrived at their destination. The hard, parched ground defled the entrance of a plow. For days on end the sun had shone brightly, the skies giving no promise of rainfall. The only moisture in evidence was that found in the small rivers and brooks which wended their way from the mountain canyons to the salty waters of the lake in the valley. But these streams, fed by the melting snows which had been deposited in the tops of the mountains the previous winter, proved the salvation of these people. By constructing small diversion ditches, they were able to turn the water in these streams from its natural channel and flood it over the hard ground, thus softening it and making it susceptible to cultivation. Soon the fields were plowed and the seeds planted. The growing crops were now supplied with moisture by irrigation ditches which ran between the rows. Thus was irrigation practiced in the arid West for the first time since the Aztec civilization in Mexico, 400 years before. The changes which were thus wrought were almost unbelievable. Land which had yesterday been barren and worthless was now fruitful. Green fields stretched where before there had been nothing but sagebrush. A people had raised a civilization from the barren floor of the great American desert.

Soon, however, the water available from the streams was entirely used, and only a small fraction of the available land was irrigated. The greater part of the water ran off during the first few warm days of spring and was lost to the farmers. Only the snow in the deeper canyons remained to sustain the streams during the summer. The problem of securing a sustained flow during the entire growing season was solved by constructing dams and impounding the spring floodwaters.

Reclamation of the arid lands, which was first practiced in the Salt Lake Valley, was quickly adopted by settlers throughout the West. Only by irrigation could the land be made to yield a livelihood. As the lands for which water was most easily available were occupied, it was necessary to build larger and more complex irrigation systems, often conveying water for long distances, from the reservoirs to the lands which it was to irrigate. Contrary to a popular belief, the money for the early development of irrigation projects was not furnished by the Government. Irrigation had been practiced for more than 50 years when the Government stepped into the picture in 1902 by the passage of the Reclamation Act. Since that time the Government funds have merely supplemented the flow of private capital into these productive enterprises. At the present time the total investment in irrigation projects in the West is approximately one and a quarter billions of dollars. Of this amount, the contribution of the Federal Government is only approximately 20 percent. Private investors still feel that these projects are excellent investments and are willing to purchase bonds of irrigation companies.

The total expended by the Federal Government on reclamation projects which are completed and in operation in September 1938, the latest date for which figures are available, was $237,000,000. This money alone, apart from the almost $1,000,000,000 expended by private capital, has built 34 irrigation projects, which serve 3,000,000 acres of land, and which support 900,000 people; 900,000 people who, without these Government irrigation projects, would be unable to earn a living.

It should not be supposed, however, that this money which has been expended for projects in the West has been a drain on taxpayers from other sections of the country. The Reclamation Act of 1902 does not call for appropriations from the general fund of the Treasury but rather from the reclamation fund, which is built up from money which rightfully belongs to the West, money obtained from the sale of public lands, oil leases, and Federal power. Only since 1933, at which time the public-works program was expanded to include reclamation projects, has the Government appropriated for the purpose of irrigation and funds other than those which came from the reclamation fund.

Neither should it be supposed that even the money appropriated from the reclamation fund has been given as a gift to those who settle on the irrigated lands. Every dollar which is expended on a reclamation project is secured by a lien on the lands which use the water, and every dollar will eventually be paid back into the Treasury.

The record of repayment to the reclamation fund is indeed a credit to the integrity of the people who settled on the irrigated areas. With the exception of the depression years, during which Congress granted a moratorium on repayments, over 98 percent of all money coming due under the repayment contracts has been repaid. It is doubtful if there is another type of Government project which is self-liquidating to this extent.

Even if the reclamation projects which are being constructed in the West were a direct drain on the pockets of eastern taxpayers, they would still be good investments for the people as a whole. To contend that this work benefits only the West and places a burden on the East is to disregard the complexity of our economic structure, to overlook the fact that it is impossible for one section of the country to be prosperous while another section is poor. Such an argument time after time has been advanced to oppose the development of new territory, and as many times as it has been advanced it has been proved false. If such an argument had been heeded by our predecessors in this body, the United States would still be but a narrow strip on the Atlantic coast, for when it was proposed to open the lands in the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys to homesteading at the beginning of the nineteenth century, the argument was presented on the floor of the House that if these new lands were brought under cultivation the crops which were produced on them would flood the markets and react to the detriment of the established agricultural areas. So fallacious has subsequent history proved this argument that it seems strange that it should have ever been raised. Without the agricultural region developed in the Midwest, the present industrial development of the East would obviously have been impossible.

I am satisfied that just as the growth of our Nation in the past has justified the opening of new lands by the homestead laws, the future development will justify the opening of new lands by reclamation.

From the very moment when construction is begun on a reclamation project, the entire county begins to reap benefits. While some may reasonably doubt the economic feasibility of a public-works program, because of the fact that it increases our debt, no one can doubt that while the projects are actually under construction business is benefited by the money expended. The money expended on reclamation projects goes to every part of the county. For example, for the construction of the Pine View Dam, a relatively small project in my home State, the Government purchased materials from most of the larger States. Twenty-seven cars of steel pipe came from New York; Pennsylvania sent 7 cars of piling; Illinois manufacturers sold 12 cars of steel pipe and reinforcing steel; and Alabama, Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Indiana, Wisconsin, and Missouri all were given orders for carload lots. Railroads and truck lines which bring the materials from the place in which they are manufactured to the site of the construction receive huge benefits. Secondary industries throughout the country are stimulated by the pay rolls of the laborers on the projects.

These benefits, however, are no different from the benefits conferred by any public-works program. It is not until the reclamation project is completed and the impounded water is actually available for use upon the parched lands that the project begins to make its great and lasting contribution to the welfare of the country. The opening of the new lands opens a new life to people who were yesterday unemployed because industry had no place for them, and because all available agricultural lands were already taken. They now have means of productive employment. They now earn their own livelihood without having to rely on the Government for relief.

The argument has been advanced that because there is a surplus of farm products at present, those who settle on reclamation projects will not be able to make a living because there will be no market for their crops and in addition it will make worse the plight of farmers in other sections of the country. While this argument appears logical at first blush, it does not hold up when we examine the facts. Crops grown on the land served by these projects do not contribute to any surplus simply because there is no surplus of the majority of the crops which are produced there.

Approximately 70 percent of the land which is irrigated by these projects is devoted to alfalfa and other forage which supports the great livestock industry of the West. Seven percent of the reclaimed land is devoted to the raising of sugar beets. Of both sugar and livestock the United States is and has been for several years a heavy importer. Far from having a domestic surplus of these commodities, we are unable to produce enough to meet our demands. These crops which are grown on the western lands are not competing with any domestic producer, but rather with foreign producers. For every dollar's worth of livestock or sugar that is produced in the United States, a dollar is diverted from foreign producers to our own domestic channels of trade.

The remaining 23 percent of the irrigated land is devoted to a variety of crops, most of which are consumed by the people in the immediate vicinity of the place where they are grown. Prominent among these crops are fruit, garden vegetables, and wheat. Although there is a surplus of wheat, the reclamation projects are not adding to this surplus but are really reducing such a surplus, simply because most of the wheat which is produced in the projects is consumed by the people who live there and because wheat is the one crop which could be grown as a dry farm crop on these lands without the aid of irrigation. Therefore, if the land was not irrigated, much of it would be devoted to dry farm wheat, whereas when water is available for irrigation the owners of the land will be inclined to grow some crop of which there is not such a huge surplus.

Let us now look at the other side of the picture, to determine not what those who live on these projects produce and sell, but rather what they buy and consume. The 20,000,000 acres in the West which are at present irrigated form the major support for 12,000,000 people. Twelve million people who are customers for the products of the other States. From every State in the Union, agricultural as well as industrial, these people purchase farm products and manufactured products. They form a market which, if taken away, would very seriously cripple almost every industry in the United States. Yet without the reclamation projects which conserve for them the precious water supply, these people would be forced to leave this land and seek to earn their livelihood in the already overpopulated sections. Should our reclamation projects suddenly cease to function, it would merely mean that 12,000,000 people would be added to those already on relief.

Although much has already been done, a great deal remains to be done in the future to properly conserve the water supply of the West. Although the great majority of the 700,000,000 acres of arid land will forever be unreclaimable, a constructive program of reclamation can conserve enough water to at least add another 10,000,000 acres of land to the 20,000,000 already made available for farming by means of reclamation. Two and a half million additional acres, enough to support almost a million people, will be added to the available land when the projects which are now under construction are completed. New cities and towns will spring up on the land served by these projects, offering new opportunity to many who are now unable to earn a living.

A new and serious problem has been presented to the Nation in the past few years, by the development of the Dust Bowl in the prairie States. These lands, like the lands farther west, are arid, but unlike the lands to the west, they cannot be reclaimed by irrigation because the flat terrain offers no reservoir sites for the impounding of waters. Many who have lived in this area are finding it impossible to continue to reside there, both because the wind makes farming almost impossible and because the dust-laden air makes living most unpleasant. If these people desert the Dust Bowl, as many of them are doing, we must find somewhere for them to go. The answer to this problem lies farther to the west, where vast expanses of arid but fertile land await only construction of dams and canals to prepare it to offer its richness to the service of mankind.

It is probably difficult for those of you who are from sections where rainfall is plentiful to fully realize what reclamation means to us in the West. To you water is something that exists in as free an abundance as air, something which, while necessary to life, is always freely available and so is the subject of little thought. However, to the westerner water is something infinitely more valuable. The greatest gift which our mountains have to give to our people is not their mineral wealth but the water which they store. It is disheartening to see this water run off in streams swollen to torrents during the early spring, and then to see those same streams' beds dry during the parching heat of summer; to see the fields dry and bleached for want of the water which ran so freely but a few short months before.

The bill which we are now considering calls for appropriations to projects which have been declared by the best engineers available to be practical and sound. The money which we will appropriate is not an expense but an investment, an investment from which every dollar of the expended capital will be returned, and which will pay dividends in a richer opportunity and a fuller life for the hundreds of thousands of people who will be afforded a livelihood by the reclaimed land.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. Pierce].

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, never was there made a more misleading statement than that of my friend from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen], the brilliant debater on the Republican side, when he said that the private utilities pay taxes which publicly owned utilities avoid. Do you think that these taxes that utilities pay come from heaven or from their grandfather's estates? Are they sent from Wall Street's share? They are collected out of the people in excess rates and handed over called taxes; that is all; the people who use the electricity, the rate payers, foot the bill. When the utilities become tax collectors, they take an immense toll for their services. My colleague, a member of the District Committee, should investigate the utility conditions in Washington in order to learn just how seriously a private utility can mulct the public and go scot free.

At Tacoma there is a publicly owned plant today worth

At Tacoma there is a publicly owned plant today worth $30,000,000, all paid for from earnings except six or seven million dollars, and with a lower rate than Washington, D. C.; still they pay 10 and 12 percent of their gross earnings toward maintenance of the city government. The city of Eugene, in my State, a city of 20,000 or 25,000, with a plant worth six or seven million dollars, practically all paid for, with a lower rate than anywhere on the Atlantic border, pays the city by giving free light and other concessions which are more in amount than the taxes would be.

Never was there a more fallacious argument advanced by the brilliant debater than that taxes are all lost when public power plants are operated. Remember this fact, that electricity is, like water, a natural monopoly and should be owned and distributed by the people. Grand Coulee will have ultimately both irrigation and power, though for some years they can provide power only for their own irrigation pumping. If all the population in the Northwest were using electricity as they are using it in Winnipeg or Ontario, Canada, it would take double the installation of Bonneville and Grand Coulee to supply the people, particularly if electricity were taken to them by public transmission lines and distribution systems. The private utilities cover only thickly settled sections. They skim the cream. Why are they not using it freely? Because the price is so high. Lower the price and the people will use it. Prices could be lowered if utilities had been allowed to pay their debts instead of paying tribute to holding companies.

The day is past when we can abandon Grand Coulee. Millions upon millions have been invested. It is a great undertaking, and it has to be completed. The credit of this Government is at stake. It is not a question of passing judgment on a new undertaking.

Let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that products which will grow on Grand Coulee project are products that do not come into competition with the surplus commodities that you and I have to rack our brains over in the Committee on Agriculture. They will be products of which we have a deficit in this country, and will be consumed in the immediate vicinity. Yes; the day may be approaching in this country when we have got to live within ourselves, and the day is perhaps coming when we have to pass from the plan of made work. There is no better way to take care of a man than to put him on the land.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. No; I am not yielding.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Where does the gentleman think this money comes from that he is using out of the Federal Treasury for this purpose?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Why, it is just a loan. It is all repayable.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Why the hypocrisy of making them feel they are getting free power when you go right around and slap them over the head in the form of an additional State tax, and then take great glory and great credit for a humanitarian job well done, when it is just a lot of counterfeit hypocrisy?

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Had you been in the electric game as I was 25 years ago, when the big schemes were put over to put these electric-power plants all over the country and capitalize them far beyond the money invested, you would know differently and would not make the statements that you make now. The Federal Power Commission has shown us in their figures that the total amount of money invested in utilities in the United States is six and one-half billion. They are capitalized for thirteen billion.

The greatest material achievement of this administration is unquestionably the concrete dams on the Columbia River at Bonneville, Oreg., and Grand Coulee, Wash. When much of that which has attracted public attention and newspaper comment and all the controversy in Congress and out has passed into history these man-made constructions for the triple purpose of navigation, irrigation, and power will remain a standing testimonial to the forethought, intelligence, and effective planning for the future of those who fostered the developments. Credit will be given President Roosevelt, who made these great achievements possible.

The Columbia River is the second largest river in the United States. It has a regular flow, varying less than most rivers of comparable size, with falls from the high mountains from which it rises down to the sea level, making it the ideal power stream of all the world. It flows through one of the most richly endowed sections of the world, the Pacific Northwest, with its millions of acres of fertile soil. It has fine harbors opening to the great Pacific Ocean.

Bonneville and Coulee were conceived with different objectives. Bonneville is a navigation project with power as an incidental byproduct. Coulee is essentially an irrigation

The development of Coulee will place water on about one million and a quarter of the most fertile lands in this Nation. These lands were once the delta valley of the Columbia River when that stream, ages ago, was dammed by a glacier and found a temporary outlet through the Grand Coulee Irrigation is of primary importance to the rapidly growing Pacific Northwest. Unfortunately there has been created a great deal of misconception concerning the extent and effect of irrigation crops. Agricultural interests in other sections need not fear the competition of these crops. This type of agriculture is complimentary rather than competitive. Those crops which create exportable surpluses are produced only in very limited amounts on the irrigated lands of the Northwest. Two types of crops are produced on such lands; namely, fodder and specialty crops.

The livestock industry uses the vast natural pastures existing in this region and the irrigated lands produce forage for winter feeding, without which the cattle could not be maintained on the ranges.

The specialty crops sustain the immediate population, which is beyond the reach of similar crops of other sections.

In the 2 power houses on either side of the Coulee Dam foundation provision has been made for the ultimate installation of 18 generating units. Only two of these flumes will be used for the immediate present. These units will furnish energy to pump irrigation water from the level of the Coulee Lake to the canals feeding the regulating reservoir located in the Grand Coulee. It will be at least one-quarter of a century before the full 18 units will be brought into production.

During previous depressions, the American people had faith and hope, for they knew that there existed a frontier to the west where opportunities could be found. A good many of our people now feel that this frontier has been pushed into the Pacific Ocean. This is not the fact. The Coulee project and our other irrigated regions are our immediate national frontier. It is a haven for our industrious people who wish to explore the wealth of the soil.

As a pure business proposition this project will be worthwhile, because it will place one and a quarter million acres on the tax roll. The money invested in the project is reimbursable, to be repaid over a period of 40 years with interest on the unredeemed balances. It is a wise investment. All who have vision will support the committee in its allotment for the continuance of this construction project.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Gil-christ] is recognized.

Mr. GILCHRIST. Mr. Chairman, the Grand Coulee Dam, as I have been informed, has little if any navigation in it. For that reason it is a very doubtful constitutional support. The Grand Coulee Dam has in it 1,000,000 acres of land that they are going to reclaim and put into hogs and other products that compete with the natural farm lands of this country.

Grand Coulee Dam has already spent $100,000,000, as my good friend, Governor Pierce, has stated, and it is going to cost $300,000,000 more. For what?

Mr. HILL rose.

Mr. GILCHRIST. The gentleman did not yield to me; I will not yield to him until I get through. Then I would like to answer some of his heresies.

This vast sum of money will not go to the United States Treasury where it ought to be sent, and the farmers of Iowa in paying their share will find that their money will be used to put into competition with the very land upon which they depend for a living, other lands that never before have grown a crop. Since I have lived in Iowa—and I have lived there practically all my life—I have seen Iowa farm lands go from operator ownership into the hands of landlords, so much so that in my district 60 percent of the lands are not owned by the people who till them. Farmers have lost their heritage. Yet here you are creating a condition that will hereafter bring more and more land into competition against them, competition that is unfair and unreasonable, competition which they themselves have been forced to finance through the taxes they pay the Federal Government.

Awhile ago I introduced an amendment which was voted down. I did not suppose it would be voted up. In argument against the amendment something was said about the conservation of water. My amendment did not in any way affect water conservation. It would have permitted surveys for existing projects and studies of water conservation. It is a thing we must have, and I think we should have conservation in all other lines; but when you ask me to vote to put 1,000,000 or 2,000,000 additional acres of land into competition with the farmers in my State, it is simply unreasonable, unfair, and inconsistent.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILCHRIST. I yield.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Along the line the gentleman suggests as to the effect of this project on other agricultural sections of the country, according to evidence given to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors a year ago by the promoters of both the Bonneville and Grand Coulee projects, the construction of these dams and the distribution of power at such low rates was hoped to prove an incentive for industries to move into these power areas. So we are bound to suffer the same as the farmers in the gentleman's State.

Mr. GILCHRIST. I suppose that is true. I have not

Mr. GILCHRIST. I suppose that is true. I have not stressed that feature of it because I am interested primarily in the effect of this irrigation project on the farmers.

"Consistency, thou art a jewel." The author of this statement is not known to me, but it is a truism that has been used from earliest time, and states a plain common-sense proposition. I urge you gentlemen to understand that consistency is needed, and that you will not be consistent if you bring these lands into competition against us, as you will be doing when you appropriate money for this project. At the same time you are doing this you are also appropriating money to take lands out of production in order that these poor folks farming in the Middle West can continue to get some sort of a meager living for themselves and their families out of the 12 to 14 hours they work each day, including Sunday. Why talk about a 40-hour week. Talk about $15 a week, the farmers of my State and your State in the Middle West work 70 hours a week. There is nothing to this proposal except to bring 1,000,000 more acres of land into competition with them and to make them pay for it. It is inconsistent and unfair.

 Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is rather interesting to listen to this debate. The distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Dirksen] complained a while ago because of the taxes in Tennessee. The trouble was the Tennessee Legislature the other day decided to impose some of those taxes on the liquor produced in his district, instead of on electricity, and all the breweries and all the liquor interests have been howling their protests from one end of the country to the other.

As a matter of fact, that trade down there in Tennessee was a compromise between the power company and the Tennessee Valley Authority—just what the enemies of the T. W. A. had been clamoring for and complaining that the T. V. A. would not grant.

I was surprised to hear the distinguished gentleman from Ohio complaining that this power program was injuring his farmers. Why, you will not have anybody on the farms if you do not wake up and get some electricity to them at rates they can afford to pay. You did not make more than 40,000,000 bushels of wheat in Ohio last year, yet you were overcharged $40,000,000 for electric lights and power—about twice as much as your wheat crop brought.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] complained about the effect of the bringing into cultivation of a few acres of land, yet the gentleman who followed him complained that it was taking land out of cultivation. Now, as a matter of fact, the gentleman from New York, like most New Yorkers, overlooks the fact that the primary purpose of land is for people to live on. This undertaking will establish homes. The land that will be irrigated will be for the benefit of the people who are to live in that area in the years to come.

You cannot accuse me of having any interest in Grand Coulee. It is a long way from where I live. I represent farmers, I represent the outstanding dairy district of the South. It is entirely probable that some of these farmers will have dairy cows, but only a small portion, a very small portion of their products would come into competition with either my farmers or the farmers of the gentleman from Ohio, or the farmers of the gentleman from New York.

The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts rose a moment ago and said some factories might be established out in that country. That is what he is afraid of. He is afraid they will not be able to send manufactured articles 3,000 miles to sell to those people out there because they might start some small industries of their own. He is willing to deny them the right to make a living on their land; in other words, he would deny to them the right to use their own resources, to build up their own homes, to enable them to buy his manufactured articles for fear they might move a run-down factory from Massachusetts to the State of Washington.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I just want to make this brief observation, in reply to the gentleman's question. The thing the gentleman from Massachusetts objects to is the Federal Government with our money going out into those districts in which the dams are located and paying from 65 to 70 percent of the cost, when only 32 percent is paid by those who use the power.

Mr. RANKIN. I did not hear that protest from Massachusetts when they were building the Cape Cod Canal. We never hear those protests from Massachusetts when they are putting navy yards up in that country, where a navy yard never was needed and never will be needed. If you spent this money in Massachusetts for something not in competition with the gentleman's manufacturers, you would see the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts supporting it 100 percent.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman from Mississippi know they expect to put into cultivation 1,200,000 acres of ground when they finish the Grand Coulee project and that it will cost over $170 an acre before they ever start to take the sagebrush off of it?

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has lowered the ante. The gentleman who is supposed to know about it said 1,500,000 acres.

Mr. RICH. I was conservative then when I said 1,200,000 acres.

Mr. RANKIN. No. Mr. Chairman, I will tell you what is behind all this—you need not camouflage it—the Power Trust that paid a lot of campaign expenses last year. That is what is behind it, and we are going to take the fight into every district in the United States, you need not worry about that. You have got a live wire now and you are not going to be able to turn it loose during the next 2 years.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. What proof has the gentleman that the Power Trust paid any campaign expenses?

Mr. RANKIN. All right-

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Let us have a little proof. Mr. RANKIN. We will give you the proof at the proper time.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The gentleman cannot bring in any proof.

Mr. RANKIN. Every man who rises up and fights this program always jumps on us because of the power question and we will take it to the people next year.

I hope the amendment will be voted down. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of personal privilege. The gentleman stated that the Power Trust paid campaign expenses.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may have the words of the last speaker taken down, if he desires.

Mr. RANKIN. I made no reference to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] in that connection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot rise to a question of personal privilege in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CULKIN. Then I demand that the words be taken down.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York state the words he desires taken down, as near as he can recall them?

Mr. CULKIN. I understood the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi to say—I am more polite to him——

Mr. RANKIN. No; the gentleman is not polite to him as long as he leaves that statement in the Record.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman stated that the people who spoke on this question or spoke against this project were under the pay, or their campaign—

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, no; I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. CULKIN. Or their campaign expenses were paid by the Power Trust; that is what I understood.

Mr. RANKIN. I not only did not say that, but I did not mean that. I said the influences behind this opposition—

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. That is not what the gentleman said.

Mr. CULKIN. I call for the record, if that is in order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has requested that the

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has requested that the words be taken down and the Clerk is preparing a transcript of them and will report them just as speedily as possible.

The Clerk will report the words complained of by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I will tell you what is behind all this. You need not camouflage it. The Power Trust that paid a lot of campaign expenses last year. That is what is behind it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buck, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 4852), the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, certain words used in debate were objected to and on request were taken down and read at the Clerk's desk, and that he herewith reported the same to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the words objected to in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I tell you what is behind all this. You need not camouflage it. The Power Trust that paid a lot of campaign expenses last year. That is what is behind it.

The SPEAKER. Who made that statement?

Mr. RANKIN. I did.

Mr. CULKIN rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. CULKIN. The complete text of what the gentleman said is not contained in that statement. The SPEAKER. The Chair may only rule on the language reported to the House by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair has listened very attentively to the reading of these words by the reading clerk and under the rule as announced by the Chair and read by the Chair heretofore this afternoon, the Chair cannot see in the language used any reflection or any personal reflection upon the gentleman from New York or any other Member of the House, and therefore holds that the words do not violate the rules or the proprieties of debate.

The Committee will resume its sitting.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, with Mr. Buck in the chair.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose. The time has been allotted to Members.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. Voornis] for 5 minutes.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I want to approach this problem from a slightly different angle than any that has been considered here this afternoon, as far as I know. I am referring to the problem of the Grand Coulee Dam.

We have in this country a general agricultural problem, to which reference has been made with telling effect this afternoon. In my opinion this problem centers in three or four factors. It centers in the manipulation of farm prices and the farmer's inability to control them; in the problem of fluctuations in the purchasing power of the dollar, which compels farmers in many instances to pay debts in dollars that are worth far more than when the money was borrowed; and finally in the problem of the effective demand, on the part of the people of this Nation, to buy the amount of farm commodities and, particularly, foodstuffs, which they really need.

For years we have not approached anything like the consumption on the part of the people of this Nation of the amount of farm commodities they really should consume. I cannot conceive that the opening up of a comparatively small acreage of land in the State of Washington is going to have a deleterious effect upon the general agricultural problem, which we all realize has to be solved. On the other hand, we have another kind of agricultural problem, another kind of human problem, which comes home to us in the Far West with very great force. That problem is the problem of exhausted lands in certain parts of the Nation. It is the problem of the attempt on the part of the people to farm lands that in some cases never should be farmed with the plow and are really only suitable for grazing and activities of that sort, the problem of lands that should be allowed to go back to grass. On the human side it is the problem of people who have been literally uprooted by these difficult conditions of the weather and the exhaustion of the soil, and the problem likewise of the industrialization of great areas where once large numbers of people farmed but where now the tractor has replaced them. These people, good people, fine American folks, are moving out of the country where they used to live because they have been uprooted from their homes and are looking for other places where they may settle. Most of them have gone to the Pacific coast. It seems to me it is only reasonable, proper, and wise that we should make it possible for new lands to be used for this purpose in order that we may be more nearly free to stop using and exhausting the soil of our country where that has become necessary.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. VOORHIS of California. In just a moment. Those of us who have faced these people and known of

Those of us who have faced these people and known of the problem faced by our States, the problem of resettling these people and giving them another chance at a new home and a new self-supporting existence, are naturally interested in projects like this one. Meanwhile, the problem of their relief and of trying to fit them into the life of our States is very difficult.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not true we are appropriating millions of dollars to enable a Government corporation to buy surplus farm products?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. We have a Surplus Commodities Corporation, that is very true, which purchases certain surplus commodities and uses them for the purpose of meeting certain human needs that we have in this country on the part of certain people.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not true we have a surplus of farm products?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. We have in some instances an apparent surplus over and above what the effective demand can take care of, but if you increase the prosperity of this country, if you make it possible for an increased number of people either in agriculture or in any other walk of life to carry on an effective and prosperous business you will have less of that than you have now. Furthermore, may I say the type of crops which are grown now on these lands in the West are not, generally speaking, the types of crops that will compete with the crops that are grown in other parts of the Nation.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is it not true you are taxing the farmers in the East to provide money to buy these surplus products and using that money to put this other land into competition with the eastern farmers?

Mr. VOORHIS of California. I am pleased the gentleman has raised that question. I doubt that I will have time to complete my answer, but I may say that over and over again that question is raised. We are asked how we are going to get the money to finance a project like Grand Coulee or Bonneville. I should like to reply to that by asking where the banking systems of this country got the money to buy the Government bonds they have bought in recent years. The total capitalization of the banks is about $7,000,000,000, yet they have bought $17,000,000,000 of bonds. The answer is that they utilized credit which they themselves manufactured in order to purchase Government bonds. Has not the Government of the United States credit enough to finance in like manner a project which will pay for itself in the course of time? [Applause.]

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose at this time.

Mr. PIERCE of Oregon. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the requests of the gentleman from Oregon and the gentleman from Mississippi will be granted.

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. To which request?

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The request of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is too late. The request has been granted.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry, but I was on my feet when the request was made.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I believe it would be wise to announce to the Members that on yesterday a request was made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] that all Members speaking on this bill have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their own remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that request applied only to Members who spoke yesterday. Mr. RICH. I understood it applied to all Members who have spoken on the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No; only to those who spoke yesterday. I will make the general request later.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] for 5 minutes.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak briefly on this question, because of the fact that I am from the West. I am from Oregon, as many of you know, and that is not a great way from this project, Coulee Dam.

I have been all over that country many times, and I am familiar personally with this project. We have before us today the proposition of appropriating additional funds to the amount of $23,000,000 to apply toward finishing the project. The Congress has already appropriated $96,000,000. One hundred and twenty-five million dollars, all told, will put the plant producing electric power, and will put it in a position to begin the development of the agricultural end, the irrigation and the reclamation of land. It seems to me. even from the standpoint of my brothers sitting on the left of this body, that we have passed a point when we should determine whether or not we should appropriate the necessary funds to continue the project. Personally, I am as much for economy as any of my associates on this side. I do believe, however, that we should consider each one of these projects on its merits.

We should not be carried away by hysteria; we should not determine that this country is going to the dogs and spending too much money and, therefore, that we should make no distinction between projects that come before us. On the contrary, we should exercise the power that we have to determine as to each project whether or not it is justified upon its merits. This project has been authorized, and as I said, we have spent $96,000,000. An additional amount up to $125,000,000 is all that is necessary to complete the dam and power projects for the first installation of power. It will be not only the means of bringing into cultivation 1,200,000 acres of tillable land, but it will also furnish immense quantities of electrical power. The revenues alone, at the rate already established by the Federal Power Commission, the income from the project, will go a long way toward completing the payment of the entire project. It will be seen, therefore, that eventually it will be self-

Considerable has been said that it is bringing this land into competition with other lands. Those of you who are familiar with conditions in the West know that in the last few years we have had a great influx of immigration, thousands and thousands of people, thousands of families having come to our country, Oregon, Washington, California, and the neighboring States from the East and the Middle West. They are destitute, many of them, trying to make a living. They are good honest Americans and they are entitled to your best judgment in determining what is best for them. They are there, they are looking for homes, they left your country. Many of you complain here about the farms they have left. They are with us, they are on our doorstep, and they need assistance. Would you not say that the honorable thing to do, after considering our investment there is to complete the project and put these Americans, these families, now stranded on this land which will produce crops with water and sunshine and equable climate available, so that they may rear their families and find homes and make useful and honorable citizens? Is it not wise to complete this project for their benefit and for the benefit of the Nation?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANGELL. Yes.
Mr. GREEN. I have observed the situation as the gentleman has, and I deem with him that it is in the public interest to develop this and complete the project as outlined.

Mr. ANGELL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. Mr. HILL. Is it not true that we are not producing enough for the consumption in our own country, that we need to produce more there, that we are importing things from the East?

Mr. ANGELL. That is true; and not only are we importing from the East, but we are importing from South America hundreds of thousands of pounds of beef, and we are importing grain from the north-Canada-and also pulpwood and various forest products, and our mills are idle. and hundreds of thousands of our workmen are out of work and have been without work for a long time. [Applause.]

gon has expired.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, of course, I feel deeply on this matter. I have grown up with this project as it were. I have watched the people out there for 30 years dream of its coming into being, and I have been one of them. It is in my district and that of my colleague, KNUTE HILL, who has fought so faithfully for it here today. Perhaps my views are colored by local interest, but I cannot, for the life of me, believe that the type of intelligent men and women such as I have met since I have been in Congress and who constitute the membership of this House, can take seriously the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] to cut an appropriation from $23,000,000 down $3,000,000 when $96,000,000 have been spent already, and when another appropriation of $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 will bring into being electricity to the extent of 320,000 kilowatts. which, if sold at 2 mills a kilowatt, will return to the Federal Treasury $5,000,000 a year. To support this amendment will kill that project. It would leave it at a place where it is absolutely useless; a man-made mountain of cement, blocking the flow of the Nation's mightiest river, but wholly useless. It would not serve any purpose at all. It is now within a short distance of completion, so far as the utility features are concerned. The contract is out upon it, with the biggest contracting firms in America. Sixteen thousand people are down there, 6,000 of them engaged in the work.

The contract is 40-percent finished. This is the second contract, yet it is proposed to say "Pour in $3,000,000 more and let it go."

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Was it not ex-President Herbert Hoover who just last fall very warmly praised this project?

Mr. LEAVY. I thank the gentleman. This cannot and should not be considered as a partisan matter. It is not a partisan matter, and for my friends on the Republican side of the House let me quote to you two statements made by ex-President Herbert Hoover within the last 6 months, 3 days before the election on November 8.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEAVY. Not now. This is what he said, and we believed him then and we still believe him. On Saturday, November 5, 1938, quoting from the Spokane Chronicle, a paper of wide circulation, ex-President Hoover, speaking in that city that night, said this:

"I understand there is considerable discussion around here that Grand Coulee Dam will die if Republicans are elected," the former Chief Executive declared as he graciously received reporters in an informal press conference a few minutes after he arrived at the Spokane Hotel this noon.

"I was the first Cabinet officer sent into this district to investigate the feasibilities of Grand Coulee Dam" (this was in 1926 when Mr. Hoover was Secretary of Commerce).

"As a result, the engineering plans and studies were taken specifically in hand. When the plans were advanced and it was shown that the project was feasible, I made the recommendation to a Democratic Congress that it be constructed.

"Having been responsible for the construction of Boulder Dam, I don't think we lacked the courage to tackle Grand Coulee.

"I will rejoice when it is completed. Certainly no Republican administration is going to drop that project for a minute.
"It is difficult to see how Grand Coulee can be termed exclusively a Democratic project or accomplishment except in the same fashion they have acquired credit for Boulder Dam.

I am 100 percent in accord with the ex-President in his utterance in reference to finishing Grand Coulee.

I want to state further that no one, I do not care who you are, who will go and see this project and then understand only meagerly the nature of that development, could ever support this amendment. This is not a land-development project throwing on the market products of 1,200,000 acres of land next year, nor next year, nor even the next year. The first acre of land that would come in here would be in 1942. The last acre that would come in would be in 1960. Three mighty generators are now in process of manufacture and on their way. It takes 3 years to build them. Construction was commenced more than 1 year ago. Each generator is contracted for at a cost of $4,000,000. Are you going to lose them? Are you going to refuse to complete the dam to the point where we can use these generators, which are being made here in the East?

At this point I desire to give you a break-down, showing where the last $45,000,000 was spent, and how it helped 45 States. It is as follows:

FORTY-FIVE STATES BUILD GRAND COULEE DAM

project means as a new national asset.

The Grand Coulee Dam is the key to the development of the Columbia River and its resources.

Flood control and aid to navigation: By stabilizing the flow of the river it will be the major flood-control factor on the river and prevent recurrent flood damages. During low-water stages the Grand Coulee Dam will increase the depth of the lower river between 2 and 3 feet, thus aiding navigation.

Reclamation: It will provide water for the reclamation of 1,200,000 acres of fertile, but now arid, land in central Washington, and will thus create American homes for the American standard of living. These homes will furnish a market for American manufactured material.

Rural electrification: An abundance of cheap power available for use on the farms.

Industrial, new industries: The large blocks of cheap power available, both prime and secondary, will make possible the development of the vast mineral resources in the area tributary to

I stated I would give you two quotations recently made by Mr. Herbert Hoover and as proof that he meant what he said about Grand Coulee being a splendid, feasible project, and that he would rejoice when it was completed. I give the following reiteration of the same idea in slightly different phraseology as he gave it to reporters of the Spokesman-Review. This statement was given to be printed in the Sunday edition of November 6, 1938, and appears on page 2. It is

In answer to a query about the claim made by the Democrats that Grand Coulee Dam would never be completed if Republicans were elected this fall, Mr. Hoover reminded his questioners that as a Cabinet officer in 1926 he was the first Federal official to start the studies of that project.

"The plans for this project were two-thirds completed at the end of my administration, and I recommended to a Democratic Congress that they be approved, but the Congress refused to act," he explained. "After having spent almost $100,000,000 on Grand Coulee it is unthinkable to suggest that it will be stopped. It is no more a New Deal project than was Boulder Dam or the San Francisco Bridge."

This article was read by possibly one-half million people, and Republicans were led to believe their party was for Grand Coulee.

The Democrats and Republicans alike in the great Northwest, by reason of the widespread publicity given to the abovequoted remarks of ex-President Hoover just 3 days preceding the November 1938 election, were all sure that Coulee Dam had ceased to be a partisan matter. They were sure that upon the convening of the new Congress, when appropriations came up, there would be no partisan fight against it.

How disappointing it is to us here who know this project and realize how near it is to a reality, and a completed undertaking, to be here today and see this murderous assault made upon this appropriation on a purely partisan basis. If this amendment prevails, as I have heretofore stated, it means the end of this great project and the loss of more than $100,-000,000 of invested capital by Uncle Sam, and its death must be chargeable to the Republican Party.

It is true that Republican Members from the West, some 8 or 10 in number, who know this undertaking just as ex-President Hoover knows it, are today supporting it; but with this exception every Republican on this floor is opposing Coulee, and when we come to vote, if it is saved today, it must be saved by a partisan Democratic vote from this side of the House. Personally, I regret deeply the fact that this great worth-while and deserving project has been dragged into the arena of partisan politics, and I am fearful that the National Republican Party will likewise have cause to regret in the future the attack today made on Grand Coulee.

With world affairs and national affairs as they are today, no greater single mistake could be made in this Congress than to suddenly bring to an end this useful, essential, and gi-gantic undertaking, which is exactly what would happen if the amendment by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN] should prevail.

I appeal to you to vote in the interest of our Nation and not as partisans, and if you will do this I am sure that you will vote down the amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CULKIN].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Culkin) there were—ayes 62 and noes 102,

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

For administrative expenses on account of the above projects, including personal services in the District of Columbia and in the field, $700,000, in addition to and for the same objects of expendineid, $700,000, in addition to and for the same objects of expenditure as are hereinbefore enumerated in paragraphs 2 and 3 under the caption "Bureau of Reclamation"; in all, $34,700,000: Provided, That of this amount not to exceed $50,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

We have under consideration today the Interior Department appropriation bill which makes appropriations for the Bureau of Reclamation. There is no item in this bill of greater interest to the western part of the United States than one having to do with the Reclamation Service.

On June 17, 1775, the American colonial troops at Bunker Hill fired "the shot heard 'round the world" and laid the foundation of a great national government.

On June 17, 1902, 127 years later to the day, Theodore Roosevelt, as President of the United States, approved the Federal Reclamation Act and thereby paved the way for national treatment of the development and utilization of the arid lands and water resources of the western third of the country.

RECLAMATION NONPARTISAN IN ORIGIN

The movement which resulted in the Reclamation Act was nonpartisan in its origin and received support of different groups representing all sections of the country. Reclamation has continued to receive this support. The benefits of the act in creating homes and widening the home markets for the industrial and agricultural products of other sections have been realized.

While in its physical aspects reclamation is centered in the area west of the one hundredth meridian, where the rainfall is far below the average, its contributions to economic and social values are Nation-wide, and the results have justified the confidence and support accorded it by national administrations, from that of Theodore Roosevelt to that of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The public statements of President Theodore Roosevelt, of Presidents Taft, Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, and President Franklin D. Roosevelt, answer criticisms leveled at the Federal reclamation program, and the endorsements by the political parties in the early part of the century do not attach partisan flavor.

URGED SETTLEMENT BUT WITHOUT SECURITY

In the more than a century and a quarter that intervened from 1775 to 1902, the frontier of the United States moved westward as the Government acquired, by purchase or cession, vast areas of land. Much of this land in the far West had a limited water supply. Individual States were carved out of the territory, but the National Government, as trustee for all of the people, held on to the wide expanse of public lands within these States. Settlement was encouraged under the homestead laws, but little, if anything, was done to add to the security of the homes in the area where the average annual rainfall varied from 3 to 20 inches.

Irrigation of arid lands was not new. The Indians in the Southwest practiced it before the coming of the white man. The Spanish settlers who came into the area by way of Mexico brought with them from the Mediterranean countries knowledge of the effectiveness of the application of water to the land. Farmers who had moved westward from the Mississippi and older areas carried on irrigation practices by individual effort, so far as limited resources would permit.

JOB TOO BIG FOR PRIVATE CAPITAL

The job, however, was proving too much for private initiative and private capital. The areas most easily irrigated had been taken up where water could be diverted from rivers and streams. The increasing need for storage of the spring floods was recognized by 1902. The young States, struggling with a meager population and with substantial parts of their resources, then, as now, untaxable by reason of Federal ownership, were unable to advance a program individually. Neither could they advance a program in cooperation with their neighbors, for interstate problems were involved that required the attention of Federal authority.

As a result, for nearly 25 years preceding the turn of the century there had been increasing interest in movements for national legislation designed to guide and provide actual leadership for the conservation and utilization of the land and water resources of this western area in which the whole country had a tangible and enormous interest. Opinion differed in the West as to the steps the Federal Government should take. Other sections of the country, at first largely uninterested, now awaited a definite program.

IRRIGATION BROUGHT EXPANSION

In the meantime the country was having a practical demonstration of the benefits arising from the progress of haphazard western development. The area, where now are 11 States of the Mountain and Pacific groups, had increased in population by 1900 to slightly more than 4,000,000, a total in excess of the number of inhabitants of the Thirteen Original States at the close of the War of the Revolution. No small part of this permanent growth was attributable to 7,500,000 acres of land then irrigated.

Homes were created, cities and towns developed from the desert, and the purchasing power that followed in the wake of stabilized farming operations was finding its way into channels of national trade. The country was seeking with renewed vigor outlets in foreign lands for its manufactured products and other materials, and, similarly, attention was being directed to the opportunities for broadening the home market by sound and logical development of a territory that had demonstrated it could support a still larger population and thus expand its purchasing power.

NATIONALIZATION OF RECLAMATION NOT NEW VENTURE

It was those practical phases of the economic situation that appealed to the thoughtful business, industrial, transportation, and labor interests of the country. Up to that time the United States was one of the few countries with any considerable area of arid lands that had not undertaken irrigation as a governmental enterprise.

Queen Semiramis in Egypt, more than 4,000 years ago, led her national government into turning the waters from the mighty Nile onto the thirsty soil of the desert. Her example had been followed by national leaders in other areas and other ages as community growth developed the need.

THREE POLITICAL PARTIES ENDORSE MOVEMENT

As the time for the national political conventions of 1900 drew near, the attention of the East, the South, and the Midwest turned toward the national aspects of reclamation. Largely as a result of a campaign of education in which business interests seeking a wider home market participated, three political parties of the day wrote planks of endorsement into their national platform as follows:

Republican: "In further pursuance of the constant policy of the Republican Party to provide free homes on the public domain, we recommend adequate national legislation to reclaim the arid lands of the United States, reserving control of the distribution of water to the respective States and Territorles."

Democratic: "We favor an intelligent system of improving the arid lands of the West, storing the waters for purposes of irrigation, and the holding of such lands for actual settlers."

Silver Republican: "We believe the National Government should lend every aid, encouragement, and assistance toward reclamation of the arid lands of the United States * * and we believe it to be the duty of the General Government to provide for the construction of storage reservoirs and irrigation works * * *."

struction of storage reservoirs and irrigation works

THEODORE ROOSEVELT'S POSITION

The subject was not new on the floors of the Congress and in debates on proposed legislation. The idea of nationalization of reclamation had been advanced by recognized leaders from the East and the West, among the former being the late Abram S. Hewitt, of New York. Western Senators and Representatives, however, had been unable to agree on the form the proposed legislation should take, and, beyond piecemeal attempts to reach a solution, nothing was accomplished until Theodore Roosevelt succeeded to the Presidency in the fall of 1901 and immediately considered reclamation as his first major task. In his first message to Congress in December of that year he declared:

It is as right for the National Government to make the streams and rivers of the arid region useful by engineering works for the storage of water as to make useful the rivers and harbors of the humid regions by engineering works of another character.

The reclamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich

The reclamation and settlement of the arid lands will enrich every section of our country, just as the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys brought prosperity to the Atlantic States. The increased demand for manufactured articles will stimulate industrial production, while wider home markets and the trade of Asia will consume larger food supplies and thus effectually prevent competition with eastern agriculture.

Indeed, the products of irrigation will be consumed chiefly in mining and other industries which would otherwise not come into existence at all.

Our people as a whole will profit, for successful homemaking is but another name for upbuilding of the Nation.

HAD NATIONAL VIEW OF PROBLEMS

In his analysis of the subject, President Theodore Roosevelt had the benefit of first-hand knowledge acquired while a young man residing on the plains of Wyoming and through his later associations in the East. Although in his message he did not favor any particular plan, he later, according to his autobiography, found his "interference" necessary in opposition to the ideas of those "who consistently fought for local and private interests against the interests of the people as a whole." He gave his support to the principles embodied in a bill originally introduced by Representative (later Senator) Francis G. Newlands, Democrat, Nevada, which provided for the segregation of the proceeds from the sales of public lands in 16 States into a revolving fund for the construction of self-liquidating projects under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior. This was the bill finally enacted on June 17, 1902.

How the prophecy of Theodore Roosevelt was fulfilled is demonstrated by the results of the program in the succeeding PRIVATE INVESTMENT STIMULATED Entrance of the Federal Government into the field of reclamation instilled confidence in the future of the West, and by 1910 the population of the 11 Mountain and Pacific States had increased by 2,000,000 or more. Investments in private irrigation enterprises were stimulated, and by 1930 more than $600,000,000 of private capital had been expended on these systems, while the Federal Government's outlay was less than half of that amount, including the cost of Indian irrigation projects.

The purchasing power of the West expanded with the growing populations supported by these irrigation projects. Equipment and materials for construction were purchased from eastern manufacturers. The home markets of all sections of the country were affected. Not only manufactured goods were in demand in the West but agricultural products as well, for production on the farms had not kept pace with the demands of the increasing population and the distance from eastern consuming markets had served to bar competition.

CONTRIBUTIONS TO NATIONAL WEALTH

From 1900 to 1938 the population of the 11 States in which major reclamation activities are centered had increased more than 300 percent, with the inhabitants not only consuming the greater share of the products of irrigated land but also buying substantial quantities of the agricultural produce of areas eastward. Instances of the influence which developments in the West have had on industrial and transportation agencies might be multiplied and compared with the returns arising from the distribution of insurance premiums collected in the West. Two out of every three dollars expended for insurance is paid to companies located east of the Mississippi River.

PRESIDENT TAFT APPROVED PROGRESS

Progress of the reclamation program was praised by President William Howard Taft in an address at Spokane, Wash., September 29, 1909, 7 years after Congress had enacted the law. In one address on conservation he said:

The plan of the Government to reclaim the arid and semiarid lands manifested in the Reclamation Act has been carried out most rapidly by the bureau charged with its execution. There are more than 30 projects which have been entered upon by the Reclamation Bureau, and I believe all of them are to be commended for their excellent adaptation to the purpose for which they were erected and for the speed with which the work has been done. * * *

The work has been well done and reflects credit on the engineers that have had charge of it.

that have had charge of it.

By the time President Taft made his observations on the western tour of 1909 there were 410,628 acres irrigated by Federal projects. By 1937, 1,725,463 acres were so watered and supplemental supplies provided for 1,389,187 acres under private ditches threatened with destruction before Government works came to their rescue under an expansion of the original law.

CONTRIBUTED TO WORLD WAR FOOD SUPPLIES

During the World War period reclamation and other irrigation projects responded to President Wilson's appeal for increased food supplies, and their records of production and their contributions to the national defense speak for themselves.

PRESIDENT HARDING FOR EXPANSION

President Harding, in a message to Congress on December 6, 1921, suggested expansion of reclamation:

There is yet unappropriated approximately 200,000,000 acres in the public domain, 20,000,000 acres of which are known to be sus-ceptible of reclamation and (being) made fit for homes by provision ceptible of reciamation and (being) made in the development of its for irrigation.

The Government has been assisting in the development of its remaining lands until the estimated increase in land values in the irrigated sections is full $500,000,000 and the crops of 1920 alone on these lands are estimated at $100,000,000. Under the law authorizing these expenditures for development the advances are to be repaid, and it would be good business for the Government to provide for reclamation of the remaining 20,000,000 acres, in addition to expediting the completion of projects long under way.

The land use committee of the National Resources Board in 1934 estimated the maximum area in the West susceptible of economical irrigation to be approximately 26,000,000 acres more than that for which facilities were provided in 1930. Bureau of Reclamation surveys, however, have indicated that the grand total of land now irrigated and which can be irrigated economically will approximate 30,000,000 acres, or a little more than 10,000,000 acres in excess of the area watered in 1930.

The Department of Agriculture has placed the area of once productive farm lands impoverished or ruined by soil erosion at more than 200,000,000 acres, or 10 times that now irrigated in the West, while an additional 100,000,000 acres is actively affected by erosion and its productivity threatened.

URGED UTILIZATION OF WATER POWER

Subsequently, on July 22, 1923, at Spokane, Wash., President Harding, speaking on Development, Reclamation, and Water Utilization, called attention to the possibilities of multiple uses of water in connection with irrigation and power developments:

Our whole view of the relation of water to western development has changed much in the last generation.

Only a few years ago these waters were looked upon as potentially useful merely for irrigation and agriculture. We entered upon a great program of irrigation enterprise in that era when we had but a vague notion about the dual purpose that water resources ought to serve.

But now we know that the same water can, in most cases, be utilized both for power and irrigation.

The Bureau of Reclamation has constructed 24 power plants on 13 projects where two and one-half billion kilowatt-hours of electric energy were produced in 1937. Power developments are not only self-supporting but, in many instances, contribute materially to the payment of the cost of irrigation facilities.

Including Boulder Dam and projects under construction, the ultimate capacity of power plants to be installed by the Bureau of Reclamation exceeds 5,000,000 horsepower.

PRESIDENT COOLIDGE ENDORSES PROGRAM

President Calvin Coolidge, in a letter to the president of the American Mining Congress, September 17, 1924, gave reclamation his endorsement thus:

Some minor criticism has been made as to the policy of our unremitting development of these (reclamation) projects by those who have thought we were already overproducing in agricultural products. They feel that these projects should be stayed until agricultural production had readjusted itself.

These criticisms lie in the lack of understanding that these projects take many years for development; that they furnish but a small portion of the increased food supply required even by our increased population; that the utilization of their supplies lies in the development of the West itself.

It is my purpose to unremittingly stimulate and encourage the development of these projects by every authority of the Federal Government.

PRODUCTS INSUFFICIENT FOR WESTERN POPULATION

If all of the products of land watered by reclamation works were available for human consumption, they would be insufficient to provide subsistence for any considerable part of the increasing population of the West. On the reclamation farms and in the 254 cities and towns dependent on them are 900,000 persons. As a matter of fact, the products of approximately one-half of the irrigated acreage of Federal projects are consumed by livestock. Large quantities of foodstuffs required for the project and more densely populated areas of the West are imported from other sections of the country.

A survey has shown that 21 States outside of the reclamation area furnish food and other agricultural products for the West. From the Midwest alone the shipment of cornand-hog products to the reclamation area has averaged annually in value $123,000,000. In addition, tobacco products consumed in the West annually amount to $80,000,000, while the consumption of cotton textiles, in addition to those provided from the comparatively small areas of irrigated land, averages more than $97,000,000 annually.

PRESIDENT HOOVER SEES NATIONAL BENEFIT

President Herbert Hoover, in a letter to western Governors in conference at Salt Lake City, June 30-July 2, 1930, took cognizance of the national significance of reclamation:

The undertaking (reclamation) has been of great benefit to this region (the West) and has been the cause of adding much wealth to the Nation.

If the fundamental facts are properly appraised, it seems certain that the arguments of opponents of Federal reclamation will find satisfactory answer, and that they will no longer countenance the misleading information that is now being broadcast through different agencies.

Only 1 percent of the farm commodities raised in the United States are produced on Federal reclamation projects, and 90 percent of the quantity so produced is locally consumed.

The projects themselves furnish extensive markets for manufactured goods as well as for farm products not raised under irriga-tion and thus seem to afford material benefits rather than detriment to other sections. It may be further said that crops raised under irrigation are generally supplemental to rather than competitive with the products of other farms.

* * No valid arguments appear to oppose this constructive Federal undertaking. Rather, support should be given in the light of the contribution to the Nation's good.

PURCHASES IN OTHER SECTIONS OF COUNTRY

Recent surveys of two reclamation areas confirm Mr. Hoover's statement that the projects themselves furnish extensive markets for manufactured goods. On the Yakima project in Washington State more than 50 percent of the purchasing power was expended for articles manufactured in the Midwest, East, and South, including automobiles, farm machinery, equipment, household furniture, and practically every article used in agricultural production or home making. On the Boise project in Idaho approximately 70 percent of the incoming shipments, according to value, originated in States outside the reclamation area.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S BROAD POSITION

A little more than 30 years after the Reclamation Act went into effect Franklin D. Roosevelt brought to the Presidency a broad knowledge of the accomplishments of the reclamation program not only as a factor in the development of the West but as an influence on employment and economic conditions elsewhere in the country. While droughts were then just beginning to drive farm families from the Great Plains area to the West, the demand for irrigated land was even then greater than the supply, and by 1938 only 3,000 of 58,400 families migrating to the 7 far Western States in that period had been settled on self-sustaining farms.

RECLAMATION HAS "PROVEN ITS WORTH"

In a message to the National Reclamation Association at Boise, Idaho, in November 1933, he wrote:

Reclamation as a Federal policy has proven its worth and has a very definite place in our economic existence. Spread over one-third of the territory of the United States and creating taxable values and purchasing power affecting municipal, State, and Federal Governments and private industry, it is only reasonable that we should all take pride in its achievements and success.

NOT TOO MUCH "GOOD" FARM LAND

At Cheyenne, Wyo., September 24, 1937, President Roosevelt made the assertion that the reclamation program "would make available unnecessary farm lands and that there are enough good farm lands in the United States to take care of all the people who need them for 50 years to come."

"You and I know this is not so," he added. "You here * * know of the number of people—families—who have had to leave their farms in the drought area * * people who could not make a go of it on poor land, families forced to leave their homes to avoid starvation. These people have come farther West looking for a chance to earn a livelihood, looking for good land and not being able to find it.

"* * So, for all of those families. I believe the state of the son the son

"* * So, for all of those families, I believe it is the duty of the Federal Government and the State governments to provide them with land where it is possible to do it, where they can make a living."

OPPORTUNITIES FOR NEW HOUSES IMPORTANT

Referring to the progress the general water conservation program, including reclamation, is making, President Roosevelt in October 1938, in a letter to Mr. O. S. Warden, president of the National Reclamation Association, emphasized further the fulfillment of the original purposes of the Federal reclamation program:

The providing of new opportunities to make homes and gain decent livings for a large number of our farmers through irrigation of western deserts serves to increase the wealth of the Nation and to cement us economically into a more perfect whole. I have felt concern for the large number of families which have been forced by drought and adversities from their homes in various sections. The construction now in progress in the West will, in part solve the problem ous sections. The construction now in progress in the West will, in part, solve the problem.

The fact that these projects are expected to repay the cost of their construction, through revenues from water and from power, when power is possible of development, is not to be overlooked nor underestimated. This makes it possible for me to justify expenditures on a scale commensurate with the needs for such

The scores of dams, the thousands of miles of canals, the many power plants and the thousands upon thousands of homes which have resulted from Federal reclamation are monuments to the sound plan which is being so ably executed by the Department of the Interior through the Bureau of Reclamation.

Since 1902 the Bureau of Reclamation has constructed 147 dams for the storage or diversion of water and each has stood the test of time and service; 20,000 miles of canals, ditches, and drains are serving more than 51,000 irrigated farms on Federal projects; and reservoirs with a capacity of 45,522,970 acre-feet provide water sufficient to cover the State of Nevada to a depth of 6 inches.

Of $260,000,000 of construction costs of projects in operation in 1938, approximately $60,000,000 has been repaid.

Crop values of approximately two and a half billions of dollars produced on land served by project works represent a contribution to the national wealth of nearly 10 times the actual cost of the projects making possible this production.

Active support of each administration has made possible the fruition of a program which has brought homes and happiness to great numbers, but continual support is necessary to insure and progressively further the purposes of the Federal reclamation program.

The Interior Department Appropriation bill under consideration at the present time provides money for carrying on this work during the next fiscal year.

These projects mean a great deal not alone for the prosperity and well-being of the West, but for the entire country. I trust that the membership of this body will study carefully these important projects and their influence upon our national life. Such a study I am sure will convince an overwhelming majority that these improvements are well conceived, economically feasible, and should be supported by the membership of this House.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

I just want a half minute. I felt sorry about the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Leavy] who said this should not be a partisan issue; and it is not. I personally feel very sympathetic toward the gentleman, but, in the matter of economy, it is now definitely shown that that is a partisan

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the language appearing in lines 3 and 4, on page 105, reading, "and in developing the educational work" on the ground that there is no law authorizing the Department to go into educational work.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I submit, Mr. Chairman, this is a part of the general duties of the National Park

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, may I be heard on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Mississippi briefly on the point of order.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from New York makes a point of order against the language in lines 3 and 4, on page 105, on the ground that it provides for educational work in the national parks. Am I correct in this understanding?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gen-tleman from New York is against the language "and in developing the educational work" appearing in lines 3 and 4, on page 105.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, the truth of the business is that educational work has always been a part of the prerogatives of the National Park Service. That is what the national parks are for-educational purposes-and have been so used for years and years and years. That is why money is spent on them. School children, teachers, and other people visit these parks. For what purpose? For educational purposes; to learn of the things there exhibited. I know of nothing of greater educational value to a child than a visit to Yellowstone National Park, there to observe first-hand the great works of Nature as manifested in these geysers. Another example is Niagara Falls. Why do we go to Niagara Falls? We go for their educational value. To strike out the words "educational work" would be simply to kill that function of the Park Service.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is made to stop propaganda. That is what the effect of it would be.

The gentleman realizes that.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, if that be what the gentleman is after, he is in the wrong place. He should jump on the newspapers and the radio and the Power Trust, if he wants to stop propaganda in this country. The Park Service is not the place to start. To pass them up and then try to stop the educational work of the Park Service on the ground that it is propaganda is too far fetched to be seriously considered

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, unless the gentleman from Oklahoma desires to be heard further on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I do wish to be heard further, if the Chair will indulge me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to make an extended statement, but I do call the attention of the Chair to title XVI of the Code, section 1, entitled "The National Park Service," which reads in part as follows:

The Service thus established shall promote and regulate the use of the Federal areas known as national parks, monuments, and reservations hereinafter specified, except such as are under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War as provided by law, by such means and measures as conform to the fundamental purpose of said parks, monuments, and reservations which purpose is to conserve the scenery and the natural and historic objects and the wildlife therein, and to provide for the enjoyment of the same in such manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future genera-

Mr. Chairman, I submit that a broad construction of this language would certainly cover educational purposes. For this reason I maintain that the language to which the gentleman objects is authorized by law, and that the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The section that the gentleman from Oklahoma has called attention to is the basic law governing the National Park Service, and provides for the enjoyment of the same in such manner and by such means as will leave it unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

Certainly the education that may be offered by the National Park Service in dealing with its own features and wildlife is a means which will leave the parks unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

In addition to that, may the Chair call the attention of the Committee to a ruling made on March 2, 1938, in the Committee of the Whole when it was considering the Interior Department appropriation bill, at which time a point of order was made against the paragraph that follows this one because of the motion-picture feature. The Chairman at that time ruled that this was a necessary incident to the carrying on of the activities of the National Park Service and certainly must be regarded as in part, at least, educa-

Under that precedent and with the Chair's present understanding of the purport of the basic law, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Lambertson: Page 105, line 4, strike out the period, insert a comma and the following: "Provided, That no part of the fund herein appropriated shall be used for the payment of salaries or expenses of experts or specialists employed in connection with the Jefferson National Expansion Memorial."

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered to protect the Government of the United States against becoming further involved in the construction of a $30,000,000 second memorial to Thomas Jefferson in St. Louis, Mo. St. Louis already has one Jefferson Memorial and we are building a beautiful one here in Washington right There are such things as carrying these memorials too far when people are jobless and hungry throughout the land. This is nothing short of a disreputable real-estate scheme and the land alone will cost more than $6,000,000. This project has never been authorized by Congress and the time to disown this political orphan is right now.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment puts nothing in the bill and takes nothing out in money. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cochran] the other day indicated he will never ask for a dollar for this St. Louis Jefferson Memorial. The Congress has not been asked for a dollar and it never was authorized by law. The President has given it $6,750,000 relief money and they have spent pretty nearly all of that money, too, that St. Louis put up, two and a quarter million dollars, in paying 104 Park Service employees.

I want to guard against the taking of any Federal money which has not been authorized in case their money runs out in the next year.

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr.

Mr. Chairman, this is only a gesture on the part of the gentleman from Kansas. I anticipated his amendment and I looked into the matter. Not one dollar of any funds appropriated by the Congress for the National Park Service or the Historical Site Division, of the Department of the Interior, is being used for this project. This comes to me from the Department officials.

Let me tell the gentleman what he is doing. If this project is going to proceed, like the gentleman, I do not want the Government to pay any more for the land than it actually should pay. If the property is purchased the owners are entitled to its fair value and not a dollar more. The courts have appointed appraisers, a set for each block, and two-thirds of the property has been appraised. Property owners have taken exception to the amount in some cases, and the Government has taken exception in others. We are proceeding under the Missouri law, and both sides will have an opportunity to be heard in the Federal court.

The Department of the Interior has an excellent gentleman in charge in St. Louis now, Mr. Nagle. He is not being paid out of any appropriation in this bill. Mr. Nagle is making a fine record. I have never been in his office, but I met him twice at lunch. He is scrutinizing every move with extreme care, and I can tell you no public official is running his office, other than his superiors here in Washington. I want that man to proceed in the way he has been doing in the past so that the gentleman from Kansas will have no ground to complain about him, or the work to which he has been assigned.

I want the gentleman from Kansas to stop for a moment and reflect and I am sure he will realize he is making a mistake. Let us assume it is necessary for some official of the National Park Service or of the Department of the Interior to go out to St. Louis on an important matter that requires investigation. I would want him to go if it was important and I know the gentleman would want him to go, but under the amendment offered by the gentleman, that man would not be able to go.

It matters not to me what you do with the amendment. I am not asking the Members to vote it up or down. Do as you please. However, I do not think you should tie the hands of a department official who might find it necessary to go to St. Louis and make an investigation which the gentleman himself might want. Enough has been said about the project already, and it is my hope that nothing will occur in the future that will warrant criticism. Mr. LAMBERTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas. Mr. LAMBERTSON. It is possible under the language of this bill to send out experts in different groups and of different kinds and pay them out of Government money.

Mr. COCHRAN. I do not want them to do that if it is for the purpose of permanently assigning them to duty, and I am sure the National Park Service does not desire to do so. But if it is necessary to send someone for a few days, this amendment prohibits it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. St. Louis, of course, is paying for it now, but her money is gone. The city is broke and her bonds cannot be sold, and she will not put up any more money

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman states that the bonds of St. Louis cannot be sold. When he makes that statement he is absolutely talking about something he knows nothing about, because St. Louis has always been able to sell its bonds. Do not worry about that. I agree with the gentleman, I do not want any of this money to go directly to the memorial, but I say be careful, because you might find one of your Interior Department officials unable to fulfill an important mission.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCHRAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsyl-

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman from St. Louis feel that the Government at no time in the future ought to appropriate any money for this new $30,000,000 project in St. Louis?

Mr. COCHRAN. How many times have I told the gentleman and Members of the House I am not asking you to appropriate any money? This does not mean an appropriation. but it does mean it ties the hands of the National Park Service even to make an investigation, if found necessary. That is the point I am trying to make.

Mr. RICH. Will that hold good a year from now?

Mr. COCHRAN. I just told the gentleman this does not provide for any money. This amendment simply limits the annual expenses for the National Park Service.

Mr. RICH. I hope the gentleman will never ask for any and that he will fight it every time it comes up here.

Mr. COCHRAN. The time to criticize me is when you find me urging Congress to appropriate money. Just recently you had several votes, including roll calls, on an appropriation to construct a building to house the Census Bureau. About $3,000,000 was involved, and it was shown if the building was not constructed it would be necessary in the end to pay more than this amount to rent quarters, which will be absolutely necessary to handle the 1940 census, which, under the Constitution, we are required to provide for. Is it not easy to realize what will happen, in view of what did happen in regard to the Census Building, if an effort was made to secure an appropriation of $20,000,000 for a building in this proposed memorial park? My experience in this House tells me what will happen, and you know as well as I do. Compare this amount with the appropriation for the Jefferson Memorial in Washington. You know how long it took before Congress provided for the construction of that memorial and only a few million was involved.

The money to carry on this project is in the Treasury of the United States obligated for this specific purpose and it is limited. This amendment has nothing to do with that obligation but is directed at the expenses for administering the laws under jurisdiction of the National Park Service in the Washington office. It is merely a gesture on the part of the gentleman from Kansas, and in no way impedes progress on the project, but might prevent proper supervision by the officials of the National Park Service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I am confident that it is unnecessary to make an extended statement at this time, but I want the Members to know there is not a dollar in this bill to be used for the purpose for which the gentleman has offered his amendment. The gentleman in his remarks stated it would not take anything from the bill or add anything to the bill. The gentleman might as well have offered the Ten Commandments or the Lord's Prayer. Both would be good reading and I would commend them especially to Members of Congress. Of course, there would be no particular point in attaching either to the pending appropriation bill. And yet that would be just as logical and practical as it would be for this body to adopt the amendment offered by my good friend, the distinguished gentleman from Kansas.

The gentleman from Kansas made an excellent speech, and I agree with much he said, but we assume he offered the amendment for the purpose of making the speech. Surely the gentleman was not too serious in offering the pending amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LAMBERTSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SECCOMBE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much I do not have the statistics today from the Department of the Interior relating to the McKinley Memorial. Lest we forget, some 40 years ago a former Member of this House, a soldier, a lawyer, a statesman, and a beloved President, was assassinated by a known Communist. Later a beautiful memorial and mausoleum was built by the pennies and nickels and dimes of the school children and citizens of the United States. In loving memory of this beloved President former members of his Cabinet and neighbors formed a trusteeship known as the McKinley Memorial Trustees. Up to the present date out of their own pockets they have paid for the upkeep and the maintenance of this beautiful memorial.

I am positive many Members here could speak on this subject better than I. However, the memorial is in my home city, and I represent his district. Today I have a letter from Mr. Demaray, of the Department of the Interior, stating that Mr. John Nagle, the superintendent of the memorial, is making a survey of it with the hope that the National Park Service will take over this beautiful memorial and maintain it and keep it in proper repair.

It is needless for me to dwell at any length when we are speaking of national memorials on this great exponent and champion of a high protective tariff. It would be a fine thing for the present administration to read about the life and the achievements of this former President, inasmuch as some of my colleagues on this side have mentioned former President Hoover today, and follow along the lines of his example. I hope that when this bill goes to the Senate I may have a proper amendment drawn to include the amount necessary to maintain this great structure, so when we visit this beautiful mausoleum we can receive therefrom the inspiration of a man who had his ear to the ground and understood the common people. If he were alive today, I am positive we would not have turmoil in our land and would have a strict neutrality as regards foreign lands.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SECCOMBE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not true that the McKinley Memorial is fast decaying and needs repair very badly?

Mr. SECCOMBE. The gentleman is absolutely correct.
Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Does the gentleman know how much the school children and the citizens of this country contributed in the first place to pay for the memorial?

Mr. SECCOMBE. I do not have the exact figures, but the Federal Government did not contribute one cent. The school children and the citizens paid it all.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. As I understand, the memorial was paid for entirely from the contributions of school children and societies of various kinds.

Mr. SECCOMBE. That is absolutely correct. I might state that this beautiful monument embraces some 26 acres and lies in a great park. At the present time the Federal Government has not spent 1 cent on this beautiful memorial, which on the outside around the plaza has deteriorated. The building proper contains not only the body of our beloved which on the outside around the plaza has deteriorated. The building proper contains not only the body of our beloved former President but also the bodies of his beloved invalid wife, to whom he was so devoted, and his children. It is only proper that we should place in this bill an amendment providing funds to maintain this memorial in the same spirit that other memorials are being maintained. I am positive that if I had the figures from the superintendent I could offer the necessary amendment. However, I merely bring this to your attention at this time so that when this proposition is brought before you everyone will be familiar with exactly what is sought to be done. As has been stated, this should be carried on for educational purposes. I am sorry I do not have the amendment prepared at this time, but I bring this matter to your attention lest you forget a most beloved fighter and a most beloved President. [Applause.]

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

National military parks, battlefields, monuments, and cemeteries: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement, including not exceeding $10,000 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles, $388,860: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be available for the payment of salaries or expenses for commissioners of the Guilford Courthouse National Military Park.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Durham: On page 113, line 22, after "$388,860", change the colon to a period and strike out the remaining part of the paragraph through the word "Park" in line 25.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire time to speak on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $8,000 of the amount of $100,000 appropriated in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1937, for the development and improvement of the Appomattox Court House National Historical Monument, Virginia, in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 13, 1935 (49 Stat. 613), is hereby made available for the acquisition of approximately 15 acres of land and improvements thereon within the proposed boundaries of the monument.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph, from line 8 to line 16, on page 114, authorizing the purchase of certain land; that it is not authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Against what language does the gentleman make the point of order?

Mr. RICH (reading):

Is hereby made available for the acquisition of approximately 15 acres of land and improvements thereon within the proposed boundaries of the monument.

This is legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will read the verbiage of the bill he will note it provides this is "in accordance with the provisions of the act approved August 13, 1935 (49 Stat. 613)." If the gentleman will read sections 2 and 3 of the act, he will find clear and distinct authorization. These sections of the act clearly authorize the appropriation of $100,000 for the purpose of acquiring land.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma read to the Chair the language of the statute?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the purchase of land is authorized by the proviso to section 3 of the act to which I have referred and which the Chairman now has before him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair has examined the act of August 13, 1935, cited in the paragraph and finds the following provision in section 3:

The Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept donations of land or buildings, structures, etc., within the boundaries of said park as determined and fixed hereunder, and donations of funds for the purchase and maintenance thereof, provided, he may acquire on behalf of the United States by purchase, when purchasable at prices deemed by him reasonable, otherwise by condemnation under the provisions of the act of August 1, 1888, such tracts of land in the park as may be necessary for the completion thereof, as authorized in section 2.

There appears to be ample authority for the appropriation made in this paragraph, and the point of order is overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations herein made for the national parks, national monuments, and other reservations under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, shall be available for the giving of educational lectures therein; for the services of field employees in cooperation with such nonprofit scientific and historical societies engaged in educational work in the various parks and monuments as the Secretary, in his discretion, may designate; and for travel expenses of employees attending Government camps for training in forest-fire prevention and suppression.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, on page 116, at line 23, where it states "shall be available for the giving of educational lectures therein," I make a point of order against that language.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order for the same reason that a similar point of order has been overruled.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations herein made for the National Park Service shall be available for the installation and operation of telephones in Government-owned residences, apartments, or quarters occupied by employees of the National Park Service, provided the Secretary determines the provision of such services are advantageous in the administration of these areas.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph on the ground it is not authorized by law and also because it imposes additional duties on the Secretary in the putting in of telephones in private houses.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order and offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: On page 117, after line 8, insert:

"Appropriations herein made for the National Park Service shall be available for the installation and operation of telephones in Government-owned residences, apartments, or quarters occupied by employees of the National Park Service."

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment in that it goes so far as to include quarters occupied by employees of the National Park Service, which is beyond the authority of the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, these are Government-owned residences, and this service is a necessary incident to the proper carrying out of the work of the Department of the Interior. If the residences in question were privately owned, there might be a question about the point of order, but certainly the language to which the gentleman objects could not possibly be construed as being subject to a point of order under the circumstances and facts stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

LXXXIV—183

If the cottages, residences, and so forth, were privately owned, the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Taber] might lie, but these are entirely Government-owned residences and the installation appears to be necessary and incident to the operation of the National Park Service, and for that reason the point of order is overruled.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if we want to close at 5 o'clock, I may suggest that the roads and trails item is going to be a controversial matter, and I would ask that we skip that part of the bill and go over to line 12, on page 119.

The CHAIRMAN. May the Chair suggest that the Chair has had advance notice that there are going to be some other controversial matters, and if it is the desire of the chairman of the subcommittee to rise at 5 o'clock, it might be just as well to read this paragraph and stop there.

Mr. RICH. It is perfectly all right with me to read this paragraph, so that we will have the privilege of presenting amendments the next time it is taken up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Is the gentleman willing to have the rest of the bill read, aside from the matter of roads and trails?

Mr. RICH. No; I think not, because there are several items there that will be discussed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Then let us read this paragraph.

Roads and trails, National Park Service: For the construction, reconstruction, and improvement of roads and trails, inclusive of necessary bridges, in the national parks, monuments, and other areas administered by the National Park Service, including the Boulder Dam National Recreational Area, and other areas authorized to be established as national parks and monuments, and national park and monument approach roads authorized by the act of January 31, 1931 (16 U.S. C. 8a and 8b), as amended, including the roads from Glacier Park Station through the Blackfeet Indian Reservation to various points in the boundary line of the Glacier National Park and the international boundary, and for the acquisition of lands and interests in land and expenses inal thereto necessary for the construction of connecting parkways for the Colonial National Historical Park in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 5, 1936 (49 Stat. 1493), as amended by the act of June 28, 1938 (Public Law No. 753, 75th Cong.), and pursuant to the authorization of the act of March 3, 1931 (46 Stat. 1490), the title and evidence of title to the lands or interests acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, $3,500,000, to be immediately available and to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $60,000 of the amount herein appropriated may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia during the fiscal year 1940.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the language in lines 10, 11, and 12, page 118, as follows:

The title and evidence of title to the lands or interests acquired to be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

It is legislation on an appropriation bill and an attempt to take the duty of passing on the title out of the hands of the Attorney General.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. No, Mr. Chairman. We concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York advise the Chair whether the point of order goes only to the language he quoted?

Mr. TABER. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: Page 118, line 12, after the word "Interior", strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buck, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next, March 20, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. As I understand it, we will take up the Consent Calendar first on Monday, and following that, resume the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I understand that in all probability there will be a few suspensions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper to announce at this time that the Chair has promised the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bland], chairman of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, that he will recognize him to move to suspend the rules and pass one bill, and the Chair has been informed it will probably not take very long. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

ELECTIONS TO COMMITTEES

Mr. CULLEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following privileged resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 132

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the standing committees of the House of Representatives, as follows:

Public Lands: T. V. SMITH of Illinois.
Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress: MIKE MONEONEY, Oklahoma; Lansdale G. Sasscer, Mary-

Pensions: WILLIAM H. LARRABEE, Indiana; JAMES F. O'CONNOR,

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

ST. PATRICK

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was granted permission to address the House on Friday, tomorrow, for 20 minutes. Inasmuch as the House will not be in session, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to insert my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow in all parts of the world men of Irish ancestry gather to pay tribute to St. Patrick, the beloved patron of their race. While some of these glorify Ireland as the land of song and story, or review its age-old culture, or, again, recount the valiant deeds of its heroes in their long centuries of struggle for freedom, it seems timely here to take a brief retrospective view of the part played by sons of Erin in our own good old U.S.A.

In colonial records there is abundant evidence that intrepid Celts came to these shores from the earliest times. All parts of our country, from the Atlantic seaboard, through the South and West, profited by the steady stream of Irish immigrants from the middle of the seventeenth century, and many of these "exiles of Erin," or their sons, in their new country distinguished themselves in all stations of life. To be precise, we might add that at the time of the inauguration of George Washington as first President of the United States, the South Carolina historian Ramsay wrote:

For the last 70 or 80 years no nation has contributed so much to the population of America as Ireland.

And Michael O'Brien, historiographer of the American Irish Historical Society, citing the words of Sir William Petty, English statistician, declares thatduring the decade from 1649 to 1659 about one-half of the entire population was Irish.

Backed by trustworthy evidence, O'Brien contends that in every way the Irish contribution in the first 200 years of this country's life "was far and away ahead of that of any two or three nations of Europe."

Of the early colonists another faithful historian writes:

The pioneers before whose hands the primeval forests fell prostrate; the builders by whose magic touch have sprung into existence flourishing towns and cities, where once no sounds were heard save those of Nature and her wildest offspring; the orators who roused the colonists into activity and showed them the way to achieve their independence; the schoolmasters who imparted to the American youth their first lessons in intellectuality and patriotism; all have their place in history, and of these we can claim that Ireland furnished her full quota to the American Colonies.

The glorious accomplishments of one of these early settlers, John Sullivan, are summed up in the following enviable

What other example stands on a level with that of John Sullivan, the Limerick schoolmaster, who taught the children of New England Puritans for more than 60 years? As a historical writer has so aptly described him, he was the father of a Governor of New Hampshire and of a Governor of Massachusetts, of an attorney general of New Hampshire, of a major general in the Revolutionary Army, and of four sons who were officers in that Army; he was a grandfather of a Governor of Maine and of a United States Senator from New Hampshire and an attorney general of that State; the great-grandfather of an attorney general of New Hampshire and of a judge of its courts; and the great-grandfather of a distinguished American officer in the Civil War. This man was of a noted family of Cork and Kerry, distinguished in Irish history. He was been in Limerick in 1696 and emigrated to New England in 1732. It is related of him that when he applied to the Reverend Doctor Moody, in the year 1732, for employment as a teacher, he wrote his application in seven languages. He exerted a remarkable influence among the people, and many of the Revolutionary worthies of New England were numbered among his pupils.

It is small wonder that a contributor of volume 133 of the

It is small wonder that a contributor of volume 133 of the Westminster Review, treating the subject the Irish-Americans, proposes to his readers these questions:

Is the American Republic in any way indebted to those Irish citizens? Have they, with their large numbers, high social standing, great places of trust, contributed aught to her glory or added aught to her commercial greatness, refined her social taste, or assisted in laying the foundations of the real happiness of her people, the real security of her laws, the influence of her civic virtues, which, more than anything else, give power and permanency to a naissant and mighty nation?

For answer to the inquiry we turn to history, "the high court of humanity, where truth must be heard and justice must be pronounced." A critical investigation into the past and present history of our country gives an affirmative answer to these pertinent questions.

Of the signers of the immortal Declaration of Independence, Thorton, Taylor, and Smith were natives of Ireland; McKean, Read, and Rutledge were of Irish parentage; Lynch and Carroll were grandsons of Irishmen; Whipple and Hancock were of Irish descent, while Robert Treat Paine was a great-grandson of Henry O'Neill, hereditary prince of Ulster who was forced to change his name in order to save his estates. The renowned document was first read, published, and printed by Irishmen. Irishmen, too, were Members of the First American Congress—1774-89—and were among the framers of the Constitution; they commanded brigades and regiments in the struggle for independence. It is beyond the scope of this review to list the many Gaelic names of illustrious generals and brave soldiers who flocked to Washington's standard, and so daringly maintained its honor in the Revolution.

During the venerable Franklin's journeys to Europe in the capacity of diplomatic agent, he twice visited Irelandin 1769 and 1771. In his accounts of these good-will tours, he was at pains to show the courtesy with which he was received in Dublin at a great dinner given in his honor by the "Irish patriots." He was not slow in making known to the leaders on this side of the Atlantic, the sympathetic attitude of the Irish toward the American cause, and explained, that stranger though he was, by unanimous consent, he was admitted to the floor of the parliament, instead of being relegated to the gallery, the usual place for outsiders. This fact he communicated to our Congress, esteeming it "a mark of respect for our country, and a piece of politeness" in which he hoped that our parliament "would not fall behind theirs whenever an occasion should offer." "Our parliament" did not fail in this respect, for cognizance of these civilities was taken by the Continental Congress at Philadelphia on July 28, 1775. From their Address to the People of Ireland the following extract gives objectives evidence of their approbation:

Accept our most grateful acknowledgments for the friendly disposition you have always shown to us * * *. We acknowledge with pleasure and gratitude that your nation has produced patriots who have nobly distinguished themselves in the cause of humanity and America.

No one more than the great Washington himself appreciated the valiant conduct of his Gaelic soldiers in the trying war days. On one occasion when the Irish soldiers, stung to the quick, were showing indigation at a slight offered them on the 17th of March, the Commander in Chief declared that he, too, was a lover of St. Patrick's Day and must settle the affair by making all the Army keep the day. We are all familiar with his gracious gesture of evacuation day, March 17, 1776, when he appointed General Sullivan the brigadier of the day, at the same time authorizing the word "Boston" as the parole and "Saint Patrick" as the countersign. Nor was this an isolated case, for diaries and other records show that on at least two other occasions St. Patrick's Day was celebrated with feasting and parade.

In the records of the Friendly Sons of Saint Patrick of Philadelphia is preserved Washington's courteous reply to the society's unanimous adoption of him as a member of the society.

But it was not native Americans alone who appreciated the Irish but others as well. The Frenchman, Lafayette, on one occasion proposed the toast, "May the Kingdom of Ireland merit a stripe on the American standard." The Marquis de Chastellux, major general of Rochambeau's army in America, in his American Travels says:

An Irishman, the instant he sets foot on American ground, becomes ipso facto an American. * * On more than one imminent occasion Congress owed their existence, and America possibly her preservation, to the fidelity and firmness of the Irish.

The British man of letters Samuel Smiles makes the striking comment:

Of the Irish colonists in America, a large proportion everywhere stood foremost on the side of the patriots. It seemed as if Providence had mysteriously used the victims of Britain's cruelty to Ireland, the men whom her persecution had banished from the bosom of their own land, as the means of her final punishment and humiliation on a foreign soil. As the Irish Brigade struck down the British power at Landen and Fontency, so did the refugee Irish in the ranks of the American patriot army contribute to pluck from the haughty brow of Britain the palm of empire.

This same sentiment is voiced tersely in the British Lord Mountjoy's admission, "America was lost by Irish emigrants." These utterances but echo the angry outburst of George II, after the Battle of Fontenoy, "Cursed be the laws that deprived me of such subjects."

A parallel record of service is found in the story of the Mexican War with Generals Shields and Sweeney as outstanding figures. The former, of County Tyrone, even before entering the war had a distinguished political career, and afterward became Governor of Oregon and later enjoyed the unique privilege of representing in the United States Senate at different times three different States—Illinois, Minnesota, and Missouri.

Again in the war of secession the Irish proved themselves good citizens, ready to shed their blood in defense of American liberty. These Celts, more numerous in the Northern than in the Southern States, were not slow to range themselves on the side of national union. There were men of Irish blood in the Southern States, however, who, though disliking secession and hating slavery, believed that their allegiance was due, first of all, to their own State. They shared the opinion of their southern fellowmen that the foundation of civil liberty rested on the supreme sovereignty of each individual State. On the northern side it was calculated that 150,000

Irish fought. Generals Carey, Griffin, and Butler were of Irish descent, and also General Sheridan, "the most brilliant cavalry officer of his age." Yet it was in the purely Irish regiments in Corcoran's Sixty-ninth Regiment, or in the Irish brigade under Meagher, that the finest heroism of the war was displayed. Lee, from a key position of Marye's Hill, attacked the Irish brigade, who must have realized that they were marching to sure death, but like true soldiers they gave no sign of hesitation when ordered to advance. From the Times correspondent we get a flattering testimony of this attack:

Never at Fontenoy or at Waterloo was more undaunted courage displayed by the sons of Erin than during the six frantic dashes they directed against the almost impregnable position of their foes. The bodies which lie in dense masses within 40 yards of the muzzle of Colonel Walton's guns are the best evidence of what manner of men they were, who pressed on to death with the dauntlessness of a race which has gained glory on a thousand battlefields, and never more richly deserved than at the foot of Marye's Heights on December 13, 1862.

Only 200 remained of the "noble 1,200."

Even from an unfriendly pen comes another tribute to these heroes of this charge. In a letter, the Confederate General Pickett told that his heart almost stood still as he watched those sons of Erin fearlessly rush to their death in the brilliant assault beyond description. "We forgot that they were fighting us," he continued, "and cheer after cheer went up all along our lines."

With like fortitude, Col. James A. Mulligan, of the Chicago Irish Brigade, when mortally wounded in 1861 in a Confederate attack, cried to his men who tried to save him, "Lay me down and save the flag." Later the people of Chicago, treasuring in a faithful memory the heroism of their fellow citizen, subscribed for a home for his widow.

The story of the World War is so present with us that we may dispatch, with a passing observation, the courageous action in the conflict, of soldiers of Irish extraction. Of the first three soldiers to be killed in action on November 3, 1917, one was Thomas Francis Enwright, of Pennsylvania. The first American officer to die in the field in the A. E. F. was Lt. William T. Fitzsimons of the United States Medical Corps. He was killed in a German raid on September 4, 1917. In his honor the Fitzsimons General Hospital at Denver, Colo., has been named. An Irish name stands likewise at the endof the casualty list. This Catholic chaplain, a worthy compatriot, holding the rank of lieutenant, bore the distinguished Irish name of William F. Davitt. Father Davitt, a native of Holyoke, Mass., went overseas and was killed on the morning of November 11, 1918, just 5 minutes before the armistice began. An American flag, which he had brought back from the fighting front, he had hung on a tree, by way of celebrating the arrival of the armistice hour, when an enemy's bullet struck him down.

But to stress the achievements of Americans of Irish blood in the role of fighters in a just cause is to give a one-sided picture of their story. In their ranks we find men of great force of character: "Preachers and teachers, statesmen and scholars, philanthropists and founders of institutions, scientists and engineers, historians and journalists, artists and authors, lawyers and doctors, of Celtic race and blood, while in the industrial field, as builders of steamships and railroads and promoters of public works, as merchants, manufacturers, and bankers, and in all other fields of endeavor we find the American Irish controlling factors in the upbuilding of the Republic." It is easy to understand why a prominent journalist could conclude that Irishmen, exercising in America this power of their moral force, were a leaven to be dreaded more by English statesmen than the armed rebellion of the same men or of their fathers in Ireland.

They have held eminent positions in our complicated political system. In six Presidents a Celtic strain is traced. The same strain is found also in many men who have exercised the authority of Governor in several States or who have acted as executives in their local governments. From the earliest times the Gael has been numbered among the representatives of the legislative Halls of the Capitol. One Darrah Kelly boasted of the unique privilege of a half century of service in Congress. And Members of this House of Representatives, as well as our esteemed colleagues of the Senate, on this St. Patrick's Day proudly boast of their precious Gaelic heritage. Among the earliest judges of the courts are found Irishmen and their sons of Celtic stock. In the legal annals of America the names of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court Edward D. White and his able Associate, Joseph McKenna, together with such eminent lawyers as Charles O'Connor, James Brady, Daniel Dougherty, and Thomas Addis Emmet are representative. It has been said that there is no State in the Union in which an Irish-American lawyer has not distinguished himself.

Back in the days of President Jefferson, Richard O'Brien was American representative at Algiers; James Kavanagh, Minister to Portugal; and Louis McLain, Minister to England. In more recent years an O'Brien has represented American affairs in Italy and Japan; a Kerens in Austria, one Egan in Chili and another in Denmark, an O'Shaughnessy in Mexico, a Sullivan in Santo Domingo, an O'Rear in Bolivia, while at the present time a Kennedy carries on efficiently as Ambassador to the Court of St. James.

Although the subject is inexhaustible, there is a temptation to pick almost at random from other fields of endeavor a few conspicuous Celtic names that are household words in American life. In this list we might mention Theodore Vail, the projector of the great telephone system; Morse, the inventor of the telegraph; Henry O'Reilly, builder of the first telegraph line in the United States; John Mackay, president of the Commercial Cable Co.; John Holland, inventor of the submarine torpedo boat; and Cyrus McCormick, inventor of the reaping and mowing machine. In business and financial circles are the names of John McDonald, builder of New York subways; George Law, promoter of public works and steamship and railroad builder; John Keating, the first paper manufacturer of New York; A. T. Stewart, James J. Hill, and Thomas F. Ryan.

In the field of American journalism, Hugh Gaine founded the New York Mercury; John Dunlap, the first daily paper in Philadelphia; John Burk, the first daily paper in Boston; William Coleman, the New York Evening Post; Thomas Fitzgerald, the Philadelphia Item; Thomas Gill, the New York Evening Star; Patrick Walsh, the Augusta Chronicle; Joseph Medill, the Chicago Tribune; William Duane edited the Philadelphia Aurora; Henry Grady, the Atlanta Constitution; Michael Dee, the Detroit Evening News; Richard Smith, the Cincinnati Gazette; Edward Godkin, the New York Evening Post; William Laffan, the New York Sun; and Horace Greely, the New York Tribune.

But that the Irish in America or their descendants have not been found wanting in their contributions to the finer things of life is evidenced by the following summary:

Thomas Crawford executed the colossal statue of Freedom on the dome of the National Capitol while the Dublin man, Augustus Saint Gaudens was considered one of the greatest sculptors of modern times. Among America's most talented artists and portrait painters have been listed John Singleton Copley, George Healy, Henry Pelham, and William McGrath. In his day, Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore was Ireland's gift to Boston's music world. His spectacular career as an American bandsman, but above all, the innovations and originalities he introduced in military band organization, claimed for him the title, Father of the American band. In the light of present-day enthusiasm over music of this type, this fact is interesting. Gilmore established a brilliant musical record gaining an international reputation. His concert tours covering not only the United States, but Canada, Great Britain, and several continental cities, brought real melody to the The renowned Victor Herbert, and the gifted Edward A. McDowell still live in their musical creations that keep alive the spark of genius which is said to be a touch of the immortal and the divine. Charitable and educational institutions of our Fair Columbia have profited by the generous donations of such national benefactors as John O'Fallon and Bryan Mullanphy of St. Louis, John McDonough of Baltimore, and of William W. Corcoran, whose name must be linked forever with his famous Washington Art Gallery, on which institution as well as on others, he lavished millions. To Margaret Gafney Haughery, an Irishwoman, who gave so bountifully her time and fortune for the betterment of the orphans of New Orleans, stands a fitting memorial, the first public monument to be erected to a woman in America.

In addition to the above-mentioned might be cited numerous other worthy children of Erin, and great citizens of the United States who have been a glory and a credit to both these lands, which through their lives they have so nobly united. Their Irish valor, Irish decision, and Irish perseverance have filled the pages of American history with a story which has an appeal, not only for people of Gaelic stock, but for all Americans, who find inspiration and stimulation, on this St. Patrick's Day, as the truth is borne in on them that Irish blood, brain, and brawn have been a valuable acquisition to the building of the fabric of American institutions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a letter from a constituent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WAR AND PEACE

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, the people of my district are peace-minded. They still hold vividly in mind the havoc wrought by the Great War and the results of our participation therein. It has been estimated that that war cost the United States over $51,000,000,000, and the cost is mounting daily by reason of the huge expenditures we are making and will be required to make for years to come in caring for the injured, widowed, and orphaned as a result of that great contest. Five percent on $51,000,000,000 would provide an annual income of $2,500,000,000, sufficient to pension 2,125,000 old people at $100 per month. The late President Coolidge estimated the total cost will reach more than $100,000,000,000 before we are through paying for that war, or about the value, at the time the estimate was made, of all of the States west of the Mississippi. A parade of the dead killed in that conflict, marching 10 abreast, from sunrise to sunset, with a new rank passing every 2 seconds, would take 46 days to pass a given point. There were 10,000,000 killed, 20,000,000 maimed and injured, 13,000,000 missing, 10,000,000 refugees, and 6,000,000 children lost their fathers, and a daily loss of life of 16,585. Sixty to seventy cents of every tax dollar goes to pay for our past wars and for armaments and expenditures making ready for future wars.

Mr. Speaker, with these gruesome statistics in mind, we see why the men and women of America are determined that this Nation shall never again engage in a foreign war. They want to be prepared to defend our own country and its people, but they are equally determined to maintain a neutral attitude with respect to conflicts on foreign shores, and are insistent that their representatives respect their wishes in that determination.

A very acute problem has arisen in my State, Mr. Speaker, with reference to the sale of scrap iron to Japan. In keeping with this viewpoint I have expressed, many outstanding citizens and organizations of Oregon have gone on record as opposing this sale of scrap iron. A high-ranking official, having to do with the policies of the United States with respect to our defense, recently stated before a committee of which I am a member, in considering this matter, that it was a short-sighted policy for the United States to permit the sale and shipment to foreign countries of scrap iron from America. He stated that in preparing for our own defense it was important that this essential material needed in war preparation should be retained for our own use. My distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] recently introduced a resolution (H. J. Res. 42) providing that any proclamation by the President declaring an embargo on the export of arms, ammunitions, and implements of war, under the Neutrality Act of 1937, shall provide for an embargo on scrap iron and pig iron in addition to items enumerated in Proclamation 2163 of April 10, 1936. On January 30, last, the eminent gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish] introduced in the House a bill (H. R. 3419) providing-

That it shall be unlawful to export any pig iron, scrap iron, or scrap steel from the United States, or any Territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any port or place in China or Japan, or to any other port or place for transshipment to China or Japan, to be used in the manufacture of implements of war or for military

In my State recently such demonstrations were made, and are now being made, upon the docks of Oregon ports where shipments of pig iron are being loaded for foreign transport so that commerce at these ports is being seriously interfered with. At a mass meeting held in Portland, Oreg., on March 10, 1939, which was attended by more than 2,500 Oregon citizens, a resolution was unanimously adopted deploring and condemning the shipment of essential war materials to foreign nations to be used in the infliction of death and destruction upon innocent noncombatants.

In view of the situation to which I have referred, it is important that we consider favorably these legislative proposals.

Following is a copy of the resolution referred to:

Resolution authorized by a mass meeting of citizens of Portland, Oreg., assembled at the Civic Auditorium, March 10, 1939, to protest shipment of scrap iron to Japan

At a mass meeting held in Portland, Oreg., at the Civic Auditorium Friday, March 10, 1939, which was attended by more than 2,500 persons, the undersigned committee was unanimously authorized to prepare a resolution embodying the sense of the meeting.

Whereas the citizens of Portland assembled desiring to promote peace among nations, deplore and condemn the shipment of essential materials and products out of which may be manufactured instruments to be used for infliction of death and destruction upon innocent noncombatants; and
Whereas American citizens of Chinese parentage, endorsed and

Whereas in the face of this demonstration, longshoremen have refused to load this scrap iron, with a resultant crisis threatening the continuous operation of our port; and Whereas the cessation of these shipments would, in our judgment, do much to prevent the infliction of further suffering upon millions of innocent noncombatants: Therefore be it Resolved, That proper governmental and private authorities be urged to take such action as may be necessary to prohibit such shipments: and be it further urged to take such action as may be necessary to prohibit such shipments; and be it further Resolved, That copies of this resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States; to the Secretary of State; to the Secretary of War; to the Secretary of Navy; the Secretary of Commerce; the Secretary of Labor; to all Members of both Houses of Congress; to the Governor of the State of Oregon; to the board of county commissioners of Multnomah County; to the Waterfront Employers' Association of Portland, and to the press. Respectfully submitted. Respectfully submitted.

SENATE

FRIDAY, MARCH 17, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 16, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Quickening Spirit, inspiration of the Holy One, breathe upon our souls in this moment of silence and inspire us anew as we face the duties of another day. Waken us to the voice of those deeper things whispered only in the stillness, that by the hearing ear and the understanding heart we may be lifted above the cares that dim the mind when we are downbent in thought or mood.

Bless with Thy tenderest care those whom we have in our hearts: all who are laid aside in weakness and suffering; all who are weary under the burden and heat of the day; and those to whom the changes of life may bring sorrow or pain, we pray that Thou wilt sustain them with Thy heavenly comfort, O blessed Spirit, whom with the Father and Son together we worship and glorify as one God, world without end.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. Barkley, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Thursday, March 16, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of South Carolina, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution memorializing Congress to request the Congress of the United States to extend financial relief to certain counties in South Carolina where the United States of America has purchased and condemned real estate therein

Whereas the United States has, pursuant to certain acts of Congress, acquired by purchase and condemnation title to approximately 100,000 acres of land situate in Chesterfield County, S. C., and vast areas of land in certain other counties of the State of South Carolina; and

Whereas most of said lands were burdened with large amounts of bonded and other public debt; and
Whereas said lands are now exempt from State and local taxation and the burden of the payment of said public debt has been shifted upon owners of the residue of the lands of such counties; and upon owners of the residue of the lands of such counties; and Whereas the debt load on said counties is a grievous burden fastened upon the taxpayers thereof; and Whereas said lands were purchased or condemned at prices much less than their intrinsic values; and Whereas it is just and equitable that the said lands should bear their just and proper proportion of said public debts: Now, therefore be it

fore, be it

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring),
That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, respectfully requested and urged to provide for the payment of the just and proportionate part of the public debt of the local tax districts and counties wherein said lands have been so purchased and condemned by the United States; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Speaker of the National House of Representatives, the President of the Senate of the United States, and each member of the South Carolina delegation in the Federal Congress.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the Workers Alliance of Chetopa and Local No. G-1509, Workers Alliance, of Cherryvale, in the State of Kansas, favoring an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for continuation of the Works Progress Administration program, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Lewis, Kans., remonstrating against the inclusion of religious bodies under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Coffeyville, Kans., praying for discontinuance of the shipment of war supplies to Japan, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Jamestown and Concordia, Kans., praying that the United States adhere to the general policy of neutrality as enunciated in the act of August 31, 1935; that there be retained on the statute books the further and corollary principle enunciated in the act of May 1, 1937, and that the original act be extended to include civil as well as international conflicts, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. REED presented a petition of 86 citizens of Cherokee, Kans., praying for an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for continuation of the Works Progress Administration program, which was referred to the Committee on Appropria-

He also presented a petition of 275 citizens of Baxter Springs, Kans., praying for an additional appropriation of $275,000,000 for relief purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a petition of 140 citizens of Kiowa County, Kans., praying for amendments to emergency farm credit acts so as to liberalize interest rates and Federal loans, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

He also presented memorials of 31 citizens of Sedgwick County, 13 citizens of Wyandotte County, and 16 citizens of Lewis, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against the inclusion of religious bodies under the operation of the socialsecurity system, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

IMPORTATION OF SHINGLES FROM CANADA—CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I was not in the Chamber yesterday at the time unanimous consent was granted for the reference of Senate bill 1837 and Senate bill 1838 to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I cannot understand how it was granted, and I have sent for the Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] who made the request. Two bills were introduced by the Senator from Washington, one dealing with the Negotiable Trade Agreements Act, the other pertaining to the tariff, both of which subjects have always been considered by the Committee on Finance. For some unexplained reason the bills were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I do not wish to make the request I have in mind in the absence of the Senator from Washington, but at the proper time I shall ask unanimous consent to have the Committee on Foreign Relations discharged from the further consideration of the bills and that they be referred to the proper committee, and if the request is not granted I will, of course, make the motion, at the first available opportunity, that the bills be so referred, because no one could possibly argue that the Committee on Foreign Relations would have jurisdiction of these matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. For the information of the Senator from Mississippi the Chair will state that the bills were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations at the request of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. HARRISON. I appreciate that, Mr. President. The unanimous-consent request was granted. I am sorry I was not in the Chamber at the time the request was made, because there would have been at least one objection to it.

Mr. BONE subsequently said: Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] and myself on the 16th instant I introduced Senate bill 1837, relating to the importation of shingles, and Senate bill 1838, to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to the marking of lumber and timber imported from foreign countries. These bills have to do with the Reciprocal Tariff Agreement Act. I was not advised at the time that the original legislation had been handled by the Committee on Finance, otherwise I would have suggested that the bills be referred to that committee. At this time I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the bills and that they be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. TAFT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4425) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes. which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

INVESTIGATION OF PRODUCTION, TRANSPORTATION, AND MARKETING OF WOOL

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 106), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the special committee authorized by Senate Resonesoties, that the special committee authorized by Senate Resolution No. 160, Seventy-fourth Congress, agreed to July 10, 1935, to investigate the production, transportation, and marketing of wool, hereby is authorized to expend from the contingent fund of the Senate $3,000 in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized for the same purpose.

RADIO ADDRESSES ON TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF AMERICAN LEGION

[Mr. Davis asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by Stephen F. Chadwick, national commander of the American Legion, and Watson Miller, director of the national rehabilitation committee of the Legion, in celebration of the twentieth anniversary of the American Legion, which appears in the Appendix.

RETURN BY IOWA OF FLAG OF REPUBLIC OF ALABAMA

[Mr. Hill asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an article by Grover C. Hall, Jr., published in the Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser, and an editorial from the Des Moines (Iowa) Tribune, both relative to the return to the State of Alabama by the State of Iowa of the flag of the Republic of Alabama, which appear in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4425) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the first amendment reported by the committee, which the clerk will

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, on page 3, line 13, after the word "Army", it is proposed to insert "Mississippi River Commission", so as to read:

SEC. 3. No reorganization plan under section 4 shall provide—

(a) For the abolition or transfer of an executive department or all the functions thereof or for the establishment of any new executive department.

(b) In the case of the following executive agencies, for the transfer, consolidation, or abolition of the whole or any part of such agency or of its head, or of all or any of the functions of such agency or of its head: Civil Service Commission, Coast Guard, Engineer Corps of the United States Army, Mississippi River

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 17, after the word "Commission", to strike out "United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 18, after the word "Appeals", to strike out "United States Employees' Compensation Commission."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senate is proceeding with such alacrity that I could not follow the two amendments that were read and which it was stated had been agreed to. May we have them recapitulated?

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 18, after the word "Appeals", it is proposed to strike out "United States Employees' Compensation Commission."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which that amendment was adopted be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, to what amendment does the Senator refer?

Mr. McNARY. I refer to the amendment proposing to strike out the words "United States Employees' Compensation Commission," beginning in line 18, on page 3.

Mr. President, I appeal to the able Senator in charge of the bill that he permit subdivision (b), on page 3, to be passed over until Monday. I will state that I think the vitals of the bill are found in that section and subdivision, in the so-called Wheeler amendment, and the substitute offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd].

There is hardly a working majority in the Senate present at this time. There is considerable opposition to removing from the House text the words "United States Employees' Compensation Commission." I take it that most of organized labor desires that Commission to be left independent of any Executive order. The amendment was read very hurriedly a moment ago, but the action taken on it has been rescinded. If the Senator is inclined to insist upon the amendment, I should like to have it go over until Monday.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McNARY. If the Senator were willing to restore the original text of the House bill, I would not make the request.

Mr. BYRNES. I am entirely willing to comply with the Senator's request. I understood that any item which it was agreed was controversial and as to which there would likely be a division would be passed over. Therefore, I have no objection to passing over the amendment as to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Was action taken in regard to the Tariff Commission?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The only amendment of substance which has been agreed upon is the amendment in line 13, page 3, with reference to the Mississippi River Commission. The next amendment has been passed over at the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], so it is now the pending amendment. The amendment on line 17, striking out the words "United States," which is a technical amendment only, has also been agreed to, but the Senator from Oregon has requested and obtained unanimous consent to rescind the vote by which that amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. As the Chair understands, the Senator now desires to have the matter go over until Monday. Mr. McNARY. That is true.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?
Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in order that Senators in this part of the Chamber may understand the request, does it apply to all of subdivision (b) of section 3?

Mr. McNARY. That is my request—that it apply to all of that section.

Mr. McCarran. I make the same request. Mr. Barkley. In that connection let me say that the committee has authorized the chairman to withdraw one of these amendments, and we might as well dispose of that matter.

Mr. McNARY. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as soon as the Senator from Oregon has concluded his statement, I desire to ask if we can have an understanding that as to the amendment relative to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission no action shall be taken; as to the other amendments of the committee to which there is no objection, we shall act upon them; but that the Senator from Oregon, or any other Senator, shall have the right on Monday to offer any amendment to this section.

Mr. McNARY. I do not want action taken on the amendment with regard to the United States Tariff Commission.

Mr. BYRNES. I shall ask, as I stated yesterday in my remarks, that the amendment of the committee be rejected.

That will settle that matter as the Senator from Oregon desires it settled.

Mr. McNARY. Was formal action taken by the Senate? Mr. BYRNES. I am going to ask that it be taken now. Mr. McNARY. Very well. I hope the Senator will do so.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like the attention of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes]. As I understand, the entire bill will be open to amendment on Monday. Passing over this section will not preclude amend-

Mr. BYRNES. Only as to committee amendments. The entire bill will be open to amendment thereafter.

Mr. McCARRAN. That brings up the very question which the Senator from Oregon raised a few moments ago when he asked that subdivision (b) of section 3 go over. I join the Senator from Oregon in that request.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will have a right to offer amendments to that section under my request.

Mr. McCARRAN. I understand that I may have a right to do so under the Senator's request; but why cannot that subdivision go over for either amendment or the adoption or rejection of committee amendments? I respectfully submit that inquiry to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair see if he understands the situation. The Senator from Oregon did not ask. as the Chair recalls, that all of subdivision (b) go over. He did ask that the amendment relative to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission go over. Now the Senator from Nevada supplements that request by asking that the entire subdivision (b) on page 3 go over. Is that the request?

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. BYRNES. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. That, as I understood, was the request of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], in which request I then joined and I now join.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that was my request; but, inasmuch as there are two agencies included which I favor exempting, I should not object to the consideration of those agencies, namely, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it was difficult for Senators in this part of the Chamber to hear the statement of the Senator from Oregon. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] wants to offer certain amendments to this section. I am entirely willing that the section shall be open to amendment on Monday, so that the Senator from Nevada may offer any amendment he desires to offer at that time, and that no action now to be taken except on the request of the committee that the United States Tariff Commission be exempted, and the amendment proposing that the words "United States" be stricken out, and the last amendment, dealing with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Board of Governors of the Federal Re-

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I want to say more than that. I propose to oppose the committee amendment with regard to the action of the committee in striking out the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, it is understood that that amendment has not been acted upon, and will not be acted upon until Monday, so that the Senator will have an opportunity to oppose it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Now, let the Chair again see if he understands what the request is.

The Chair understood the Senator from Oregon to ask unanimous consent in the first instance that the amendment relative to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission should go over; but the Senator from Oregon later on said that he asked that all of section (b) go over. The Chair would like to know just how he is to put the request.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, in view of the complexities that surround the matter, I suggest that the whole section go over. It will take only a short time to dispose of it on Monday.

Mr. McCARRAN. I join in that request.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Nevada have no objection to action on the amendment as to the words "United States." The unanimous-consent request is that the amendment relative to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission shall go over until Monday-that is what the Senator from Nevada wants-and that final action upon the committee amendments to this section be not taken today, so that it shall be open for amendment on Monday. I make that request.

Mr. McNARY. Pardon me for just a moment. I have no objection to that; but, inasmuch as there is some difference of opinion, and it will not take long to dispose of the section, let it all go over without taking any final action today, and let us take it up when we return on Monday.

Mr. McCARRAN. I join in that request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the only things left in this section, so far as committee amendments are concerned, are the following: First, the amendment striking out the United States Tariff Commission, which the committee has withdrawn, and is asking that it be rejected. Certainly that is not controversial. The other two matters are the exemption of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

I do not see why we cannot agree to those amendments. Such action will not affect the right of any Senator to offer any kind of an amendment to the section as a whole; and those three propositions apparently are not in controversy.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from South Carolina has the floor, and I ask him to yield. My thought is-and, as I understand, it is also the thought of the Senator from Oregon-inasmuch as the matter is as simple as the able leader says, may not the whole subdivision go over, so that it may be subject to amendment or the adoption of committee amendments or the rejection of committee amendments on Monday next? I respectfully make that suggestion.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I submit a unanimous-consent request that only the amendments as to the Tariff Commission, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, be considered at this time, and that with the exception of those three items the consideration of the entire section go over until Monday.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I cannot consent to the adoption of the amendment exempting the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. That is about the only objection I have to the bill, so far as I can see. It will take a great deal of argument to convince methat the Senate amendment in that respect should be adopted; so I should like to ask that it go over.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, that is one reason why I thought perhaps we could take up that amendment and discuss it and act upon it at this time.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to that. I merely did not want it to go through as a matter of course.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, no.

Mr. LOGAN. I have no objection to taking it up.

Mr. BYRNES. My request is-

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is one request pending. Until it is withdrawn the Chair cannot put any other request

The Senator from Oregon has asked that subsection (b) on page 3, aside from the amendments already agreed to, go over until Monday. That is the only request the Chair can put until it is withdrawn or objected to.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. What action was taken on the amendment on line 13 of

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment, and the technical amendment on line 17 striking out the words "United States," have been agreed to. They are the only ones agreed to.

The Senator from Oregon has asked that the remainder of the section and the amendments go over until Monday. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Select Committee on Government Organization was, in section 3, page 4, line 3, after the word "as", to strike out "Secretary", followed by a period, and insert "Secretary; or."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 4, to insert:

(d) For the continuation of any executive agency beyond the period authorized by law for the existence of such agency; or

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 7, to insert:

(e) For the continuation of any function of any executive agency eyond the period authorized by law for the exercise of such function; or.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 10, to

(f) For authorizing any executive agency to exercise any function which is not expressly authorized by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, beginning in line 5, to strike out all of section 6, in the following words:

SEC. 6. No reorganization under this title shall have the effect—
(a) of continuing any executive agency or function beyond the time when it would have terminated if the reorganization had not

(b) of continuing any function beyond the time when the executive agency in which vested before the reorganization would have terminated if the reorganization had not been made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 9, on page 9, after line 8. to insert:

(b) Any transfer of personnel under this title shall be without tange in classification or compensation, except that this requirement shall not operate after the end of the fiscal year during which the transfer is made to prevent the adjustment of classification or compensation to conform to the duties to which such transferred personnel may be assigned.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 17, after the words "limited to", to strike out "20 minutes" and to insert "not to exceed 2 hours."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that this amendment be passed over for today.

Mr. BYRNES. Would not the Senator be willing to proceed and argue these two amendments?

Mr. BYRD. This amendment is one of the controversial amendments affecting the length of time, and it would have to be discussed.

Mr. BYRNES. The statement of the Senator from Virginia is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, what is the request?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the amendment on page 11, line 17, which proposes to strike out "20 minutes" and insert "not to exceed 2 hours," go over until Monday. The Chair understood that to be the request.

Mr. BYRD. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 12, line 14, after the word "exceed," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and to insert "twenty."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I make the same request with respect to this amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BYRNES. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

That completes the amendments of the committee, except those which have been passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have sent an amendment to the desk, which I ask to have read and considered at this time. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Clerk will state the amendment

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the word "executive" where it appears in the following places in the bill: Page 1, line 8; page 2, line 6; page 2, line 21; page 3, line 8; page 4, line 2; page 4, line 5; page 4, lines 8 and 9; page 4, line 11; page 4, line 16; page 4, line 17; page 4, line 19; page 4, line 21; page 5, line 6; page 5, line 23; page 6, line 1; page 7, line 20; page 7, line 21; page 8, line 2; page 8, line 6; page 8, line 13; page 8, line 17.

On page 2, line 9, before the word "agency," it is proposed to strike out the word "such."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, as the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Oregon, members of the committee, know, the amendment is to change the designation from "executive agency" to "agency," to accomplish the purpose which members of the committee had suggested in order to avoid any misunderstanding about the agencies included.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to section 1, and I ask the clerk to state the amendment, so that it may be discussed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out the words "The President" at the beginning of the section and to insert the following:

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of continued national deficits beginning in 1931 it is imperative to reduce drastically Government expenditures and that such reduction may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this act. Accordingly the President.

ESSENTIAL FUNCTIONS $7,000,000,000

Mr. BYRD obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is it the desire of the Senator that we consider and dispose of the amendment today?

Mr. BYRD. No; I merely asked that the amendment be stated, so that it could be discussed. I desire to discuss it.

Mr. President, it is a matter of record that as recently as January 3, 1938, the President of the United States held the belief that total expenditures of the National Government not to exceed $7,000,000,000 annually would permit the operation of the Government without destroying "essential functions." In his message to Congress on January 3, 1938, the President said:

I have hitherto stated that, in my judgment, the expenditures of the National Government cannot be cut much below $7,000,000,000 a year without destroying essential functions or letting people starve. That sum can be raised and will be cheerfully provided by the American people if we can increase the Nation's income to a point well beyond the present level.

This does not mean that as the Nation's income goes up the

This does not mean that as the Nation's income goes up the Federal expenditures should rise in proportion.

On the contrary, the Congress and the Executive should use every effort to hold the normal Federal expenditures to approximately the present level, thus making it possible, with an increase in the Nation's income and the resulting increase in tax receipts, not only to balance future Budgets but to reduce the debt.

It is very evident that in the fall of 1937 and the early months of 1938 the President was convinced that $7,000,000,000 of Federal expenditures, exclusive of debt retirement, should be a "ceiling" for public spending.

The Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Morgenthau, speaking in New York on November 10, 1937, advocated a balanced Budget and a reduction of at least seven hundred millions in Federal spending. In December 1937 Mr. Morgenthau repeated this advice to a congressional committee. Yet, for the fiscal year which will end the 30th of next June, the Federal Government will spend, without debt retirement, $9,500,000,000—000—the largest peacetime expenditure in the history of America, and nearly 40 percent more than the President and the Secretary of the Treasury believed about a year ago would be adequate to finance the operations of the Federal Government.

I well know that our Nation can never return to the Federal expenditures of predepression days, but we cannot operate for too long, without disaster, a government costing more than the ability of the people to pay. A Federal expenditure of $7,000,000,000 annually is twice as much as was spent in the prosperous post-war years between 1920 and 1930, and is 10 times as much as the total expenditures of the Federal Government in 1916. Today the aggregate of the expenditures of all governments in the United Stateslocal, State, and National-is over 30 percent of the national income. Can we maintain our system of private enterprise if we exact from the net proceeds of American business $1 out of every $3 earned for the expense of gov-We are now actually collecting 20 cents out of every dollar of the national income in the combined taxation of local, State, and Federal Governments. The shortage between expenditures and tax collections is represented by deficits and is being added to the public debt.

APPROPRIATIONS $10,000,000,000

The appropriations for the next fiscal year, beginning the 1st of July, will approximate $10,000,000,000, setting a new record for peacetime spending. If $7,000,000,000 was sufficient, by the President's own estimate, for the Federal Government a year ago, why is an amount from nine and a half billion dollars to ten billion dollars necessary now?

On January 4, 1939, the President said in his message to Congress that to reduce Federal spending was to "invite disaster." What has occurred in the past 12 months so greatly to change the situation? We are told that business is recovering, and certainly unemployment is no greater now than a year ago. The Federal Reserve index of business activity is higher now than a year ago.

Let us analyze the increase in expenditures between the years 1938 and 1939. For national defense only $37,000,000 additional is being spent, so national defense accounts for about 2 percent only of the $2,000,000,000 increase in 1939 over 1938. On social security, $155,000,000 more will be spent, or about 7 percent of the increase. On unemployment relief, about $750,000,000 more is to be spent in 1939 over 1938, or nearly 40 percent of the increase.

For ordinary expenditures of government $600,000,000 more will be spent, or 30 percent of the increase. The increase in both ordinary and regular expenditures of the Federal Government since 1933 has been both consistent and alarming.

Exclusive of debt retirement, Federal expenditures since 1933 were as follows:

1983	$3, 864, 000, 000
1934	6, 011, 000, 000
1935	7, 010, 000, 000
1936	8, 666, 000, 000
1937	8, 442, 000, 000
1938	7, 626, 000, 000
1939	9, 492, 000, 000

The ordinary expenses, meaning the cost of operating the regular departments of Government, have shown a most astounding increase. The cost of operating the regular departments of Government since 1933, exclusive of relief and all extraordinary expenditures, is as follows:

1933	$2, 851, 000, 000
1934	2, 651, 000, 000
1935	3, 457, 000, 000
1936	6, 309, 000, 000
1937	4, 663, 000, 000
1938	4, 646, 000, 000
1939	5, 251, 000, 000

I am using the figures from the Budget submitted 60 days past by the President to the Congress.

Retrenchment in ordinary expenses may be even more difficult than in the emergency or extraordinary expenses; so it is alarming to know that such ordinary expenses have nearly doubled since 1933. In the extraordinary or in emergency expenses the progressive increase indicates the extent to which prodigal spending has become entrenched in every hamlet in America. Here are the figures: Expenditures for public works have increased from $472,000,000 in 1933 to $1,229,000,000 in 1939; but in the emergency expenditures for unemployment relief, exclusive of public works, the increases have been the largest. For unemployment relief alone the following expenditures have been made:

1933	$360,000,000
1934	1, 853, 000, 000
1935	1, 363, 000, 000
1936	2, 372, 000, 000
1937	2, 527, 000, 000
1938	1, 996, 000, 000
1939	2,741,000,000

So it is seen that in 1939, the year ending June 30 next, the largest relief expenditures will be made since the depression began.

After 9 years of continuous deficits, after 9 years of promises to accomplish a balanced Budget, we find ourselves farther away from balancing the income and outgo of the Federal Government than at any time since the deficit spending began under Mr. Hoover in 1931. The deficit for the current year is estimated to be $3,972,000,000, the largest of all, excepting in 1936, when the soldiers' bonus was paid.

The public debt in 1931 was $16,801,000,000. It is estimated that it will be $41,132,000,000 on July 1, 1939, and approximately $45,000,000,000 on July 1, 1940.

DEFICITS NOTWITHSTANDING NEW TAXES

And let us remember that these deficits have come notwithstanding the imposition of new taxes and constant increases in existing tax rates. The tax revenue during this period was as follows:

1933	$2,080,000,000
1934	3, 116, 000, 000
1935	3, 800, 000, 000
1936	4, 116, 000, 000
1937	5, 294, 000, 000
1938	6, 242, 000, 000
1939	5, 520, 000, 000

These increases came in the main from increases in tax rates.

So in this fiscal year of 1939 we have the largest peacetime expenditures in our history, the second largest taxation in our peacetime history, and the largest debt in the entire history of America.

The interest on the public debt has increased from $610,-000,000 in 1931 to $1,050,000,000 for 1940, and this not-withstanding the lower interest rates made possible by existing business conditions. There is no certainty of continued low interest rates when bonds becoming due will have to be refinanced.

Today for every dollar obtained in taxation 20 cents is dedicated directly to the payment of interest. If the Budget were balanced now and the sum of $500,000,000 paid each year on the Federal debt, it would take 56 continuous years to reduce the debt to where it was 8 years ago.

We are told in the President's Budget message that the increase in the public debt, amounting to more than $28,000,000,000, represents in the main investments, and should be regarded as such. Of this deficit, $16,231,000,000 was spent for unemployment relief, and this is certainly not a recoverable item. It is true that $4,013,000,000 was spent for Federal public works, but a Federal building is not an asset in the ordinary business sense. In most instances the cost of maintenance and operation exceeds the rent paid before these buildings were constructed.

The effort to have two Federal budgets in order to justify deficit spending will not be convincing, as all must know that a government is not to be compared to a business corporation or private enterprise. The Government is not in business for profit; an investment in lands, buildings, or public works is not an asset which can be realized upon, but, in fact, places a new burden on the Government for maintenance and operation.

Again let me ask, if a $7,000,000,000 Budget was adequate for governmental responsibilities and functions a year ago, why is nine and a half billion necessary now? The answer may lie in the Eccles theory that deficit spending stimulates private business and purchasing power and that prosperity depends on debts and deficits rather than on the individual efforts and private enterprise of our citizens. This theory was fully enunciated by Chairman Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, in his public letter to me dated December 22, 1938. The letter from Mr. Eccles and my reply have both been inserted in the Appendix of the Congressional Record.

Chairman Eccles contends that a program of retrenchment to approach a balanced Budget is "not only a defeatist one but a program of retrogression and not of progression, and would jeopardize the salvation of democracy."

The essence of the Eccles fiscal philosophy is that deficit spending is essential to promote purchasing power and to stimulate business activity, and that such deficits must be financed by the sale of Government bonds to banks so that new bank credit will be created to increase what he calls purchasing power; and that the greater the debt we owe, the more the prosperity.

A STRANGE DOCTRINE

It is a strange doctrine that the head of America's banking system is preaching: that the American people will succeed better by reckless waste and thriftlessness than by saving and industry.

Under the leadership of Chairman Eccles, it appears that even the Federal Reserve Board has lent itself to act as an agent to propagandize for the philosophy of the benefits of deficit spending. The March bulletin of the Federal Reserve Board carries the statement that a "future growth in business activity" depends with other factors upon "greater public expenditures for construction or other purposes."

It is to me little short of amazing that the Federal Reserve System established to protect the financial stability of our country, should, in the face of our colossal and increasing debt, use its great influence to encourage further Government extravagances and greater Federal debts. Pump priming has been tried by nearly 9 years of continued deficit spending.

It has failed, and tragically failed. We have a staggering debt to pay, and our economic problems remain unsolved. The use of the great Federal Reserve System to exploit the fallacious views of its chairman cannot fail to injure the capacity of that agency of the Government at this perilous time to perform the functions for which it was created. The Federal Reserve System was not established to control the financial policies of Congress, to encourage greater and larger appropriations and debts, and its efforts, at public expense, to advance the deficit-spending theories of its chairman deserve severe condemnation.

Congress, I know, would be much interested in ascertaining whether the recommendation for greater deficit spending represents the views of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System or merely the personal expressions of its chairman. The Federal Reserve bulletin, in which the statement was made, was issued by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, Constitution Avenue at Twentieth Street, Washington, D. C. Is that the considered and deliberate action of the Board of Governors? This, the country and the Congress, have the right to know. I call upon Chairman Eccles to state whether the recommendation for greater deficit spending was the decision of the members of the Board or whether he is using the facilities of the Federal Reserve System as an agency of propaganda to promote his own fiscal views regarding which so much publicity has lately been given.

The failure of public spending to put the unemployed back to work has caused such leaders as President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to call for a "sound economic policy" to remove "a lack of confidence and distrust in governmental, social, and economic procedure."

We have heard much lately about appeasement to business. The very foundation of our representative democracy rests upon the system of private enterprise, the right of every citizen to labor in his own interest. The support of the Government must come from the earnings of our citizens through their own industry and thrift. The sooner we realize that the Government itself has no wealth excepting the wealth of the individual citizens of our country, that the Government has no money to pay its bills excepting such as comes from either the credit or taxation of our citizens, the sooner we will come to a realization of the disasters of continued deficits and increases in the public debt.

ACTS. NOT PROMISES

It is significant to me that no high official of the Federal Government has, since the announcement of the Eccles philosophy that the more we borrow and spend the more prosperous we are, said a single word about retrenchment and economy in our governmental affairs. If it is lack of confidence that has stalled the business motor of our country, that confidence can be more quickly restored by acts, not promises, gradually to bring our expenses within the ability of the American people to pay, and remove the fear that now exists that the longer deficit spending continues the greater will be the ultimate burden of taxation. As sensible people, we know that the extravagances of today must be paid by the greater taxation of tomorrow.

A reorganization of the Federal Government offers opportunities to begin retrenchment as a gradual approach to a balanced Budget. Deficit spending has gone too far, I realize, to balance the Budget immediately, but we must make a start soon. Substantial sums can be saved by a reorganization of the administrative machinery and the elimination of waste and of duplicated and overlapping activities. Many new agencies and new activities have been created in the past 6 years without any effort to coordinate such new activities with existing agencies, and as a result there is much duplicated and overlapping effort.

THE OPPORTUNITY

The Byrnes reorganization bill now pending differs from the Byrnes reorganization bill of last year in that the bill which then passed the Senate eliminated the power of the President to modify, abolish, or curtail functions of government. The present Byrnes bill now pending gives the President the power to abolish the whole or any part of any executive agencies, except departments or the functions or activities of government. This offers the opportunity substantially to reduce Federal expenditures. The President has requested authority to abolish or limit existing functions of the Federal Government and activities. In granting such authority, if it does, Congress can very properly direct that retrenchment begin as an approach to a balanced Budget.

It is an obvious fact that substantial retrenchment can best come by Executive leadership. Congress must act upon the Budget as submitted by the President. The Budget is coordinated and inclusive of all governmental functions. Economy and retrenchment effected in the Budget stand a much better opportunity of passage by Congress, as a proper and careful preparation of the Budget can balance any economies made so as to create a minimum of disturbance.

In the passage, therefore, of the pending reorganization bill, it is clearly within the right of Congress to adopt a strong declaration of purpose that in carrying out the authority granted under the bill, the President should be guided by motives of retrenchment and economy, declared in such unequivocal language that the support of Congress for a retrenchment program would be assured.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS AND NEEDS OF BUREAU OF MINES

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, at this time I desire to make a few brief remarks on the accomplishments and the needs of the Bureau of Mines of the Department of the Interior.

In these days, when we are trying new ideas and new remedies, there is grave danger that we may lose sight of the importance and value of the older Government institutions, such as the Bureau of Mines in the Department of the Interior. For this reason I should like again to call attention to some of the accomplishments and needs of this excellent organization.

Mr. President, perhaps many of us think first of safety when we think about the work of the Bureau of Mines. It is quite natural to think first of safety, in view of the Bureau's remarkable record of achievement in this field. Take coal mining, for example: During the 5 years before 1910, the year in which the Bureau was created, an average of 5.89 persons per million tons of coal produced were killed in the coal mines of the United States. Thanks in no small measure to the safety work of the Bureau of Mines, the rate during the past 5 years has been reduced to about 2.85 persons per million tons of coal. If the former rate had continued during the years from 1910 to the present, nearly 29,000 more persons would have been killed than was actually the case. Taking the relatively low figure of $5,000 as the value of a human life, this represents a saving of $145,000,000 to the industry and to the Nation through safer coal-mine operation. Other figures for the same period of years indicate a decrease of about 1,400,000 in the number of nonfatal accidents. Taking the very conservative figure of $100 to cover the cost of compensation, hospitalization, and other expenses to the industry for an accident of this kind, we get a further saving of $140,000,000.

However, Mr. President, this is not all; for these coldblooded, dollars-and-cents figures do not take into account the grief and misery of the families of the men who would have been killed, or the pain and suffering of the men who would have been injured. Furthermore the figures do not include earning ability that would have been stopped by death, or pay that would have ceased through lost time from nonfatal accidents. The last items represent a monetary saving directly to the workers themselves, or to their dependents, of at least $500,000,000 more, bringing the total to $785,000,000. I hope no one in the Halls of Congress looks upon the Bureau of Mines as a beggar standing hat in hand upon our doorstep. If there should be such a one, I ask him to compare the saving of $785,000,000 in the coalmining industry alone with the total of only $60,000,000 expended for the entire work of the Bureau during the same period of years. Is it not a stupendous return upon an investment?

Mr. President, training in first aid and in mine rescue is the most intimate and in some ways the most effective part of the Bureau's safety work, because it reaches individuals directly and in large numbers. I might mention, incidentally, that the Bureau of Mines is the only governmental organization in the world that gives such training directly to the workmen themselves.

First aid not only teaches the miner what to do for an injured buddy in the first important minutes after an accident, when doing the right thing will often save a hand or a leg or even a life, but also teaches him that his carelessness may mean injury or death for others, even if he should himself escape. Mine rescue training teaches methods of exploring a mine that is on fire or has been wrecked by a disaster-methods which make it possible for the rescuers to go through the mine with the least danger to themselves and with the greatest chance of being able to help anyone who may yet be alive. Experience has shown that men who are trained to give first aid to others usually take good care that others will not have to give first aid to them. In other words, graduates of the Bureau's courses in first aid and mine rescue are much less likely than untrained men to take risks with themselves, with others, or with property.

Mr. President, the number of men trained since 1910 is well over the million mark—1,146,854 on the 1st of last July, to be exact—including 835,581 in coal mining, 130,280 in metal mining, 87,587 in the petroleum industry, 30,553 in metallurgical plants, 14,845 in nonmetallic mining, 13,553 in cement plants, 5,950 in tunnel driving, and 28,500 in miscellaneous mining activities. During the past fiscal year courses in first aid and mine rescue were given to 105,093 persons residing in 690 communities in 38 States. All of this has been accomplished by the voluntary cooperation of mine operators and workers with the Bureau of Mines, for the Bureau has no authority to enforce its recommendations or to enter mines or plants. The regulation of mining and other mineral industries is vested in the 48 individual States rather than in the Federal Government. Because of its proven value as an effective way to prevent accidents, the first-aid work is in much greater demand today than ever before, and the Bureau is swamped with requests for the services of instructors, which requests it cannot meet with the men and funds at present available.

Mr. President, someone has said that the most precious thing that comes out of a mine is not coal, or iron, or even gold, but the miner himself, which is just another way of saying that human life is more important than great possessions. The Bureau of Mines from its very beginning has held this point of view, and a large part of its work has always been to see that the miner does come out of the mine safe and sound. In fact, one of the chief reasons for the creation of the Bureau in 1910 was the strong feeling that something must be done to prevent loss of life in coal-mine explosions, such as those that shocked the Nation by killing more than 1,100 men in the single year 1907. In view of the effective work the Bureau has done, and the consequent saving to the Nation, to the mining industry, and to the workers in the mines, I strongly believe that the Bureau should be provided with ample funds to extend its safety work, so that it can meet demands for service which it now cannot render as fully as it would like to do in preserving this most precious of our national resources.

Mr. President, most persons who have given the matter careful thought agree that safety and health are closely linked together and that both are necessary for efficiency in the mineral industries. Any person who loads 10 tons of coal or rock in a shift or who wrestles all day with a 200-pound drill or a several thousand pound mining machine, or who drives a mule in hauling scores of cars of coal, or who walks through miles of muddy, low, and frequently hot underground workings, or climbs several hundred feet of ladders, certainly must be a "he man." If his health fails so that he can no longer do his work efficiently he is usually relegated to the scrap heap. This is not only a loss to the man himself but it is also a further loss to the productive wealth of the Nation.

We should remember, too, that in addition to all the ills that are common to men who work above ground the miner has to contend with another set that are peculiar to his type of work. One of these ills is caused by dust in the air that he must breathe. Sometimes this dust is so fine that it can hardly be seen, but nevertheless it collects in the worker's lungs and causes irritation, which, if continued long enough, eventually results in "miner's consumption"—or silicosis, as the doctors call it—and the man is unfit for work even if he is not actually killed. This is not an imaginary danger. It is so real that the cost of compensation to injured workers and premiums on liability insurance that is required by law in many States are serious items in the cost to us as individuals and to the Nation as a whole for the minerals, metals, and other products of the mine that are so necessary to our daily comfort.

Mr. President, the Bureau of Mines has attacked the dust problem in four ways. First, by a study of just how the miner's lungs are damaged and by what kinds of dust; second, by devising instruments to measure the amount of dust in mine air; third, by finding ways of preventing or controlling the amount of dust that is made during mining operations; and fourth, by testing and developing safe, satisfactory, and reliable masks or other devices that men can wear when they have to work in dust-laden air. Commendable progress has been made, but the work required in order to get a final solution of the problem is much greater than the Bureau has been able to perform with funds thus far provided by the Congress.

Other matters which the Bureau cannot study as fully as they should be studied include the effect on health of the hot and moist air found in many mines, the danger from harmful and even poisonous gases often met with underground, and the question of sanitary conditions in and around mining communities. Some of this work can be done in the laboratory, and some will require surveys in actual mines or in mining districts, but all of it is vitally necessary to preserve the health of workmen in our mineral industries.

But, Mr. President, safety and health are not the only things in which the Bureau of Mines is interested. It is trying to find cheaper and safer methods of digging minerals from the earth and better ways of smelting and refining in order to get better metals from the minerals; to prevent waste of our petroleum and other natural resources; to extract more and better gasoline and oils from the crude petroleum; to find out the best ways of using fuels; and doing a thousand and one other things that make for efficiency and economy in the use of minerals and metals.

Mr. President, we as a nation have a big stake in those minerals and metals. The farmer can plant pretty nearly anything he wants to and get some sort of a crop—some better than others—but this cannot be done with a crop of metals or of minerals. What is in the earth can be taken out; but, after that is once done, it is gone—used up—and there is not any more. And if it is wasted, if the most is not made out of what is there, no power on earth can grow a new crop of minerals. So it is up to us as a nation to know how the minerals that we inherited with this broad continent are being harvested and used. If we do not do this we may have a fight on our hands some day and find that we have not any metals for our weapons or, what is perhaps even more serious, our grandchildren may find themselves in a country that has not any fuel for their furnaces, any gasoline for their autos, or any other of the countless things that are made from minerals.

Mr. President, it should hardly be necessary to say once more that our daily comfort, our social and economic life, and even our very existence depend upon the products of our mines, quarries, and oil fields. The sturdy, lasting construction of our homes is made possible by brick, stone, concrete. steel, iron, copper, lead, zinc, and many other minerals and metals, all of which come first from a mine or quarry. Our houses are lighted by electricity, gas, or kerosene, since for most of us the day of the wax candle or tallow dip has passed. Illuminating gas and kerosene are mineral products; and the machines which generate electricity are made of steel and copper and are driven by engines that use coal or oil as fuel, or by water wheels made of metal, which, in turn, need dams made with products of the quarry. Steel and copper or aluminum are essential for the power lines which bring the electric current to our door; and tungsten, brass, lead, and glass are used in the familiar magic bulb that changes electricity into light.

The heating plant that keeps us warm in winter is made of steel, and coal, oil, or gas supplies the fuel. Paint, lino-leum, oilcloth, wallpaper, window shades, and many other things that make our homes attractive all contain minerals of one kind or another. To cook the food we eat we need utensils made of metal, glass, or porcelain, all of which are mineral products. Even our health is safeguarded from birth to death by hundreds of appliances made of porcelain, glass, metals, or metal alloys and by drugs and medicines derived from coal, petroleum, or other minerals.

Mr. President, there could be no modern railroads if there were no steel rails, steel car wheels, and steel, concrete, or stone bridges. Airplanes could not take the air without their metal engines; the telephone or telegraph, as we know them today, would not function without metal equipment and a great network of metal wires; and the radio could not have been invented if the metals used in making it had not been at hand and if their special uses had not been known. Although the farmer usually knows little of mining or smelting-and, perhaps, cares less-he, too, depends upon the mineral industries for potash, limestone, sulphur, and other minerals in his fertilizer and insecticides; for the metals in his plows, drills, tractors, and harvesting machinery; and for metals and other mineral products used in making and operating the truck, railroad car, or steamboat that carries his produce to the market. These are but a few examples of the way in which our modern world depends upon the mineral industries.

But, Mr. President, minerals do not grow on top of the ground, like grass or wheat or trees; they must be dug for in the earth. The large iron-ore deposits in Minnesota and Michigan are dug with huge steam or electric shovels after stripping off the layers of dirt and soil that cover them; and power shovels are sometimes used to dig flat beds of coal where the covering soil, or overburden, is not too thick. Deposits of gold in sands and gravels of old stream beds are mined with dredges that float on the surface of an artificial pond and bring up the gold and gravel, sometimes from depths of 60 to 75 feet below the pond level. Ores containing gold, silver, copper, lead, or zinc that are found in narrow veins, or lodes, are mined by drilling and blasting, after the veins are tapped by tunnels or shafts that sometimes extend for thousands of feet into the earth. Beds of coal are mined through entries that on a map look very much like the streets and alleys of a modern city. But even when exactly the same mining method is used, the actual work of getting out the mineral is often done better and cheaper at some places than at others. So the Bureau of Mines devotes much of its time to technical problems of the mineral industries—to the problems of how to get the best mineral crop with the least harvesting expense.

Mr. President, some of the most real and important work of the Bureau is to study and describe the best mining methods so that the operators of all mines may be able to use them and produce their metals or minerals at a lower cost, thus reducing the price that all of us have to pay when we use these products in our daily life. This work is particularly helpful to prospectors and operators of small metal mines, who cannot afford to employ engineering help but who must be relied upon to a large extent for finding new mineral deposits and for the first work in developing new discoveries to prove their value.

Discovery of new deposits will result in the opening of new mines, and it follows that this will assist in providing employment in the mining industry. At present the number of employees whom the Bureau can put on this work is almost insignificant when one considers the size of the field included in the mining States, particularly those of the West, each with many separate mining districts, some of them almost inaccessible.

The Bureau also studies details of mining methods, such as the kind of alloy steel best suited for bits used in drilling ore and rock, the strength of pillars and arches that hold up the mine roof, the vibrations in the surrounding earth caused by blasting in mines and quarries, the possibilities of air-conditioning for deep and hot working places in metal mines, and the various kinds of machinery in use.

Mr. President, mechanical equipment for mining coal nas developed rapidly in recent years. Under some conditions the use of this machinery has made it possible to mine more of the coal in a given bed, and under other conditions it has decreased the percentage of recovery. The Bureau is trying to find out the best practices, and report upon them for the benefit of districts where a change in methods will result in better recovery. During the past year it has issued reports on the proper lay-out at shaft bottoms and slope bottoms where mechanical mining is employed, on the effects of working more than one shift per day with mechanical loading in underground coal mines, and upon the advantages and disadvantages of rail and truck haulage in open-pit or "strip" mines. But the flood of problems that has resulted from improvements in machinery and the increasing use of that machinery in mining operations is much greater than the Bureau is able to handle. This is particularly true for the anthracite industry, which, as you all know, is one of the major industries of my own State of Pennsylvania, and which is in dire need of help at the present time. Some 25 percent of the anthracite reserves have been mined, but to get the remainder will be more expensive unless new and cheaper methods of mining it are found. This demands a great deal of research and study, which can best be done by an unprejudiced agency like the Bureau of Mines. Instead of the 2 engineers that the Bureau so far has been able to detail to the work, provision should be made for at least 20 engineers who could give their entire time to the problems connected with improved coal-mining methods.

Nobody who looks after a furnace likes to carry out more ashes than he has to, and everybody who buys coal likes to get as much heat for his money as he can. In such things the United States Government does not differ from you or me or from our neighbor across the street. This is why the Bureau of Mines has analyzed more than 200,000 samples of coal, some of them taken from the walls of coal mines, some from railroad cars in shipment, and some from coal as it was being dumped into the bin at a Government power plant. These analyses show the amount of ash and other impurity in the coal, as well as its heating value. They are published from time to time to make it possible for any buyer of coal to know exactly what he is getting.

Mr. President, increased use of machinery in coal mining has introduced new problems in the washing and preparation of coal. When mechanical loading equipment is used, it does not throw out the rock and other impurities as a miner would do when loading by hand. Consequently the coal must be cleaned when it reaches the surface to remove sulphur and ash-forming material before shipment to the consumer. Research on this problem is extremely important if coal is to hold its own and recover from the losses it has suffered through competition from petroleum and natural gas. Such research should also include a study of methods of dustproofing coal to make it attractive to the consumer when he handles it in his basement. The Bureau, with the funds thus far placed at its disposal, has made some progress in the study of coal preparation, but a great deal more work is needed.

Mr. President, in order to get the most heat from coal, it must be burned in the right way and in the right kind of a furnace. So the Bureau of Mines has studied these things, too, to find out for any particular kind of coal how thick the fuel bed should be, how much coal should be thrown on the fire at a time, how much air is needed to get the best results, and just the right size and shape for the firebox in which the coal is burned. Some of these studies were made on battleships or in large power plants, some in small furnaces like those used in heating private houses, and some in special furnaces built in the Bureau's coal-testing laboratory. Because of the knowledge gained in this work, the Bureau of Mines is asked by the Bureau of the Budget for advice on burning fuels and the purchase and operation of equipment for Government plants. In 1938 alone adoption of the Bureau's suggestions resulted in economies totaling about $600,000. This amount is more than one-fourth of the entire appropriation spent by the Bureau of Mines during that year-another return upon the investment, this time to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, burning cleaner coal in the right way has a further advantage because it makes less smoke and soot. This means that those of us who live in cities have purer air to breathe, as well as a greater amount of health-giving sunshine, but it also means that we do not have to pay so much for laundry bills, and that the clothes we wear and the curtains, linen, rugs, and other interior decorations in our homes, do not wear out so fast.

Coal can be "carbonized" by heating it in an oven or tube that keeps out air. This is usually done to make coke, which is left after gas and tar are driven off. The most important use of coke is to furnish fuel in blast furnaces, but it is also valuable as fuel in the furnaces and cooking stoves of homes. The gas from coke making can be used for fuel and light, while the tar is such a mixture of chemicals that nobody yet has found out all the things that can be made from it, although we do know that it is the source of aspirin, laxatives, and other drugs, ammonia, dyes, photographic chemicals, perfumes, flavoring extracts, disinfectants, and even motor fuel, to mention only a few of them.

In studying the carbonizing of coal, the Bureau has tried to find out why the coke from some coals is hard and tough and so makes good blast-furnace fuel; why that from other coals is soft and brittle; and why some coals will not "coke" at all. It has studied the ways of saving and using the gas from coke making, and the ways of removing tar so the gas can be used to light our homes without clogging meters and pipes. It has found out and described the kinds of coke, gas, and tar that are made when different coals are carbonized and when different temperatures are used; and it has studied the tars themselves, and the ways of making new and different products from them.

Mr. President, coal and lignite are by far the largest of our national fuel resources. Our known reserves of petroleum and natural gas are comparatively limited, and the fear is always with us that some day the supply will not meet the demand. Consequently, in the interest of conservation, we should try to use the more abundant coal wherever possible. On the other hand high-grade coking coals should not be used for ordinary heating purposes, because the supply of high-grade coal is limited, and will become exhausted long before the much larger supplies of medium and lowgrade coals. The best way to bring about the use of the cheaper, low-grade coals is through research to discover means of burning them just as effectively as the high-grade coals and just as conveniently as we now burn oil or gas. I believe that the Bureau of Mines, with its long experience in research on the use of coal, is eminently fitted to make these studies.

There is another way of using coal on which the Bureau has already done some excellent work. This is the process that the scientists call hydrogenation; but the underlying principle of it is not as formidable as its name. It is simply this: When finely powdered coal is heated with hydrogen gas in a suitable apparatus under great pressure and at a high temperature, it is possible to force the carbon in the coal to combine with the hydrogen and form a liquid that has practically the same chemical make-up as crude petroleum, and is, therefore, a possible source of motor fuel. All of the experts and economists agree that some day our natural supply of petroleum will be used up. Long before this occurs, however, petroleum will begin to be scarce, and we shall have to import it, or find substitutes, if we are to run our automobiles and trucks, keep our airplanes in the air, or continue to use oil in our warships. In the event of war, such imports might be cut off entirely, and we might have to depend upon petroleum substitutes. However, an industry that could supply these substitutes in the amounts needed could not be created overnight and the war might easily be won or lost in the meantime.

But, Mr. President, aside from this military point of view, an industry to make oil from coal will be needed for peace-time commercial purposes in the not far distant future. The creation of such an industry is a slow process. It took the American petroleum industry 44 years to produce the first billion barrels of petroleum, and other chemical industries have taken almost as long before commercial success was reached.

I believe the Bureau of Mines should be commended for its foresight and prudence and encouraged in its research to develop this process to the point where motor fuel can be made from American coal so efficiently and cheaply that, when petroleum supplies begin to fail, the transfer from the old fuel to the new can be made without drastic readjustments.

At present petroleum, natural gas, and the things that are made from them furnish more than a third of the entire value of the country's mineral production, and in some way touch every unit of the Government and of industry and every individual of the general public. So it is no surprise to find that these resources have been given a great deal of study by the Bureau of Mines. Petroleum-or crude oil, as it is often called-and natural gas are usually imprisoned deep in the ground, in some places as much as two miles and a half, and are brought up through wells that are drilled to tap and free them. From the wells the natural gas is piped to factories and homes for use as fuel, and the petroleum is piped to refineries where it is made into gasoline, kerosene, lubricating oils and greases, wax, tar, and asphalt, as well as products used in making soap, candles, candy, medicine, perfumes, and a number of other things.

Mr. President, it is not possible to get all of the oil out of the ground, even with the best methods in use today—usually as much as half of it is left behind—so the Bureau is trying to find ways of increasing the recovery in order to make our national resources of petroleum last just as long as possible. My own State of Pennsylvania, where many of the oil wells have ceased to flow of their own accord, represents a typical area where more and more dependence must be placed upon true information based upon scientific facts. According to the engineers, the problem includes a large number of technical items, such as the way oil and gas are combined at the high temperatures and pressures that are at present deep in the earth, and the way the oil and gas separate when brought up through the well to the temperature and pressure at the surface. Then, too, there is the question as to how oil flows through the sandstones or other rocks that make up the underground reservoirs, and as to the way in which water in such a reservoir interferes with oil production. Other items are the amount of gas that will dissolve in the oil and the separation of oil and water when they are mixed in what is called an "emulsion." Another feature is that of piping compressed air or compressed natural gas back into the well to force the oil up to the surface. And there is need for information on methods of pumping. This is not something that can be left to manufacturers of pumping equipment. The industry must have a knowledge of efficient and economic methods much broader than this, so that it will be possible to select the proper pumps and pumping methods to meet the actual conditions in a particular oil field. Then, too, there is the matter of reducing the number of unnecessary wells, which are said to cost from $80,000,000 to $100,000,000 annually. If we could have facts instead of opinions as to how far apart the wells could be spaced and still get all of the recoverable oil, much unnecessary expense for oil-well drilling could be saved.

Mr. President, the Bureau of Mines has made chemical analyses and tests of crude oils from all the important oil fields, because the value of crude oils and the products which can be gotten from them depend upon what is in them; it has led the way in drawing up a set of standards for use in buying and selling crude oil, gasoline, and lubricating oil; and it has made regular surveys of the kinds of motor fuel sold in different parts of the country, both in summer and in winter, to see whether the automobile owner is getting gasoline that is up to standard. The Bureau's studies of the ways of storing crude oil and gasoline have helped to prevent losses from evaporation, and its studies of the flow of gas and oil through pipe lines have reduced the cost of piping natural gas to the user and crude oil to the refinery.

At the refinery crude petroleum is made into gasoline, kerosene, and other things by fractional distillation—that is, by heating it to the different temperatures at which different products, or fractions, are driven off as vapors, which are then collected and cooled until they become liquids again—just as water can be turned into steam and back to water. The Bureau's studies of refining have shown many ways of cheapening the process and getting more of the desirable fractions, as well as ways of making better products.

Two engineers of the Bureau of Mines invented a method by which the crude oil is cracked by distilling it under pressure and at a high temperature. Without this and other cracking processes, which make it possible to get three or four times more gasoline from a barrel of crude oil than we were able to get 25 years ago, we would not have enough gasoline, at anything like the price we pay today, to run the millions of automobiles now in use.

Other Bureau studies of refining have shown how it is possible to get rid of sulphur in gasoline—which corrodes or eats away tanks and other metal things that it may touch—and to get rid of wax, thus making it possible to get good lubricants from a number of crude oils which otherwise could not be used for this purpose.

Mr. President, in Pennsylvania our oils are too valuable to spread on roads, but there are some sections of the country where the people still use their oils that way. Be this as it may, we all recognize the need for low-cost highways, especially what are known as feeders. The country has the raw material and the manufacturing equipment to make good asphaltic roads where needed, so the reason why folks in many communities do not come to town on market day, and why pleasure driving is confined to the paved boulevards, must be lack of unbiased information about specifications and methods of making asphalts and road oils. We need to know what properties of asphaltic materials are suitable for various uses, so that specifications can be drawn on the basis of quality rather than by just a mumbo jumbo of opinions.

Some natural gas-chiefly that found in Texas-contains small amounts of helium, which is the only gas, except hydrogen, that can be used to make balloons and dirigibles float. Helium will not burn or explode, while hydrogen is very inflammable, and therefore dangerous because of the chance that it may be ignited by fire or even by lightning. Before the World War all airships were floated with hydrogen, and helium was a curiosity that had been made only in very small amounts and at a cost of more than $2,000 a cubic foot. The Bureau of Mines first found out which natural-gas fields had helium in them and then worked out a process for getting out the helium cheaply. In this process the natural gas is cooled in much the same way that air is cooled to make liquid air, or carbon dioxide cooled to make dry ice. A very low temperature is used—300° below zero—and at this temperature all the other things in the natural gas become either liquids or solids; so the helium, which still remains a gas, can be separated and collected. The other things are then allowed to become gas again, but they are better than before, because the unburnable helium has been taken out. Today, in its plant near Amarillo, Tex., the Bureau is able to make helium at a cost of about 1 cent a cubic foot. By this work the Bureau of Mines has strengthened our national defense, because the United States is the only country that has a supply of the safe helium for its dirigibles, and has greatly reduced the cost to the taxpayer for the helium required by the Army and Navy.

Mr. President, although I am not an oilman myself, I am satisfied that every item of the Bureau's petroleum studies, no matter how technical it may seem, has a very practical use. Results are what count, and oilmen from my own State and elsewhere agree that the Bureau's work on oil and gas is very much worth while, and that it deserves increased support through appropriations from the Congress.

Some minerals, such as stone, coal, sand, and gravel, are ready for use as soon as they come from the earth, except perhaps for making them the size we need or taking out some slight impurity. But other minerals are only a small part of the ores in which they are found; so the ores must be crushed and concentrated to get rid of great and useless quantities of waste rock. Sometimes, as with lead and zinc ores of the Mississippi Valley region, this concentration is done by shaking the crushed ore in water, allowing the heavier minerals to settle to the bottom, where they are collected and saved. Sometimes, as in the cyanide process for extracting gold, chemicals are added to the crushed ore to dissolve the gold but leave the rock as waste. And sometimes, as in separating copper minerals, the ore is very finely powdered and churned in water with air, oil, and other so-called reagents to form millions of bubbles, which stick to the mineral particles, rather than the rock, and bring them to the surface of the water. The miners call this "flotation."

Mr. President, I am told that at least once in every generation improvements in methods of ore treatment make new mines out of old dumps, or revive abandoned mining districts. This happened in the nineties when a man named Wilfley developed a concentrating table that was far superior to the crude devices formerly used. During the first 10 years of the present century the cyanide process made it necessary to look over all minerals carrying gold and silver to see whether what was once unprofitable rock had become ore. In the next 15 years, the growth of the flotation process again pointed the way to cut costs and save losses that were unavoidable with earlier practice. The Bureau of Mines studies all of these concentrating methods to find out the best ways of using them with any particular kind of ore, and to see if some improvement in the method can be found that will increase the amount of mineral saved and thus prevent waste of resources which, once used, cannot be replaced. The Bureau also tests the various kinds of machines in use and finds out which one works best under given conditions—and why. But most important of all, the Bureau describes the results of these studies and publishes them, so they may be common property, and help in producing the minerals at a lower cost. This work is particularly valuable today, because many of the high-grade mineral deposits from which we have gotten our metals in the past are nearing exhaustion, and it is becoming more and more necessary to devise improved methods in order to concentrate deposits of lower grade or to invent entirely new processes of doing so.

Mr. President, in most of the minerals from which we get metals, the metals are combined with oxygen or sulphur or other things, and so the minerals cannot serve us-even after they are concentrated-until the metals are gotten out of them in a blast furnace or a smelter. Here, too, the Bureau studies ways and methods in order to make them better. For instance, it built a special blast furnace, with special measuring instruments, to find out exactly what happens from the time iron ore is put in at the top until it comes out a white-hot liquid at the bottom. This knowledge helps in reducing smelting costs and in producing a better metal. The use of the electric furnace for producing cast iron, steel, and zinc, for brass melting, and for making alloys has also been given a great deal of attention. But the Bureau's metallurgists do not stop here. They are constantly studying the metals themselves to find out the things that make them harder, tougher, or stronger-when hardness, toughness, or strength is needed; to see what happens when they are combined to make alloys, and what new and better properties the different alloys have; and to find out other facts that may show some new use, some cheaper method of production, or some way in which a cheaper alloy can do the work of some other more expensive metal.

Mr. President, in this work the Bureau studies first the underlying scientific facts about the mineral or metal being investigated. It then endeavors to find a practical application for these facts that may lead to a new method of treatment or the improvement in an old method. The method is then tried in the laboratory—and, if desirable, on a larger scale in what is known as a pilot plant—and the results are published as an incentive for the creation of a new metallurgical industry.

The work on manganese affords an example of the results of this kind of study. On June 7, 1938, the Bureau received a patent on an electrical process invented by its research workers for making manganese that is 99.7 percent pure. Never before had manganese of this purity been available in quantity. The patent has been assigned to the United States Government, as represented by the Secretary of the Interior, so that it may be made available to the industry in general without monopoly. Two licenses already have been issued, and plants are under construction for commercial production. Similar research is under way on the metal called magnesium. If successful, this might lead to the establishment of another new industry—to provide lightweight metal for airplane construction and other uses of that kind.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TAFT in the chair). Does the Senator from Pennsylvania yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. DAVIS. I yield.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am much instructed by the able speech of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I am informed that there are resources of manganese in this country sufficient for our needs if we would develop our domestic resources and cease importing foreign manganese into the country. I wonder what the Senator would say as to that?

Mr. DAVIS. The Bureau of Mines are now concentrating their efforts upon manganese; and I think it would be wise if the Senator would give some attention to the additional appropriations needed for the purpose of enabling the Bureau to carry on this work, and especially their laboratory work, and other investigations.

Mr. LUNDEEN. I am very much in favor of such appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS. I think we all are, and we should not be stingy with such appropriations, because the minerals of this country will be useful to the Nation in the years to come.

Mr. President, I am also told that there are many deposits of minerals near the large power dams in the West that have recently been built or are still under construction as Federal projects. The minerals in these deposits have to be smelted, but the mines are usually isolated and are so widely scattered that they would not support an ordinary smelter using fuel, because such a smelter would require a big investment in plant equipment and would have to have a large and steady supply of uniform ore to operate successfully. However, where power is cheap, smelting with an electric furnace can be done on a fairly small scale and with a much smaller investment for equipment. The Bureau of Mines has a laboratory at Boulder City, Nev., where the minerals from these deposits could be studied to see whether they are suitable for smelting in an electric furnace, but additional equipment and men are needed before the work could be undertaken. I might add that successful electric smelting of the minerals in these deposits would not only provide new uses for power generated at the dams but would create new industries in the

Here in the East the Tennessee Valley Authority would be willing to transfer its electrical laboratory at Norris to the Bureau of Mines if the Bureau were provided with funds to operate it. In such case the work, instead of being devoted to clays and pottery, as in the past under T. V. A., would include studies of the use of electric power in the treatment of other nonmetallic minerals as well. Some of the problems that the Bureau could investigate are electric melting in glassmaking to produce better grades of glass or possibly new ones; the production of paving stones from basalt and andesite, which are common rocks that are found near many power dams; the making of glassy quartz from sand; and the manufacture of special cements for which electricity would supply the heat. I understand that new funds for equipment would not be needed, merely a transfer of the laboratory from T. V. A. to the Bureau of Mines, but funds for operation would, of course, be required. It seems to me that this should be well worth while as part of the general problem of finding new uses for electric power and the creation of new industries.

Mr. President, I should like to mention just one more important function of the Bureau of Mines—its work on economics and statistics. We hear much these days about planned economy in the production of our mineral resources. But before we can do a single thing about it with any chance of success, we need to know how much we have produced in the past, how much we are producing at present, how much we have to import, and how much we send to other countries.

The Bureau of Mines supplies this need for facts by collecting and publishing figures showing production, imports, exports, value, and distribution of most of the 150 different minerals which we as a nation consume each year. Some of these figures are published every week or every month to supply up-to-the-minute facts. Other figures are published once a year to give a larger picture. All are widely used by industry and business in order to keep in touch with the mineral market, and to help in solving the problem of how or when to supply us with coal, metals, gasoline, building materials, and all the other mineral products. However, there are many economic features which the Bureau has not been able to deal with effectively thus far, because the funds appropriated could not be stretched to cover them. One of these is a detailed study of what are called deficient minerals—that is, raw materials from which we get manganese, chromium, tin, nickel, antimony, and tungstenwhich have important military uses and would be vitally needed in case of war, but which are obtained wholly or in part from foreign sources.

Another problem, Mr. President, has to do with the reclamation of scrap metal, while a third concerns the use of gold and silver in the monetary systems of the world. Then, too, there is a whole group of minerals, including stone, sand and gravel, cement, clay, lime, and gypsum, whose production totals millions of tons each year. To what extent is the country's total ability to produce these minerals being utilized? Are there any opportunities to increase employment in these industries? Are new methods of production likely to decrease the cost, improve the products, or otherwise change the pattern of supply and demand? The Bureau of Mines already has the statistical facts which would be needed to answer these questions, but it does not have the funds to enable it to make a complete study of the facts.

Mr. President, these are just a few of the thousand and one things—for I have not time to tell of all of them—which the Bureau of Mines is doing and has been doing to give us better minerals, metals, and alloys. While its most vital aim has always been to make the miner's job a safer one, it has also tried in every way it could to prevent the waste of natural resources with which our land was so richly supplied. These resources are not inexhaustible, and so should not be wasted wantonly by any one generation, but should be looked upon as a trust for all. That is why there is not a single person in the United States who is not benefited by the Bureau's work in some way, and often in many different ways, although perhaps many people may not know about it.

The United States has the best mineral endowment among all the great modern nations, but in the past the very abundance of our resources has frequently led to their use in a prodigal manner. We have gone in for large-scale production, for savings in mining costs, and for cheapness of the resulting products, often without any regard for the conservation of the resources themselves. But now our country has passed the pioneer stage. Unplanned, excessive production can no longer be consumed by our present industrial civilization. Consequently, any forward-looking program today must add the conservation of our remaining resources to matters of cheapness in production and economy in use. It must give full consideration to the practical problems of the individual miner, the vast financial responsibilities of the mineral industry as a whole, and the needs both for today and tomorrow of the man in the city street or on the farm, whose daily comfort is built from mineral uses. It must take into account the costs of mining, but it must also count the cost of human life. But, above all, it must see to it that the rich mineral heritage of our people shall not perish from the earth through waste or folly.

Mr. President, that is why I believe that we must consider ourselves fortunate indeed to have an organization like the Bureau of Mines, created for and dedicated to safety, efficiency, and economy in the mineral industries. And that is why I believe that the excellent work it has already done deserves continued and substantial support, not only from us as Members of the Congress but from every man and woman within the United States.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania has made a very excellent speech in regard to the important subject of coal. However, I wish to correct a statement he made, a statement which is commonly made in the East. He refers to "coal and lignite." I wish to call attention to the fact that "lignite" is defined by Webster as a variety of coal.

Mr. DAVIS. I agree with the Senator. I did not want to give the impression to the Senate that lignite was not coal.

Mr. FRAZIER. I also wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that four States in the West contain lignite in abundance. North Dakota, Wyoming, Colorado, and Montana have 60 percent of all the coal in the United States. Those four States have 40 percent of all the coal in the world.

Mr. DAVIS. I called attention to the fact of the great deposits of lignite in the four States mentioned by the Senator from North Dakota.

RELIEF OF AGRICULTURE—COST OF PRODUCTION

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, a bill dealing with agriculture, Senate bill 570, known as the cost-of-production bill, has been introduced in this body. It is sponsored by a number of Senators. A similar bill has been introduced in the House of Representatives. Hearings upon the bill have been held in the Agricultural Committees of both the Senate and the House. The hearings of the Senate committee are printed and are now available.

I have in my hand a letter written by Mr. R. T. Stuart, of Oklahoma City. As I understand, Mr. Stuart is a large landowner in Oklahoma and Texas and knows the farming industry. He was in Washington recently and someone gave him a copy of Senate bill 570, the cost-of-production bill. He took it home and studied it. He referred the bill to economists of the State chamber of commerce and the Oklahoma University, and he encloses with his letter a memorandum furnished him by those economists.

I wish to quote one paragraph from Mr. Stuart's letter, as follows:

The thing we want to do is to get away from Government control and operation of industry, but we do want Government regulation and protection of industry. Regulation and protection of industry are functions of Government, but control and operation are not. We want Government only to regulate and protect industry so that every citizen is treated on a fair and equal basis, as an American citizen, and left free to exercise initiative and ability to do.

Mr. President, this memorandum on the farm bill is one of the best I have seen. It comes, as I said, from the economists of the University of Oklahoma, a great agricultural State, and from the economists of the chamber of commerce of that State.

I wish to read one sentence before I ask to have it printed in the RECORD. Under the heading of "General Comment" it savs

This bill is a protection to agriculture in general. It may work some hardship on the large producer, but for the average producer it will do the job.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the memorandum on Senate bill 570, to which I have referred, may be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The memorandum is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON S. 570

Section 1 provides that crops of one year having a value of $10,000,000 or more shall not be sold to domestic consumers for than the cost of production for that part consumed in the United States.

There will be no practical difficulty in administering the bill, because the first year's costs of production will be based on the conditions as they exist at this time, which will not vary greatly from year to year. The experiences of the first year will lay the foundation for a permanent program and for any minor changes needed.

Section 2 provides for determining the average costs of production

duction.

The efficient farmer will not be penalized nor the inefficient and marginal farmer favored, because this section of the bill sets out the factors to be used in computing the costs of production. Practical experience will overcome any difficulties encountered in determining these costs of production.

Section 3 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall estimate (1) the volume of production and (2) the volume required for domestic consumption.

The actual volume consumed will not vary greatly from the for domestic consumption.

The actual volume consumed will not vary greatly from the estimated volume, nor will cheap substitutes be bought to the exclusion of superior products. When the consumer has the funds he will not buy inferior substitutes.

Section 4 provides (1) that the Secretary of Agriculture shall announce the cost of production as determined by section 2, (2) that dealers and others shall have to procure a license to operate, (3) that products in excess of the domestic requirements shall that in the case of cotton the excess shall be marked as excess and may be used to fill the producer's quota for domestic consumption the following year.

The cotton farmers should be for this bill 100 percent because it gives them more protection than any other proposal thus far made, and the producers of other commodities will prosper when each group is guaranteed its share of the wealth produced in this country.

Section 5 provides that all warehouse reserves and export quantity.

Section 5 provides that all warehouse reserves and export quantities shall be delivered to the Secretary of Agriculture, who shall not sell any of them for domestic consumption except in case of a shortage, but may allow withdrawals for processing for export purposes.

This provision will prevent dumping, market slumps, and manipulation of prices of farm products.

Section 6 provides that the holder of the excess receipts and certificates may be paid at the post offices.

This will prevent the long delays the farmers have experienced under the present and previous agricultural acts, and will reduce the costs of administration.

Section 7 provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall administer the act, issue licenses to dealers and others, and prescribe the necessary regulations.

The act will have to be administered by someone, and the Secretary of Agriculture will have the aid of more agencies than any other person or group.

Section 8 provides a penalty for any dealer paying less than the cost of production. This section would put the fear of the Federal law into those who would dare violate the act.

would dare violate the act.

Section 9 provides that all warehouse reserves and export surpluses shall be disposed of only under the provisions of this act.

This closes the loopholes against speculators and chiselers.

Section 10 provides that the tariff on foreign-grown products sold or produced for less than our domestic products cost shall be raised to equal the difference plus 10 percent.

This will stop enriching the foreigners at the expense of the American ferrors.

American farmer

Section 11 provides that the act shall apply to 1939 production. Section 11 provides that the act shall apply to 1939 production.

Section 12 provides that this act shall not affect the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, crop insurance loans on agricultural commodities, nor certain parts of the A. A. A. as amended. Farmers can still afford to protect their soil and leave it intact for the next generation under this bill.

Section 13 provides that the act is severable.

This means that if one part or clause of this act is tossed out by the courts the decision will not affect other provisions.

GENERAL COMMENT

This bill is a protection to agriculture in general. It may work some hardship on the large producer, but for the average producer it will do the job, and if agriculture is put on the proper base, the large producer will adjust his production to the law of supply and demand and agricultural labor will be taken care of in increased wages and compensation. Purchasing power will put farm labor on an equitable basis and the farmer will be able to pay his farm labor of adequate wages. adequate wages.

This is the best proposal yet offered to solve the farm problem. Our American farmer has sold his crops in the open market at world prices in competition with low-priced labor and very low living standards. Everything the American farmer has bought has had to pay the costs of production plus a profit and protected against outside competition by the tariff laws. In short, the American farmer sells in an open market and buys in a closed market.

It is either this bill or one like it, or free trade which would have the same effect on the industrial worker that the present system has on the farmer. The industrial worker sells his product to the American consumer in a protected market and works only part time. He could sell a greater volume and work practically full time if the farmer, too, had a protected market.

This bill is an attempt to equalize conditions.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have before me an article printed in the Asbury Park (N. J.) Evening Press—the Evening News-of Saturday, March 11, 1939. The article is by a Mr. McCampbell. It is headed:

Claims Wallace blocks recovery. McCampbell says the success of the President's drive for more business awaits the fixing of prices on farm crops.

I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD at this point in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

[From the Asbury Park (N. J.) Evening Press of March 11, 1939] CLAIMS WALLACE BLOCKS RECOVERY-M'CAMPBELL SAYS THE SUCCESS OF THE PRESIDENT'S DRIVE FOR MORE BUSINESS AWAITS THE FIXING OF PRICES ON FARM CROPS

(By Theron McCampbell)

(By Theron McCampbell)

The business boom so desired by the country and so needed by the New Deal is being sabotaged, innocently, by one man. Uncle Henry Wallace is that one man. The new recovery plans of the President and Secretaries Morgenthau and Hopkins will fail unless Secretary Wallace returns to his original plan for making the Nation prosperous by first restoring prosperity to the agricultural industry through price fixing of farm crops as now outlined in Senate bill 570. Henry Wallace made the big mistake of his life when he allowed his staff of economic professors to persuade him to adopt their weird and impossible scheme of crop control. Unless Henry Wallace has the courage to command a march back to his price fixing of farm crops, the New Deal and the Nation's economy will face an ignominious disaster.

Every clodhopper knows that the crop-control scheme devised by the professors has not, will not, and cannot solve the farm problem. Nearly every Member of the Congress recognizes this fact and admits that the farm situation is financially serious and politically dangerous. A majority in the Congress stand ready to pass Senate bill 570, with some amendments, as soon as Secretary Wallace or the President requests them to do so. Further, many Democratic Congressmen confess, in whispers, that unless the cost-of-production bill is passed at this session, to take effect with 1940 crops, the Republicans are likely to move into the White House in 1941.

Price fixing by governments and monopolies may not be good economic science. But look at the record. Not a single one of the many old acts of price fixing can be repealed. It was price fixing in the past that caused the price distortions between industry and agriculture which brought on the great depression. It was price fixing by tariffs that started America's economic troubles.

A thousand economists asked President Hoover not to fix higher prices by signing the Smoot Tariff Act. Economists call the wage-hour law, also the rigid wage scales, under limited hours and closed-shop rules, a form of price fixing. Price fixing of light, power, freight, and utility rates, on the basis of costs plus profits, is upheld by courts. Price fixing on industrial goods is legalized. Price fixing by canners and processors, as to payments for farm crops, is common practice. Price fixing on farm machinery, oil, and supplies used by farmers is universal. We must either repeal the existing price-practice. Price fixing on farm machinery, oil, and supplies used by farmers is universal. We must either repeal the existing price-fixing acts or meet old price fixing in industry by new price fixing in agriculture. Now, under the old system, the market prices of farm crops are set by selfish buyers and the growers must accept, regardless of the costs of production.

The farmers have long been exploited by feeding the Nation with crops sold at less than costs of production. In effect they have been slaves to an unjust price and competitive system. They have been deprived of buying power to absorb the products of industry. Millions of farmers have been forced to reduce their living standards to a bare subsistence level. The only way left to protect the growers of food and fiber crops from continued exploitation is by fixing the prices of farm crops so as to insure them their costs, is by fixing the prices of farm crops so as to insure them their costs, is by fixing the prices of farm crops so as to insure them their costs, plus modest profits.

Prosperity for the Nation must start with prosperity for the producers of foods and other raw materials. Every dollar paid for the raw materials classed as immediate necessities results quickly in about $7 of national income. President Roosevelt will have his $100,000,000,000 of national income yearly as soon as the gross yearly income of America's agricultural industry rises to $15,000,000,000, and the only way to bring that about is to pass Senate bill 570. The consumers of foods would soon see that the increased employment and business activity, due to increased farm prosperity, offset any necessary increases in retail prices.

POLITICAL CONDITIONS IN EUROPE

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senate is ready to adjourn, and I shall occupy but a moment in referring to a great world tragedy which is taking place in Europe. It seems inconceivable that in this day of civilization, with the grim lessons of past ages which are recorded by history, there should be a recrudescence of the cruelties which characterized barbarous nations and filled the world with woes and deluged nations with blood.

We behold in Europe today conditions which are shocking to democratic and civilized peoples. We behold a patriotic and civilized people being overwhelmed by military force, and subjected to a ruthless and brutal alien rule. A great republic, born after the war, and in part due to this Republic, has been destroyed by the Nazi government. millions of people living in peace, in a fertile land, with no enmity toward other peoples or nations, are the victims of a military and barbarous regime, which seized their government, arrested thousands of peaceable citizens, and subjected them to brutal treatment, and conveyed many to concentration camps, where they will be the victims of cruel treatment which undoubtedly will result in many fatalities. The concentration camps of Germany and Austria, into which thousands of law-abiding, peaceable citizens were incarcerated, where many of them died from the inhuman treatment to which they were subjected, will undoubtedly receive many of the citizens of Czechoslovakia who have been seized by the cruel and barbarous Nazi regime.

Not only has the Republic of Czechoslovakia, which but a day or two ago was an independent and important democratic state, been destroyed by the armies of Hitler but the Government and the territory constituting the state have been occupied by military forces and brought under despotic military rule. Thousands of law-abiding citizens of this Republic, knowing of the cruelties inflicted by Nazi rule, have attempted to flee from their homes and country; but they have been intercepted, many imprisoned, and all made cognizant of the tyrannous government to which they are compelled to submit.

Mr. President, I am not exaggerating when I say that Czechoslovakia, a great democratic state where liberty and justice prevailed, has been betrayed by nations which aided in its establishment and which, because of benefits to be derived from the establishment of a democratic republic in central Europe, had promised their support in the event that dictatorships should attempt its destruction.

At Munich recently Czechoslovakia's fate was sealed, and steps taken for its crucifixion. It had no voice in the conference which passed the sentence of death. It was denied opportunity to assert its rights. Hitler dominated the conference, and laid plans which have culminated in the destruction of a democratic republic which was holding high the standard of liberty and justice.

It is Czechoslovakia which is now murdered. Tomorrow it may be Memel, Poland, Yugoslavia, Hungary. The strategy of Hitler seems to ignore or defy inert and listless French and British statesmen. He administered potions which intoxicated or rendered them inert, if not stupid. Hitler's strategy works ceaselessly, by day and by night, and the foundations of governments are being undermined, and plots and plans laid for the dismemberment of states, the conquest of peoples, the destruction of nations.

A "Frankenstein" has been created. No one can tell when the devouring process will end.

I have stated upon a number of occasions that, in my opinion, there has been a conspiracy between Hitler, Mussolini, and Japan, under the terms of which a large part of the whole world is to be divided into three parts. The Rome-Berlin-Tokyo axis contemplates the destruction of many governments and the subjection of hundreds of millions of people to the alien rule of Hitler, Mussolini, and Japan. Pursuant to this conspiracy, the Nazi and Fascist governments have pursued a course which has compelled Great Britain and France to retain substantially all of their fleets in European waters, thus affording Japan full opportunity to pursue her policy of aggression and conquest in Asia, to seize Hainan, and to plan the expulsion of French authority from southeastern China. The occidental nations are to be expelled from China and Pacific waters and China, politically and economically, is to be subjected to Japanese rule.

Under this tripartite arrangement, Hitler was to have a free hand in the conquest of Austria and to take such course as he deemed proper to destroy the Republic of Czechoslovakia, to seize Memel and other eastern and southeastern European territories as and when his plans were perfected. Undoubtedly the appetite of the Nazi regime is not satiated. notwithstanding that it was stated not many months ago that, with the addition of the territory occupied by the Sudetens, Germany had no further territorial designs. But, with the seizure of the portion of Czechoslovakia occupied by Germans, there was no "appeasement" of the Nazi regime. I use this word with apologies to the Senate, because it has many connotations, most of which are devoid of moral concepts and some of which may hide evil and malignant designs.

The Fascist government, if I properly interpret the tripartite understanding, is to have unquestioned rule over Ethiopia-its title, obtained by military force, is not to be questioned; and it is to have a free hand, supported, if need be, by the other parties to the agreement, in the Mediterranean and in north Africa.

Mr. President, the Hitler regime has been one of aggression and of contempt for democratic nations. It has flouted promises and agreements entered into with all the solemnity of treaties. The Nazi rule suppresses democracy. It is rule by force. It strikes at the moral and spiritual forces which should be regnant in the world. It seeks the annihilation of religion, and under the Nazi philosophy the state is supreme. The people are unimportant other than as instrumentalities to be moved by autocrats to create a superstate within which individuals are mere pawns.

So far as I am concerned, I should be glad to see our Government refuse to have commercial or diplomatic relations with a government which betrays democracies, attacks and destroys free republics, and seeks by force and brutal practices to rule millions of helpless victims.

The Nazi government has confiscated the property not only of Aryans but of Jews. It has robbed and plundered hundreds of thousands of non-Aryans in Germany, and but yesterday seized gold of the value of $80,000,000 accumulated by the Czechoslovakia Republic, together with $50,000,000 of exchange held in the treasury of the Republic.

I repeat, Hitler robbed hundreds of thousands of German citizens, and now, in his ruthless and piratical course, he is robbing Czechoslovakia and her people not only of their Government but of their material wealth. He is robbing the Jews of Czechoslovakia, and will visit upon them all the horrors and persecutions to which he has subjected non-Aryans in Austria and in Germany.

Mr. President, the policies of the Nazi regime are reminiscent of barbarous ages and deserve the condemnation, and indeed the execration, of mankind.

GREAT BRITAIN'S OBLIGATIONS UNDER THE BALFOUR DECLARATION

Mr. President, a few days ago a number of Senators issued a statement dealing with the problem of Palestine. I need not remind the Senate of the fact that our Government was a party to the Balfour declaration, and that we entered into a treaty regarding it in 1924. So we are concerned in the attitude of Great Britain toward Palestine and the Jews who have gone there to build their homeland. Unfortunately Great Britain is forgetting her trust, as I fear she has forgotten her obligations to Czechoslovakia.

The statement which the Senators signed, Mr. President, has been given currency in the newspapers, and I ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none, and the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

Apparently reliable reports from London that the Government of Great Britain is contemplating the liquidation of the mandate for Palestine based on the Balfour declaration and the substitution by constitution of a new state dominated by a narrow majority is most disturbing to Americans who approved and applauded the cooperation of the United States of America in the piedge made to the Jewish people through the Balfour declaration.

President Wilson was consulted and his advice sought throughout the negotiations which preceded the adoption and publication

President Wilson was consulted and his advice sought throughout the negotiations which preceded the adoption and publication of the Balfour declaration. There was considerable correspondence between the President of the United States and the British War Cabinet with respect to the language to be used in the declaration, and President Wilson urged upon Great Britain the need of making Jewish rights in Palestine as broad as possible in order to facilitate the program for Jewish reconstruction. On October 17, 1917, he cabled to the British Government his approval of the Balfour declaration. On September 17, 1922, the instrument was approved by a joint resolution of the two Houses of the American Congress, and on December 3, 1924, our Government signed a treaty or convention with Great Britain defining American rights with reference to the British mandate for Palestine. Palestine.

Palestine.

Article 7 of this treaty reads as follows:

"Nothing contained in the present convention shall be affected by any modification which may be made in the terms of the mandate, as recited above, unless such modification shall have been assented to by the United States."

It is well to make clear and to emphasize at this time that the American Government is not unrelated to the modern history of Palestine. Our concern that the Balfour declaration and the mandate over Palestine be preserved unchanged springs not alone from our desire to protect the rights and interests of the Jewish people in Palestine, but also the rights and interests of the American people as defined in our treaty and understanding with Great Britain.

On many other occasions in the past the American people,

Great Britain.

On many other occasions in the past the American people, through public expression and through their Government, have revealed their sympathy for the reestablishment of the ancient Jewish homeland in Palestine, as well as their great concern for oppressed Jewish minorities, often made the innocent victims of blind hate and persecution. Humanitarian and Christian principles and impulses have often moved us to exert our effort in the defense of the homeless and the oppressed. Certainly that with regard to the Jewish people in Palestine this was both wise and reasonable is proved by the manner in which Palestine has come to be a haven of refuge for thousands of homeless Jewish families driven from countries that had been their home for many generations.

Palestine, too, presents to the world an example of a new and enlightened social order in the Near East. Our faith in the ability of the Jewish people to reconstruct there a life of dignity and permanence for themselves and for the many thousands more who are but awaiting the opportunity and permission to enter is being are but awaiting the opportunity and permission to enter is being fully vindicated.

For the world to turn its back upon all this, and to reverse the whole process, seems to us a tragic waste as well as a tragic abandonment of a brave people in its hour of gravest need. The circumstances prompt the undersigned to give expression to their deep conviction that the program thus formally announced for the rehabilitation of the Jewish people by the common consent of the leading nations of the world should be maintained. It is our belief that the Balfour declaration embodies a moral obligation, not only to the Jewish people but to the United States and to all governments which approved that instrument. We believe that the civilized forces of the world should give every assurance of support to Great Britain in a policy directed toward the preservation of the Balfour declaration and the redemption of the common pledge of establishing in Palestine a home of refuge and hope for the sorely oppressed Jewish people. We, therefore, venture to express our hope that the spirit and the letter of the Balfour declaration be preserved in all its integrity.

NATIONAL ACCIDENT-PREVENTION CAMPAIGN

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, during the last Congress, almost 1 year ago, I took occasion to call the attention of the Senate to our national accident problem. I particularly emphasized the appalling annual losses of life and injuries resulting from accidents on the streets and highways. I showed that as a matter of fact and as a matter of record preventable accidents have in a few years caused more deaths and injuries than war ever has brought to the American

Mr. President, I quoted some astounding figures of the human losses that this peaceful country has suffered through accidents. In more than 150 years the United States has engaged in six major wars. In all those wars the total loss of life of men killed in action and men who died of wounds was less than a quarter of a million—only 244,977 lives. Yet in the past 15 years, which measure only about one-tenth of our country's history, motor-vehicle accidents alone on the public thoroughfares have taken the lives of 416,000 men, women, and little children in the United States.

The red tide of slaughter had been steadily rising for 2 decades, ever since the motor vehicle had been produced in such quantities and at such moderate prices as to be generally used for convenience and for pleasure by great numbers of our people. I say "used for convenience and for pleasure," Mr. President; but it had become even a greater menace than war, a veritable Frankenstein monster that had turned on a peaceful people and destroyed hundreds of

No doubt the people will be interested to know what is being done by those in authority and in influence in our country to stop such tremendous and wholly preventable wastes. year ago I was able to report to you in considerable detail how intensive methods of organization had been devised in States, cities, and communities, and how a truly national movement was being carried on against accidents of all kinds. These organization procedures had been adopted and put in practice by a vast number of organizations, including many of the Federal Government departments, State governments, municipalities, industrial companies, the railroads. the automobile manufacturers, and miscellaneous other associations, societies, and clubs animated with a spirit of public responsibility and service. The national movement was led by the National Safety Council, a nonprofit, nonpolitical organization, which, through 25 years, has sought to coordinate and improve the effectiveness of accident-prevention measures along the fundamental lines of engineering, education, and enforcement.

Education: As a persistent country-wide campaign through schools, the press, the radio, and every other source of publicity to teach both the motorcar driver and the pedestrian everywhere the tragedy and the economic cost of accidents, and impress upon them a sense of their personal responsibility for accident losses.

Enforcement: Which might secure the cooperation of all law-enforcement agencies throughout the community, State, and Nation; promote a strict interpretation of the traffic laws, supervise by trained traffic officers the use of the highways, carry out through the courts the provisions of the drivers' license laws to eliminate from the roadways the unfit and the willfully reckless, and insist upon the periodic inspection of the mechanical condition of every motor vehicle under State safety requirements.

Mr. President, today I am most happy to report to you that these forceful measures in the interest of human welfare are bringing results. The year 1938 stands as a remarkable demonstration of the effectiveness of cooperative action against accidents. The cumulative effect of all that has been done throughout the Nation can be measured in actual lives saved. For the first time in a long period of struggle to stop motor-vehicle accident fatalities our country has gone through an entire year, month by month reducing the losses in lives which were suffered in comparable periods during the previous year.

Figures compiled by the National Safety Council for the year 1938 show that the total number of traffic deaths in the United States was only 32,000, as compared with 39,643 in 1937—a decline of 19 percent for the year. The lives saved, therefore, through organized safety on our streets and highways in the year reached a total of 7,640.

Mr. President, there are some remarkable facts about this achievement that may well be brought to the attention of the Senate. It was not brought about, either wholly or in part, by any decline in motor-vehicle registrations or in use of the country's highways. People may not be buying as many new cars, but the old ones are still in service, and there are still more than 29,000,000 of them on our streets and highways. They travel about 250,000,000,000 gasoline-propelled miles per year.

The control of the millions of motor vehicles through their drivers and the control of many millions more of pedestrians in both urban and rural communities has been vastly improved. Through the three fundamental measures which I have already outlined, the safety campaign has been spread abroad until it has enveloped almost every community and its influence has been felt in some degree by almost every individual in the Nation.

This is proved by the fact that reductions in lives sacrificed in traffic accidents have been made in practically every State and throughout each State in the great majority of the communities. The ratio of reductions varies, of course, with the intensity and completeness of the safety organization. The National Safety Council has a list of 40 States in which consistent reductions have been made and which show decreases in number of fatalities from 37 percent in the highest ranking State down to 4 percent in the lowest ranking State. The actual numbers of lives saved range from as high as 668 in one State to as few as 6 in another State, in comparison with losses in the previous year, 1937. With respect to cities, it is notable that 7 out of every 10 cities of 10,000 population or more reporting to the National Safety Council have participated in the gains in lives saved during Another accurate measure of country-wide participation in accident-prevention efforts is shown in a division of the country by regional changes in accident fatality rates. Eastern States made a reduction of 25 percent; Atlantic States, 15 percent; North Central States, 23 percent; South Central States, 20 percent; Mountain States, 16 percent; and Pacific States, 11 percent.

More specifically, Mr. President, it is possible to point to definite factors in safety organization which are responsible in a major degree for the lives saved in traffic. I select only 10 of the more outstanding factors:

First. Safer highways than ever before.

Second. Safer motor vehicles than ever before.

Third. More and better drivers' license laws than ever before and better administration of these laws. Fourth. More and better traffic engineers than ever before. Fifth, More and better trained traffic police than ever before.

Sixth. More and better school safety instruction than ever before.

Seventh. More and better information about accidents than ever before, especially about how and why accidents take place.

Eighth. More and better organized safety campaigning than ever before, both in the Nation, the States, and the cities.

Ninth. More and better publicity than ever before, through the newspapers, magazines, radio, and in many other ways.

Tenth. A better understanding than ever before of the tragedy and the economic cost of accidents and how to avoid them, on the part of more men, more women, and more children.

Mr. President, we are gratified that our organized efforts have been successful to this degree in saving lives; but Heaven forbid that we should assume any complacent feeling that we have arrived at our goal; that the battle against accidents is won. Everyone knows that in safety work it is only too easy to make a spurt, a temporary showing of improvement, and then slip back to a condition as bad or worse than before.

Let me recall that I said to the Senate a year ago that the 1937 traffic accident fatality losses of 39,500 were the highest ever recorded. If the lives saved during 1938 were 7,640, as we learn from authoritative reports, then last year our country still suffered a loss of 31,860 persons killed in wholly preventable street and highway accidents.

Mr. President, I submit that 30,000 or 20,000 or even 1,000 human lives wasted that might have been saved will be far too many in any future year of our country's history.

The safety leaders of our country have fought this losing battle against traffic accidents for over two decades. I call it a "losing battle" only because year by year the total losses have mounted higher. This, however, was only because year by year there were more automobiles on the roadways, more fine roads built on which to use them, and more people and more congestion in our cities and rural communities to increase the hazards.

Actually year by year these safety leaders were learning better methods of accident control and were perfecting the safety organizations that today are seen to be approaching a basis where accidents may be stopped altogether. We know that each year there would have been far greater numbers of fatal accidents and disabling injuries on our streets and highways if safety organization never had been attempted.

Mr. President, I know that, as legislators and also as warm-hearted citizens of our country, my fellow Senators are sincerely interested in the further reduction of traffic losses, especially those losses caused by the absence of suitable safeguards on the streets and highways. More than ever before, we now have the opportunity to endow our several States with a more orderly and efficient movement of vehicular traffic through the adoption of sound and uniform and life-saving traffic legislation.

Let me recall that it was under the leadership of the Federal Government, and with the active participation of Members of this national body, that the First National Conference on Street and Highway Safety was held in Washington a few years ago. That conference was followed by others, in all of which the deliberations had the benefit of the best brains and the most advanced thinking of safety leaders throughout all the States. Out of those conferences emerged as a most outstanding achievement the uniform vehicle code, with its provisions for a standard drivers' license law, uniform rules of the road, model traffic ordinance, and uniform signs, signals, and road markings.

Mr. President, none will dispute the right of the motorist, and also of the pedestrian, to expect that wherever he travels in our great country the traffic laws and regulations, the rules of the road, the signs, signals, and road markings will be of uniform character and similar to those he understands and instinctively obeys in his own community. It is unreasonable to expect each motorist to be familiar with the kaleidoscopic pattern, or rather lack of pattern, of the laws and regulations now existing in some of the 48 States, some of which have no logical basis for existence.

Years of experience in those States with progressive legislation in complete harmony with the principles of the uniform vehicle code have established the value of these measures in improved facilities for traffic movement and in a continued decreasing fatality rate.

This code, therefore, is definitely commended as a guide and a model, to the end that public officials who are charged with the responsibility for public safety shall be provided with sound and adequate laws upon which to predicate their accident-prevention programs. It is most desirable that every influence be used to the end that State legislatures take prompt steps to enact adequate laws in substantial conformity with this uniform vehicle code.

Mr. President, this year of 1939 can mark a tremendous national advance in the fashioning of adequate "safety tools" for the prevention of traffic accidents. Just as the industrial worker must have proper and efficient tools for the production of perfect workmanship, so must the police, the courts, and other administrative and enforcement officers of our States and municipalities have proper and wholly efficient laws to aid them in saving traffic lives.

I am informed that in 44 of our States the legislatures will meet this year to make more perfect the structure of our several State governments. I submit to the earnest consideration of the Senate that no possible question of greater importance can come before any of these legislatures than the more adequate guarding of the people's lives.

It is true that a considerable number of the States have already enacted a drivers' license law, but I hesitate to differentiate and point out how many of these laws today fall far short of the standard set up in the uniform vehicle code. It will be sufficient for me to repeat that during the past year one group of States shows reductions in traffic fatalities ranging from 25 percent to as high as 37 percent, while another group of States has been able to reduce their traffic losses only by 4 percent or 6 percent or 10 percent.

For the whole of our country the reductions average 21 percent, and we have saved 7,640 lives. But consider what might have been done if the same kind of intensive safety organization, the same kind of adequate traffic legislation, had been effective in all the States so that the reductions over the whole country might have averaged 37 percent. I must emphasize also that even in those States which today have the best safety laws and the best safety organization, and where the best gains in lives saved are made, they consider that these gains are only the beginning of greater efforts during 1939.

Mr. President, I am informed that at least 24 of the States with legislative sessions this year need substantial improvements in driver licensing laws, in accident-reporting systems, or in both. Practically all the States need some changes in their regulations concerning equipment and rules of the road. Some of the States need entirely new traffic laws. Let us remember that it is a national rattern of traffic convenience and safety that we are trying to build and not be satisfied until this practical objective is attained.

The National Safety Council is offering country-wide assistance to all officials and organizations working for improved laws, for more effective safety organization, and for wider education of all the people in the causes of accidents and methods for their prevention.

There is in effect also a comprehensive seven-point program of highway safety for States, which has been recommended by 12 of the leading organizations working for safety throughout the country. These 12 organizations are: American Automobile Association, American Legion, Automotive Safety Foundation, General Federation of Women's Clubs, Harvard Bureau for Street Traffic Research, Highway Education Board, International Association of Chiefs of Police, National Automobile Dealers Association, National Congress of Parents and Teachers, National Grange, National Safety Council, and Northwestern University Traffic Safety Institute.

Briefly, this seven-point program embraces:

(1) Legislation: (a) Five acts of the uniform motor-vehicle code, particularly act II, driver's license, and act V, rules of the road; (b) model traffic ordinances; and (c) uniform signs, signals, and markings.

(2) Motor-vehicle administration: (a) Adequate uniform accident reporting system; (b) examination of all new drivers and drivers with bad records by trained examiners. Reexamination of drivers with bad records; (c) suspension and revocation of drivers' licenses by central department.

(3) Enforcement: (a) Adequately manned and equipped force for patrolling the highways; (b) modern enforcement in cities and counties; (c) cooperation of all prosecutors, judges, and enforcement departments.

(4) Engineering: (a) State traffic engineers to plan corrective treatment, advise on safety of new construction, facilitate traffic flow, advise cities and counties; (b) traffic engineer in cities of over 50,000.

(5) Education: (School) (a) Traffic safety instruction in grade and high schools, including driver training; (public) (b) driver and pedestrian education through newspapers, posters, contests, meetings, and so forth.

(6) Training personnel: (a) Traffic officers; (b) traffic engineers; (c) safety teachers; (d) safety organization personnel; all for work in States, counties, and cities.

(7) Research: (a) Studies of congestion and accident causes; (b) studies of effectiveness of safety measures; (c) cooperate in researches of universities, and in Federal, State, and local departments.

Mr. President, in closing I should like to point out a few specific lines of influence where it now seems to the safety leaders of our country the Members of the Senate could wield a most potent and much-needed force:

First. Support all good traffic legislation in the States from which they come.

Second. Continue to support appropriations to the Bureau of Public Roads which are needed for the improvement of our highways.

Third. Use their influence for the allocation of funds in their respective States to be used for organized safety work.

Fourth. Work for a better type of personnel in safety organizations in their respective States—in highway patrols, highway departments, motor-vehicle departments, and so forth.

Fifth. Use their influence for the continuation and expansion of active safety teaching in the schools.

Mr. President, I have presented in this brief summary of the national accident prevention campaign, a picture of lifesaving effort that, I am confident, finds a warm reception in all our hearts. I have particularly tried to give a true impression of the Nation-wide character of the program, as well as the appalling facts that show that no single home in city or country in all our land is safe from the daily menace of death under the wheels of a motor vehicle.

Mr. President, it is not necessary for men and women and little children to die in accidents. All the history of the struggle for safety through two and one-half decades shows that by determined scientific efforts we can stop these human and economic losses. We have in process today an organized plan calculated to double and triple the gains in lives saved during this present year. We have already enlisted the support and the active assistance of a vast number of organizations and individuals, powerful units that thickly dot a hopeful countryside.

The chief thing that the national safety movement needs today is more National and more State leadership. I do not detract one iota from the efficient and successful leadership of the individuals and organizations that already are in this fight for safety; they have done and are doing a splendid job; but, Mr. President, this is a struggle for an all-safe and an all-peaceful country. The tools have been fashioned in scientific plans and methods. But we need many more hands to use them. We need the most powerful influences in both State and Nation to continue and spread the successful organization of all the people. For we know that we shall never have a wholly safe country until every man, woman, and little child is made an integral part of the Nation-wide safety efforts

I conceive, Mr. President, that there can be no more worthy and satisfying objective in the life of any one of us than to take the active part in this safety movement that our position and our responsibility in the National Government entail. Where we can lead, it surely is our part to lead. Where we can use our influence, certainly we shall make that influence felt. Where we can show by example and by daily act how we consider safety on the streets and highways supremely important to all our citizens and their families, we shall not fail.

Let us unite in providing leadership, and let us do all we can to unite the people everywhere in one solid phalanx of marching citizenry against the common enemy of accidental

CHAOTIC WORLD CONDITIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, this is a day of contradictions. Even accepted slogans of the thoughtless fall much as the mighty and the secure among nations do. Events stagger all. A few halt to become thoughtful.

A nation of refinement, learning, and art turns upon itself and drives from itself many of its best. With them reason, historical fact, and the ability to discover new truth seem also to have gone. Self-destruction wins shouting approval. A great culture ready to bloom with new life stands retarded.

Spokesmen for a world-wide empire and an ancient despot plead with a fasting saint and offer in return for a broken fast a changed policy of state. Weakness is triumphant.

A well-armed nation created by victors' decree, sustained by covenanted alliances and collect 7e agreement, is swallowed by a neighbor burdened by the weight of unrestrainable strength and the fever of success. Might prevails.

A student nation, maddened by the doctrines of a newer and supposedly wiser world, deliberately turns upon its ancient teacher and attempts to wipe out the culture, the art, and the wisdom of the longest-lived nation on the earth. Both teacher and student are destroying the best in each.

A proud people with enemies and friends both from within and without stand crushed by civil war. Our people take sides, but our Government stands aloof. A divided people dulls the voice and makes weak the moral and economic force of a nation. Where the people are divided even governments cannot act. This is a democracy's lesson to the rulers of the single-will states.

Attempts to obtain security through collective action, through alliance, through isolation, through a balance of power, through national armed might, through economic selfsufficiency, through imperial and ancient strength have all failed. They have failed because each in attaining national objectives did not recognize the interdependence and social nature of nations.

Like a voice crying in the wilderness, the annual report of President Nicholas Murray Butler to the trustees of the Carnegie Endownment for International Peace now comes to our desks.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks an extract from Dr. Butler's report.

There being no objection, the extract referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CARNEGIE ENDOWMENT FOR INTERNATIONAL PEACE [Extract from annual report for 1938 of the division of intercourse and education, by Nicholas Murray Butler, director]

FEBRUARY 15, 1939.

To the Trustees:

At no time in the history of mankind has peace been so universally extolled as at the present moment. All peoples are for peace. Every government, whether democratic, despotic, or otherwise, proclaims its devotion to peace and its insistence upon peace. Nevertheless, every people fears war and every government, whether Nevertheless, every people fears war and every government, whether democratic, despotic, or otherwise, is preparing for war at a rate and at a cost which are appalling. What is the explanation? It can only be found in the complete break-down of public morality in all that affects the policies and plans of governments and in the lack both of intelligence and of courage on the part of the democratic peoples themselves to insist that their governments act in constructive fashion to remove the causes of war. There is no need of elaborate argument on these points. The facts are spread before

As a result of these truly tragic conditions, the nations, whether

As a result of these truly tragic conditions, the nations, whether advanced or backward, are in a state of economic war which is impoverishing their peoples and wasting in colossal fashion the earnings and savings of the people themselves made through generations that are past. To all this there can be but one end if such conditions are allowed to continue indefinitely.

The sneering cynic and the pessimist take no interest in such a state of affairs; indeed, they rather applaud it as furnishing new material for their not very clever bitterness. The very considerable army which enrolls under the standards of envy, hatred, and malice is delighted with it all, since it offers opportunity for the constant expression of their exuberant and irrational feelings.

It is too early to anticipate the judgment of history upon all this, but there can be no doubt that the Thucydides, the Tacitus, the Gibbon, and the Mommsen of generations yet to come will treat the Gibbon, and the Mommsen of generations yet to come will treat it with penetrating analysis and illuminating interpretation. Mean-while, what can be done about it?

It has been the carefully studied program of the Carnegle Endow-ment for International Peace to deal patiently, systematically, and persuasively with the education of public opinion in all parts of the persuasively with the education of public opinion in all parts of the world. That undertaking has not been in terms of emotion or of agitation, but, rather, realistically, in terms of persuasion and sound reasoning. The aim has been to make the different peoples more familiar with each other's history, literature, and institutions, with each other's modes of thought, with each other's legitimate ambitions and hopes, for the purpose of laying the basis of effective and permanent international cooperation, to the end that international prosperity and international peace may be established and safe-guarded. guarded.

This civilized world is not without an indication of how these ends may be attained. The outstanding contributions to the history of this subject and the illuminating prophecies of a progressive, a liberal, and a constructive world future are the Rescript of the Czar of all the Russias made public by the Foreign Office at St. Petersburg on August 24, 1898, the Letter of Instructions of Secretary Root to the American Delegates to the Hague Conference of 1907 and the Joint Resolution adopted by unanimous vista of Secretary Root to the American Delegates to the Hague Conference of 1907, and the Joint Resolution adopted by unanimous vote of both Houses of Congress of the United States on June 24, 1910. From the first proceeded the First Hague Conference of 1899; from the second, the establishment of the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague; and from the third came the effort on the part of the President of the United States to secure the cooperation of European nations in making that Joint Resolution effective to establish international security. This attempt failed because such cooperation was either denied or indefinitely postponed. Then came the Great War to levy its toll upon humanity in terms not only of human life and human savings but in terms n terms not only of human life and human savings but in terms of public morals.

The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace has not The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace has not weakened and will not weaken in its steady and uninterrupted pursuit of the ideal which Mr. Carnegie set before it. Plainly, much more time will be needed to achieve that ideal than Mr. Carnegie thought to be likely. Nevertheless, that ideal must be pursued with persistence, with intelligence, and with devotion. There is but one way to establish peace, and that is to bring about a situation in which public opinion will require governments not only to talk for peace but to act for peace. Nothing else is of avail. The practical steps to this end are to insist once more upon the action invited by the Czar's Rescript of 1898, to have the Government of the United States resume the leadership which it offered in 1907 and 1910, and to convince public opinion that the widely supported program of the conference held at Chatham House in March 1935 names the specific policies which it is essential for governments to follow if prosperity and peace are to be brought back to mankind. mankind.

It is many centuries since Theocritus wrote these notable words:
"As for weapons of war, may spiders weave over them their slender webs, and of the war-cry the very name be forgot."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of several postmasters.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported favorably the nominations of sundry officers for appointment, by transfer or promotion, in the Regular Army.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHIPSTEAD in the chair). The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

AMBASSADORS EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William Dawson, of Minnesota, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to Panama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of Laurence A. Steinhardt, of New York, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations promoting Foreign Service officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations involving the promotion of Foreign Service officers be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

POSTMASTERS

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

IN THE NAVY

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations promoting officers in the Navy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the nominations in the Navy be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations in the Navy are confirmed en bloc.

That completes the calendar.

AUTHORIZATION FOR REPORTING AND SIGNING OF BILLS. ETC., DURING RECESS

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as in legislative session, I ask unanimous consent that during the recess of the Senate following today's session all Senate committees may report bills, resolutions, and nominations; that the Vice President may sign bills that are ready for his signature; and that the Secretary of the Senate may receive messages from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next. The motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes

p. m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, March 20, 1939, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 17 (legislative day of March 16), 1939

AMBASSADORS EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY

William Dawson to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to Panama.

Laurence A. Steinhardt to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

SENATE

Monday, March 20, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 16, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. ZgBarney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord most high, before whose infinite majesty and greatness we bow in deep humility as we acknowledge our littleness and our dependence: Cover us with the shadow of Thy wings, that we may learn to trust Thee even as our fathers trusted and were not afraid. May we never be confounded though the waters roar and are troubled, though the cup given to multitudes to drink be a cup of anguish, and our hearts ache with perplexity as we sorrow over them.

Out of Thy holy sanctuary compose and uplift our thought, and renew Thy peace in us, that, with childlike faith, we may cast the burden of our care upon Thy loving fatherhood, and find surcease from the pain and sorrow of this world beneath the shadow of the cross on which the Prince of Glory died, even Jesus Christ, Thy Son, our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. Barkley, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Friday, March 17, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Green] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Truman] are detained on important public business.

Mr. FRAZIER. I announce that my colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] is absent because of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

LIMITATION UPON PUBLIC-DEBT OBLIGATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Finance:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith a letter dated March 17, 1939, from the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the limitation placed upon the total amount of the public-debt obligations which may be issued and outstanding at any one time under authority of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended. You will note from this letter that the Secretary of the Treasury feels that there will be no necessity for increasing the present limitation of $45,000,000,000 on the total public debt which may be outstanding at any one time, but does feel very strongly that it will be necessary to increase the present limitation of $30,000,000,000,000 face amount of bonds which may be outstanding at any one time.

I recommend that the Congress take such action as may be necessary to give the Treasury the authority which will enable it to carry out its financing operations during the next fiscal year as may be for the best interest of the Government in line with market conditions at the time of such financing.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 20, 1939.

PAN AMERICAN UNION BUILDING

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to rescind the permission granted to the Pan American Union to erect an office building in the District of Columbia, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL STATISTICAL STUDIES BY THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Labor, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize the Department of Labor to continue to make special statistical studies upon payment of the cost thereof, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

CLAIMS OF CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Chief Clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the special findings of fact and conclusions of the court in the case of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations against the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

EXPORT TRADE AND BYPRODUCTS USES OF TOBACCO

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to Senate Resolution 291 (75th Cong.), a report pertaining to the export trade in and byproducts uses of tobacco, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed, with illustrations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following joint resolution of the Legislature of Nevada, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining:

Senate joint resolution memorializing Congress relative to the passing of appropriate legislation for the erection and construction of four custom milling plants in Nevada at Government expense under terms looking toward the payment to the Government of principal and interest of such investment over a period of years, after which title to the same would vest in the State

Whereas a survey has been made by the United States Bureau of Mines relating to mineral resources of the State of Nevada; and Whereas the findings of this survey suggest that the erection of at least four custom milling plants at points of assured ore deposits in Nevada, in addition to the opening up of new ore bodies by purchasing small lots of ore from prospectors for cash and to place the same on an organization plan is entirely feasible and practicable; and

Whereas the most advantageous points in Nevada for the erection of such milling plants have heretofore been located in consideration of transportation facilities, ore deposits, centers of population, and low-cost power by the United States Bureau of Mines; and Whereas it is conceived that the construction and operation of Whereas it is conceived that the construction and operation of the United States and Whereas it is conceived that the construction and operation of the United States as well as well as the United States as well as the United States as well as well as the United States as well as

Whereas it is conceived that the construction and operation of such plants under the supervision and administration of the United States Bureau of Mines for a length of time, at least equal to the time that the cash advances made by the Federal agency advancing the same are not fully repaid, is entirely feasible and would constitute a proper protection to the Federal Government or Federal agency which advances such sums; and

Whereas it is conceived that the Federal milling units or plants could remain encumbered to the Federal agency which would have advanced the cash for the building of the same, and at such time as the principal and interest of such investment might be fully repaid to the Government or Federal agency, as the case might be, after which title to such units would vest in the State of Nevada, thereby being of great material benefit to Nevada and its citizenry; and thereby being of great material benefit to Nevada and its citizenry; and

Whereas after the cost of such milling units shall have been fully repaid to the Federal Government or Federal agency advancing such sums, together with interest thereon, such plants could be made to operate on a maintenance cost, or nonprofit basis, thereby reducing the cost of milling ores within the State, which would operate as a great stimulant to the mining industry; and

Whereas it is conceived by the investigation and survey thus made through the United States Bureau of Mines that four of such milling plants with a daily capacity of 50 tons each, located in a feasible and strategic point within the State of Nevada would not cost more than $75,000 each in construction, and it is conceived that a revolving fund of $25,000 for each unit to be used in the purchase of ore in small quantities and to be placed upon land now owned by the Government, or at small or no cost, would make a total maximum investment of not to exceed $400,000, and the inception of such project which would be, consequently, over the years, amortized, being continually decreased; and

Whereas the buying of ores for cash from prospectors who produce in small quantities and tonnage only would finance prospectors on a basis more advantageous to them than they now enjoy and which would be decreased and new ore bodies would be located; and

Whereas the legislature is convinced by conferences formerly had with the Government agency in Reno and with the Director of the United States Bureau of Mines at Reno that the survey above mentioned has been carefully and capably executed, and that the proposed construction plan hereinbefore mentioned is entirely practicable and feasible, and that the investment of money through the Government would be entirely secured and would promote the prosperity and well-being of the entire citizenry of Nevada; and Whereas the stimulation which would thus be gained by the mining industry in Nevada would have a very beneficial effect upon the agricultural and other industries of Nevada, which would thereby increase the taxable property and taxable wealth of the State: Now, therefore, be it of the United States be memorialized to pass appropriate legislation, presenting the conditions under which such milling plants be constructed within the State of Nevada and the conditions under which the capital thus advanced is to be repaid to the Federal agency advancing the same; naming and prescribing the conditions under which title is to vest in the State of Nevada and under which Federal supervision and regulation of such plants under which Federal supervision and regulation of such plants shall cease, and other matters properly connected with the financing, erecting, and supervising of the same; and be it further Resolved, That our Senators in the United States Senate and our Representative in Congress be requested to use all proper efforts to bring about the passage of laws covering the matters above referred to; and be it further Resolved, That the secretary of state be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit properly certified copies of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives in Congress and to each of our Senators and our Representative in Congress. The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolutions of the Legislature of Utah, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Concurrent resolution relating to congressional action in liberalizing the terms and conditions of existing agricultural credit

Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah (the Governor concurring therein)—

Whereas the inadequate price of farm produce is now imposing undue economic burdens upon farm people; and Whereas such inadequate prices make it impossible in many cases for farmers to meet current principal and interest payments on their indebtedness; and

Whereas agricultural credit delinquencies are increasing to an alarming extent through no fault or neglect of the farm debtor;

Whereas the major agricultural creditor in this State is the Farm Credit Administration; and Whereas Congress is now in session and has power to alleviate the credit emergency which faces a large number of farm people who are borrowing from this Federal agency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah, That we urge the Congress of the United States to enact legislation liberalizing the terms and conditions of Federal agricultural credit in favor of the debtor both with respect to manner of principal payments and rate of interest; be it further

Resolved, That a certified copy of this memorial be sent by the secretary of state to the President of the Senate and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, and to each Senator and Representative in Congress from this State, and to the President of the United States.

Concurrent resolution relating to the approval of United States Senate bill 1179, by Mr. Muller, to amend section 56 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and provid-ing an interest rate of 3 percent per annum on loans to agricul-tural improvement districts

ernor concurring therein):

Whereas the various agricultural improvement districts are now paying interest at the rate of 4 percent per annum on their loans, the Federal Government has at the same time through the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones Act loaned to farmers some $35,000,000, for the purpose of land, such loans bearing interest at the rate of 3 percent per annum; and

Whereas the difference of 1 percent in the annual interest rate will greatly aid the distressed farmers and would lessen the discrimination between the two classes of loans, one being to enable the farmer to purchase more land and the other to prevent the farmer from losing the land he now owns; and

Whereas the farmers within these agricultural improvement

Whereas the farmers within these agricultural improvement districts pay the same interest rate as farmers outside of the districts on any loans they make through and from any governmental agency, in addition to the 4 percent they are now paying on loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The interest on first mortgages and 4 percent on loans from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation make a total of approximately 9 percent that farmers who have first mortgages on their lands are now paying, which is absolutely prohibitive under the present prevailing low prices for farm products; and

Whereas the farmers in irrigation, drainage, levee, and like districts must, in order to maintain the productivity of their land, keep the districts' canals, levees, and works in a proper physical condition; and

Whereas the producer's great problem is that of distribution and marketing and to secure the influence of a system which will bring the products of the soil in the freest and most economic way to the consumer and thereby create a steady and continuous demand rather than a seasonal one; and

Whereas it is our sincere belief that agriculture, horticulture, and viticulture need every legitimate method of the widest distribution and sale so that the great mass of the consuming public can purchase such products at a price within its reach: Now, therefore, be it

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States urging amendments to existing laws pertaining to agriculture affecting wheat pro-duction in Montana; requesting quotas in wheat production be changed from an acreage basis to a bushel basis; urging provi-sions of means for raising revenue for the purpose of insuring a parity price for wheat produced

Whereas a great majority of those engaged in the agricultural industry in the State of Montana produce wheat of a grade produced in only small areas of the wheat-producing sections of the United States: and

Whereas hard, high protein content wheat can usually only be produced under dry-farming conditions, with their attendant hazards of crop failures from drought and insect ravages; and Whereas the Montana wheat farmer cannot be limited by a quota on an acreage basis if he is to continue to produce wheat for society as he must increase his acreage in years favorable to production to offset his failure to produce in unfavorable seasons, and production control on a bushel basis would more nearly equalize and stabilize production; and

Whereas it is manifestly impossible for the Montana wheat farmer

Whereas it is manifestly impossible for the Montana wheat farmer to produce this necessity for society unless he is assured of a price for his product in parity with the prices paid by society to the producer of any other necessity or implement of life; and

Whereas the farmer as a productive unit of society exercises little or no control over his product in the way of the price which it shall bring in the market and it has been found necessary to provide forms of benefit payments to him to make it possible for him to, in some degree, meet the costs of production and make it possible for him to continue to produce for society; and

Whereas the wheat farmer of Montana realizes that only by providing for the raising of revenue through the trade in his commodity, rather than depending on the changing temper of legislative bodies, can the assurance of funds needed for the stabilizing of the price for the commodity he produces on a parity with the of the price for the commodity he produces on a parity with the market for other products be attained: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the Senate of the State of Montana concurring). That we petition and pray the Congress of the United States for the enactment of the following amendments to existing laws pertaining to expeculture: agriculture:

1. That production control be on a bushel instead of acreage

1. That production control be on a bushel instead of acreage basis.
2. That loan values and benefit payments on the wheat absorbed by domestic consumption be fixed at a figure which will compel a fair exchange for that wheat and bring about an honest and actual parity price.
3. That Congress, through taxation in the trade in wheat, provide revenue for assurance of a stable fund with which to meet such continuously a read arise in the parity price for wheat contingencies as may arise in insuring a parity price for wheat.

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, duly authenticated, be sent by the secretary of state to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to each of the Senators and Representatives of Montana in Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following memorial of the House of Representatives of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Memorial urging the Congress of the United States to cause a completion of the Lewis and Clark Highway o the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

We, your memorialists, the House of Representatives of the wenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, respectfully represent that:

Whereas there exists within the Pacific Northwest a condition of economic distress which has caused widespread unemployment creating much suffering and want of necessities of life among a great many of the people of said area; and

Whereas the Pacific Northwest is without proper military protection in that the said section is wholly cut off from the East by the Bitter Root Mountains with only one passage through said range from the Canadian border to Bannock Pass, a distance of some 800 miles; and

Whereas it has become the public policy as well as the urgent need of the United States to take affirmative steps to relieve the conditions aforesaid; and Whereas the Lewis and Clark Highway follows a low elevation water grade from Portland, Oreg., across the States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho, through the Lolo Pass, the lowest pass in the Bitter Root range and which is centrally located, to Missoula, Mont., and will provide an adequate military and commercial route which is so badly needed; and cial route which is so badly needed; and

Whereas the Lewis and Clark Highway has been completed with the exception of only 50 miles which lies wholly within the national forests of Idaho and appropriations for forest roads in national forests, which in Idaho cover 34,000,000 of its total 53,000,000 acres, are inadequate to provide for completion of said highway from that source; and

Whereas these national forests are of the largest, most beautiful, interesting, and valuable of the national forests, affording unsurpassed recreational opportunities for the people of the entire Nation and are not accessible either by rail or national highway;
and

whereas this highway would be of great benefit to the States of Idaho, Montana, Washington, and Oregon to facilitate marketing of their products; would provide adequate military protection to the Pacific Northwest; would provide adequate employment to reduce the critical effect of the present economic distress in this area; and would stimulate national trade and commerce; and Whereas the Lewis and Clark Highway has been designated as eligible for Federal aid: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Twenty-sixth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, does most respectfully urge on the Congress of the United States that the said Congress pass such legislation and make the necessary appropriations to provide for the complete construction of the unfinished portion of said highway above mentioned, and that the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture and/or the War Department and/or the Department of the Interior of the United States be authorized and directed to begin immediate construction thereon; be it further

Resolved. That the secretary of state of the State of Montana be authorized and is hereby directed to immediately forward certified copies of this memorial to the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of War, the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, to Senators and Representatives in Congress from the States of Idaho, Oregon, Washington, and Montana, and to the President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration:

Whereas Hon. Samuel Wilder King, Delegate to Congress from Hawali, has introduced in the Congress of the United States of America a bill extending the privilege of legal entry into the United States to all alien wives married to American citizens prior to the year 1924; and

Whereas said bill will do justice and bring equality to American

Whereas said bill will do justice and bring equality to American citizens and their alien wives: Now, therefore, be it Resolved by the House of Representatives of the Twentieth Legislature of the Territory of Hawait (the senate concurring), That the Congress of the United States of America be, and it is hereby, urged to adopt said bill which provides for admission of alien wives into the United States of America who were married to American citizens prior to 1924; be it further Resolved, That copies of this concurrent resolution be transmitted to the President of the Senate of the Congress of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, and to the Secretary of Labor of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint resolution of the Legislature of Wisconsin, memorializing the President and Congress to resume negotiations for a Great Lakes-St. Lawrence seaway treaty, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

(See joint resolution printed in full when presented today by Mr. WILEY.)

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation to protect the citizens of the State of Montana against the importation of natural gas from the Dominion of Canada, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate resolutions adopted by Local No. 153, International Woodworkers of America, of Kansas City, Mo., and Lodge No. 1728, Steel Workers' Organizing Committee, of Cincinnati, Ohio, protesting against amendment to the National Labor Relations Act, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by Dille Lodge, No. 1098, S. W. O. C., of Cleveland, Ohio, favoring continuance of the investigation by the subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor investigating violations of civil liberties, and so forth, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors of Contra Costa County, Calif., favoring the permanent assignment of one-half of the fleet for operations in Pacific waters, with headquarters at San Francisco Bay, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted at Harrisburg, Pa., by the National Committee on Wildlife Legislation, favoring creation of a permanent standing committee on the conservation of wildlife resources, which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

He also laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the Central Labor Union of Philadelphia, Pa., favoring the enactment of House bill 4223, providing for placing special-delivery messengers under the civil-service system, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. PITTMAN addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the question before the Senate. When the Senate took a recess on Friday last there were passed over by unanimous consent certain amendments pending to the so-called reorganization bill, which is the unfinished business. The Chair understands that several Senators desire to present petitions and memorials, bills, and so forth, and the Chair thinks he should recognize the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], and he can then yield to other Senators for the purpose of presenting routine business.

Mr. BYRNES. I am glad to yield to other Senators for that purpose.

AMENDMENT OF NEUTRALITY ACT

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I spoke to the Senator from South Carolina having the pending bill in charge and asked him if it would inconvenience him if I should make a unanimous-consent request at this time. He said it would

Mr. BYRNES. Certainly, I yield to the Senator from Nevada for the purpose indicated by him.

Mr. PITTMAN. I introduce a joint resolution providing for certain amendments to the so-called Neutrality Act. The proposed amendments have been discussed considerably without the exact facts of the amendment being known.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I make the point of order that we cannot hear on this side of the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sooner or later the Senator from Kansas will learn that in the early morning and evening Senators must have conferences, not having seen each other for at least 48 hours. [Laughter.] The Senate will be in order.

Mr. REED. We would like to hear just the same.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. that it be printed in full in the RECORD for the information of the Senate, and that a statement which I broadcasted last night in attempting to explain the reasons for the joint resolution be published in the RECORD following the joint reso-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be received and referred, as requested.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 97), to be known as the Peace Act of 1939, was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolved, etc.,-

PROCLAMATION OF ARMED CONFLICT BETWEEN FOREIGN STATES

SECTION 1. (a) That within 30 days after the outbreak of a declared or an undeclared armed conflict between foreign states President shall issue a proclamation naming the states involved; and he shall, from time to time, by proclamation, name other states as and when they may become involved in the armed conflict.

(b) Whenever the conditions which have caused the President to issue any proclamation under the authority of this section have ceased to exist, he shall revoke the same by proclamation.

Sec. 10. (a) Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall have cause to believe that any vessel, domestic or foreign, whether requiring clearance or not, is about to carry out of a port of the United States, fuel, men, arms, ammunition, implements of war, or other supplies to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, but the evidence is not deemed sufficient to justify forbidding the departure of the vessel as provided for by section 1, title V, chapter 30, of the act approved June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217, 221; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 18, sec. 31), and if, in the President's judgment, such action will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security or neutrality of the United States, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to require the owner, master, or person in command thereof, before departing from a port of the United States, to give a bond to the United States, with sufficient sureties, in such amount as he shall deem proper, conditioned that the vessel will not deliver the men, or any part of the cargo, to any warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state.

(b) If the President, or any person thereunto authorized by him, shall find that a vessel, domestic or foreign, in a port of the United States, has previously cleared from a port of the United States during such war and delivered its cargo or any part thereof to a warship, tender, or supply ship of a belligerent state, he may prohibit the departure of such vessel during the duration of the war.

SUBMARINES AND ARMED MERCHANT VESSELS

SEC. 11. Whenever, during any war in which the United States is neutral, the President shall find that special restrictions placed on the use of the ports and territorial waters of the United States by the submarines or armed merchant vessels of a foreign state, will serve to maintain peace between the United States and foreign states, or to protect the commercial interests of the United States and its citizens, or to promote the security of the United States, and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall thereafter be unlawful for any such submarine or armed merchant vessel to enter a port or the territorial waters of the United States or to depart therefrom, except under such conditions and subject to such limitations as the President may prescribe. Whenever, in his judgment, the conditions which have caused him to issue his proclamation have ceased to exist, he shall revoke his proclamation and the provisions of this section shall thereupon cease to apply.

NATIONAL MUNITIONS CONTROL BOARD

NATIONAL MUNITIONS CONTROL BOARD

SEC. 12. (a) There is hereby established a National Munitions Control Board (hereinafter referred to as the "Board"). The Board shall consist of the Secretary of State, who shall be chairman and executive officer of the Board; the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of Commerce. Except as otherwise provided in this act, or by other law, the administration of this act is vested in the Department of State. The Secretary of State shall promulgate such rules and regulations with regard to the enforcement of this section as he may deem necessary to carry out its provisions. The Board shall be convened by the chairman and shall hold at least one meeting a year.

(b) Every person who engages in the business of manufacturing, exporting, or importing any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act, whether as an exporter, importer, manufacturer, or dealer, shall register with the Secretary of State his name, or business name, principal place of business, and places of business in the United States, and a list of the arms, ammunition, and implements of war which he manufactures, imports,

or exports.

(c) Every person required to register under this section shall notify the Secretary of State of any change in the arms, ammunition, or implements of war which he exports, imports, or manufactures; and upon such notification the Secretary of State shall issue to such person an amended certificate of registration, free of charge, which shall remain valid until the date of expiration of the original certificate. Every person required to register under the provisions of this section shall pay a registration fee of $100. Upon receipt of the required registration fee, the Secretary of State shall issue a registration certificate valid for 5 years, which shall be renewable for further periods of 5 years upon the payment for each renewal of a fee of $100.

(d) It shall be unlawful for any person to export, or attempt to export, from the United States to any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act, or to import, or attempt to import, to the United States from any other state, any of the arms, ammunition, or implements of war referred to in this act, without first having obtained a license therefor.

(e) All persons required to register under this section shall maintain, subject to the inspection of the Secretary of State, or any person or persons designated by him, such permanent records of manufacture for export, importation, and exportation of arms, ammunition, and implements of war as the Secretary of State shall prescribe.

(f) Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered.

(1) Licenses shall be issued to persons who have registered as herein provided for, except in cases of export or import licenses where the export of arms, ammunition, or implements of war would be in violation of this act or any other law of the United States, or of a treaty to which the United States is a party, in which cases such licenses shall not be issued.

(g) No purchase of arms, ammuntion, or implements of war shall be made on behalf of the United States by any officer, executive department, or independent establishment of the Government from any person who shall have failed to register under the provisions of this act.

(h) The provisions of the act of August 29, 1916, relating to the sale of ordnance and stores to the Government of Cuba (39 Stat. 619, 643; U. S. C., 1934 ed., title 50, sec. 72), are hereby repealed as of December 31, 1937.

as or December 31, 1937.

(i) The Board shall make an annual report to Congress, copies of which shall be distributed as are other reports transmitted to Congress. Such reports shall contain such information and data collected by the Board as may be considered of value in the determination of questions connected with the control of trade in arms, ammunition, and implements of war. The Board shall include in such reports a list of all persons required to register under the provisions of this act, and full information concerning the licenses issued hereunder.

(i) The President is hereby authorized to receive the provisions of the state of the provisions of the president is hereby authorized to receive the provisions of the president is hereby authorized to receive the provisions of the president is hereby authorized to receive the provisions of the provisions of

(j) The President is hereby authorized to proclaim upon recommendation of the Board from time to time a list of articles which shall be considered arms, ammunition, and implements of war for the purposes of this section.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 13. The President may from time to time promulgate such rules and regulations not inconsistent with law as may be necessary and proper to carry out any of the provisions of this act; and he may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this act through such officer or officers, or agency or agencies, as he shall

GENERAL PENALTY PROVISION

SEC. 14. In every case of the violation of any of the provisions of this act or of any rule or regulation issued pursuant thereto where a specific penalty is not herein provided, such violator or violators, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both.

ADDRESS BY HON. KEY PITTMAN, CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE, OVER THE COLUMBIA EROADCASTING SYSTEM ON SUNDAY, MARCH 19, 1939

Rapidly increasing threatening conditions in the world force upon Congress the duty to expedite legislation that will permit our Government to act justly and at the same time to eliminate as far as practicable any causes that might bring us into a controversy that would force us into war. The existing Neutrality Act and the amendments thereto constitute a change in our international policy as it existed at the time that we entered the World War. It prevents our citizens and our ships from enjoying their right on the high seas under international law during war. And yet, notwithstanding this change of policy, we hear distinguished Senators and learned men in other phases of life charging that we are drifting into the same conditions that led us into the World War. They even charge that Woodrow Wilson dragged us into the World War. And they intimate or charge that the statements of President Roosevelt indicate that he is dragging us into another world war if such war should occur. None of the charges are true.

Let us remember that for several months before Congress declared war prominent statesmen like Theodore Roosevelt were crying out against the violation of our rights as neutrals under international law and demanding that our Government declare war against Germany. The tolerance and the patience of our President, our Congress, and our people was exhausted when the German Government, in February 1917, established a submarine zone hundreds of miles out in the Atlantic Ocean covering the high seas from Norway and Sweden to Africa and notified our Government that every neutral ship of commerce, whether carrying contraband or not, whether carrying the American flag or not, whether engaged with neutrals or not, would be sunk without notice when it entered that zone. And when, between March 1, 1917, and the date that we entered the war, a number of our merchantmen engaged

The existing neutrality law constituted a surrender of those legal rights that we fought for in the World War. We have found out, however, that beginning with the last war not only were arms, ammunition, and implements of war declared to be contraband of war, but by reason of the fact that today wars are conducted by all the people of a country rather than by armies, that everything, even foodstuffs, were designated as contraband of war.

We have discovered that the existing law in some particulars is unjust if not unneutral. Let us take, for example, the conflict between Japan and China. Had the Embargo Act been placed in effect upon both of those countries China would have suffered more than Japan. This, of course, no humane man or woman in this country Japan. This, of course, no numane man or woman in this country desired. The embargo would have only stopped the export of arms, ammunition, and implements of war, while all of the articles and materials used in the manufacture of arms, ammunition, and implements of war could be exported to both countries. China has no factories or munitions works with which to manufacture arms, ammunition, and implements of war, while Japan only requires the raw materials for such manufacture because Japan has ample factories and munition works at transform such manufacture into munition, and implements of war, while Japan only requires the raw materials for such manufacture because Japan has ample factories and munition works to transform such raw materials into weapons of war. This same injustice applies in every case where a manufacturing country is warring with a nonmanufacturing country. It has been urged by some pacifists that we amend the neutrality act so that there will be an embargo placed not only on arms, ammunition, and implements of war but upon all materials that are used in the manufacture of such weapons. That would include nearly every mineral and every chemical and many things like cotton. It must be perfectly evident that in the event of a World War our people are not going to make the sacrifice of discontinuing substantially all of their exports, particularly in a time of mounting surpluses, loss of domestic purchasing power, and tragic unemployment. Congress will respond to the will of the people in these matters. In my opinion, Congress would not pass such legislation. I have never seen the logic of prohibiting the sale of arms, ammunition, and implements of war to Japan while at the same time shipping her millions of tons of scrap iron to be manufactured into instruments of death with which to slaughter the innocent and helpless people of China.

The great emergency that is facing the world and inevitably our helpless people of China.

The great emergency that is facing the world and inevitably our own country if the march of the totalitarian powers continues—and I now see nothing to stop such march unless it be stopped by the immediate and united action of the liberty-loving people of Europedemands our action. The emergency demands of our Government an expeditious and enormous increase of the capacity in this country for the production of materials and instruments of defense. It demands our action. The emergency demands of our Government an expeditious and enormous increase of the capacity in this country for the production of materials and instruments of defense. It is totally impracticable, if not impossible, for our Government to sufficiently increase the capacity of Government works to meet any such emergency. Our Government must rely upon the expansion of the capacity of private industry. Private industry will not expand if it is denied the right and power to export its products. I am asked if placing in effect the cash-and-carry provision with regard to all materials would not be disadvantageous to China.

My answer is "no." Every port in China is controlled by Japan and nothing going into such ports can reach the Chinese Army. Whatever the Chinese Army receives must be overland from the west. Placing all materials under the cash-and-carry plan, and at the same time putting in force and effect the credit provisions of existing law, and which are retained in my resolution, as are the other provisions, would make it more difficult for Japan to import anything from the United States. China has not asked any credit in the United States. What she buys here she buys with silver, which we coin into money. It is also asked if placing all materials, including arms, ammunition, and implements of war, on the cash-and-carry basis would not benefit Great Britain and France. My answer, in the first place, is that that question is not a consideration in the passage of a Neutrality Act. The Neutrality Act has only one purpose, and that is to eliminate causes which might arouse controversies that would force us into a foreign war. Of course I must frankly admit that in the event of a world war that, so long as Great Britain and France control the seas, they alone will have access to our markets. But who can say how long one country or two countries will control the seas? Had we not entered the World War it is probable that Germany's submarines would have controlled the seas. Does it not seem unju that there is maintained in Europe a substantial balance of power, because if any one group obtains absolute power over Europe and Asia then we are faced with the defense of the Monroe Doctrine in Latin America. I have feared this ever since I broadcast a speech from southern California in September when Mr. Chamberlain was holding his conference with Hitler. I stated in that broadcast that, if the taking over by Germany of Sudetenland was the last step in his conquest, the surrender might be justified, even though it would result in the violation of a pledge to Czechoslovakia. But I contended at that time that, knowing the ambitions of Hitler, as I believed I.did, that it would be but the first step in an advance that would mean the conquest of central Europe. In a broadcast over the National Radio Forum on the 20th of February I stated:

"Does any one doubt that Hitler has in his program the domination of Ukraina? In fact, does any one doubt that Hitler has the domination of Siberia in mind? If so, simply read his book Mein Kampf. He is moving eastward at present. Is he succeeding? Hasn't Hungary joined his alliance? Did not the policy of appeasement of Great Britain surrender to the mercy of Hitler not only Czechoslovakia but Poland, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and Turkey? What is there to stop his domination, if not conquest, of these countries?" these countries?"

these countries?"

And then I gave the history of the acts and the expressed ambitions of the Japanese Government. And after that, speaking of the totalitarian governments, I stated:
"Their intent to dominate the world is evident to any unbiased thinking person."
I was attacked by the German press on the grounds that I was a war monger and by some in the United States as being provocative. I do not consider that a person can ever be charged with being provocative so long as he tells the truth in the resistance of wrong. But now the situation is clear. Prime Minister Chamberlain in his speech at Birmingham, England, on March 17, in speaking of Hitler's violation of his promises, said:
"What reliance can be placed upon any other assurances that in speaking of Hitler's violation of his promises, said:

"What reliance can be placed upon any other assurances that come from the same source? * * * Germany under her present regime has sprung a series of unpleasant surprises upon the world: The Rhineland, the Austrian Anschluss, the severance of Sudetenland—all these things shocked and affronted public opinion throughout the world.

"Is this the last attack upon a small state, or is it to be followed by others? Is this in fact a step in the direction of an attempt to dominate the world by force?"

Even today Hitler is demanding special and exclusive privileges in Rumania.

And so while this resolution that I will introduce on Monday solely on my own responsibility places all exports on the cash-and-carry basis, and while I do not desire any extraneous amendments offered to the resolution, it must be understood that I do not commit myself not to offer further legislation increasing the emergent powers of the President.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, at this moment I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that on the 8th instant I introduced a bill, S. 1745, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in full in the RECORD, at page 2447, touching the matter of neutrality, and announced that I would later address the Senate thereon. Subsequently I called attention to the fact that, being engaged as a member of the conference committee on the so-called defense or airplane bill, I would defer the remarks I intended

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, in connection with the request submitted by the Senator from Nevada, I ask unanimous consent that a statement made by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] on the same subject be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement by Mr. Borah was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT FOR THE PRESS BY WILLIAM E. BORAH, MARCH 19, 1939

The fact is that what we refer to as neutrality legislation is not in fact neutrality legislation. It is rather peace legislation. It abandons some of the most fundamental principles of neutrality as they had grown up through centuries of experience. If we are going to take up again legislation along the same lines, then I have reached the point where I should like to vote for a bill which would prohibit the sale, directly or indirectly, of all instrumentalities of war to any and all nations engaged in armed conflict. As soon as the proclamation of war is issued by the President as proposed, I would shut off absolutely the supplying of the instrumentalities of war.

The fact that the nations, or some of them, might have the ships and the money to come and get arms and carry them away should not be permitted to form an exception. We should say to all en-gaged in armed conflicts: We will furnish no loans. We will furnish no instrumentalities of war. We will not contribute in any way to mass murder.

The governments of the world extorted from their overburdened people last year $15,000,000,000 for arms and armaments. In view of the awful situation, we can afford at least to refuse all help, directly or indirectly, after war is actually in progress. We should lodge discretion nowhere on that particular matter. We should refuse arms and armaments to those who are able to buy and have the ships to carry the same as to all others. In endeavoring to be neutral we should, insofar as possible, endeavor to be humane.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri subsequently said: Mr. President, in view of the fact that the Senate has just given unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] having to do with the Neutrality Act, and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] having referred to his bill on the same subject, both measures, as I see the matter, being calculated to facilitate the United States drifting into war, I ask unanimous consent that there also be printed in the RECORD Senate Joint Resolution 84, recently introduced by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] and 12 other Senators, designed to keep the United States out of war.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 84) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States for a referendum on war is as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States;

"Section 1. Except in case of attack by armed forces, actual or immediately threatened, upon the United States or its Territorial immediately threatened, upon the United States or its Territorial possessions, or by any non-American nation against any country in the Western Hemisphere, the people shall have the sole power by a national referendum to declare war or to engage in warfare overseas. Congress, when it deems a national crisis to exist in conformance with this article, shall by concurrent resolution refer the question to the people.

"SEC. 2. Congress shall by law provide for the enforcement of this section."

section.

"SEC. 3. This article shall become operative when ratified as an amendment to the Constitution by conventions in the several States, as provided in the Constitution."

Mr. SHIPSTEAD subsequently said: Mr. President, earlier in the day sundry matters were introduced in the RECORD in connection with the joint resolution of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and the bill of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis]. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD in the same connection an excerpt from an address delivered last Saturday night at Canton, Ohio, by the former Under Secretary of State, Mr. Castle, relative to the same subject.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of March 19, 1939]

Castle Cautions of Drift into War—In Address to Ohio Lawyers He Calls on Country to Mind Its "Own Business"—Scores "Mis-sionary Mind"—Denies Britain and France Have "Sum of Fair-NESS"-HOLDS POLICY TO LATINS UNFAIR

CANTON, OHIO, March 18.—Calling on the United States to "keep out of the European mess," William R. Castle, former Under Secretary of State, said in a speech here tonight:

"Let's mind our own business—and keep our powder dry—avoid all the ideologies which are contrary to our own good system."

all the ideologies which are contrary to our own good system."

Speaking at a dinner marking the close of the annual institute of law, sponsored by the Stark County Bar Association, Mr. Castle questioned the argument that it would prevent war if the dictatorships were notified that this country was prepared to defend the democracies by force of arms.

"Is not this a notification to the democracies that, with the United States back of them, they need not make any compromises nor even try to satisfy any of the legitimate needs of the have-not countries?" Mr. Castle demanded.

"We cannot assert that the sum of wisdom and fairness is with Great Britain and France. They, too, have had their moments of imperialism. The people in this country who should have and do have the final voice when it is a question of war are not Government officials but the American people themselves.

NOT FAIRPLAY, HE CHARGES

"And I am dead certain that the American people have no desire to get into another European war. On the contrary, I am sure that they are determined to keep out. It is not, therefore, playing fair with the American people to lure them along a path which, although it is bordered with plous phrases, leads inevitably toward war.

"This seems to be a time when the United States is again getting into a missionary frame of mind. We make up our minds what form of government is the best form and then want to force it on others, whether they want it or not.

"Today who would dare to say that the strenuous attempt of the American Government to persuade Latin-American countries not to trade with Germany and Italy, admirable and high-minded as the purpose is in statement, has not back of it—quite unconsciously so far as most American officials are concerned—the desire to get for ourselves the trade that Germany and Italy now have.

"If we could go to the Latin-American countries and say, "The totalitarian governments of Europe practice a doctrine which is abhorrent to American ideals. You are helping these nations to live and prosper through your trade. If you will buy only from us we shall be glad to take all your beef and your wheat as well as what we take now,' our position would be fair enough.

DEPLORES STIRRING UP HATE

"But it will not pay in the long run to go down there and stir up hate, try to disrupt trade with these European countries when we have not the slightest intention ourselves to step in and buy cotton and wheat and meat that we do not want and could not use.

"I think the really good-neighborly thing to do would be to say to them that we intend to buy all we can and to sell all we can and that, as we are friends and neighbors, we intend also to facilitate their arrangements abroad so that they can sell the rest their products to the best advantage to themselves. What a surprise this would be to the totalitarian States. It would make their prise this would be to the total tarian states. It would make their criticisms of us merely silly, would create a new atmosphere in which peace would have a chance."

Mr. Castle contended that this country's representatives abroad could fulfill their duty to promote democracy by proving to others the virtues of our own democracy. He added that they do not fulfill their duty when they attack others because then they become missionaries and endanger their own country.

INCREASE OF AGRICULTURAL PURCHASING POWER

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate bill 1855, to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to increase the national income, to make possible a balancing of the Budget and, acting under the power conferred by section 8 of article I of the Constitution, to regulate the value of the dollar in the interest of the general welfare, and for other purposes; and I submit a report (No. 180) thereon. The bill has to do with the agricultural problem, but it involves and relates to monetary affairs; so I ask that the bill and report be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency for the consideration of that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I also ask that a copy of the bill, together with a copy of the report, be printed in full at this point in the RECORD for the information of the

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Oklahoma? The Chair hears none.

The bill and report are as follows:

Be it enacted. etc.,

DECLARATION OF POLICY

SECTION 1. That it is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States that the price level as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics shall be adjusted to 100, and it shall be the duty of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the other executive departments of the Government to cooperate in the work of adjusting such price level as herein provided, and thereafter to keep such price level as nearly stable at such point of 100 as is humanly possible.

GOLD DOLLAR WEIGHT FIXED

SEC. 2. The weight of the gold dollar is hereby fixed at 12.9 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine. Such gold dollar, the weight of which is so fixed, shall be the standard unit of value, and all forms of money issued or coined by the United States shall be maintained at a parity with this standard and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain such parity.

CERTIFICATES AGAINST SURPLUS GOLD AUTHORIZED

SEC. 3. There is hereby created in the Treasury a special reserve fund. There shall be covered into such fund (1) any gold in the general fund of the Treasury, (2) an amount of gold equal to the increase in value (resulting from the first section of this act) of any gold held as security for gold certificates and as a reserve for any United States notes and for Treasury notes of 1890, and (3) any gold hereafter acquired by the general fund of the Treasury. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to issue certificates against the gold in such fund. Such certificates shall be in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary, shall have and possess all of the privileges and the legal-tender characteristics of silver certificates now in the Treasury of the United States or in circulation, and shall be redeemable in any lawful money of the United States: Provided, That all such certificates shall be issued and paid into circulation to meet maturing bills and in such a manner as to assist in carrying into effect the policy set forth in section 1 of this act.

RELATING TO SILVER

SEC. 4. That the Silver Purchase Act (Public Law No. 438, 73d

SEC. 4. That the Silver Purchase Act (Public Law No. 438, 73d Cong.) is hereby repealed.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase at not less than $1.04 per fine ounce all silver newly mined in the United States that may be offered for sale.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase all foreign silver which may be tendered in payment for agricultural products of the United States, which agricultural products are purchased for export at a price which shall be 25 percent above the New York market price for foreign silver as of the date of sale of such agricultural products: Provided, however, That the price to be paid for all silver acquired pursuant to the provisions of section 4 of this act shall not be higher than $1.29 per fine ounce.

The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to issue silver certificates against all silver purchased under this act on the basis of the monetary value of $1.29 per fine ounce.

The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to purchase silver, both foreign and domestic, pursuant to the provisions of this act, until the amount of silver held in the Treasury of the United States shall constitute 25 percent of the total metallic monetary reserves of the United States.

CERTIFICATES OWNED BY UNITED STATES TO BE KEPT IN CIRCULATION

SEC. 5. When certificates issued under section 2 of this act, and when silver certificates issued under the provisions of this or any other act are received into the Treasury (other than by redemption) from any source whatsoever, and belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation; but nothing herein shall prevent the cancelation and destruction of mutilated certificates of the destruction of the latest the cartificates of the destruction. cates and the issue of other certificates of like denomination in their stead, as provided by law.

STABILIZATION FUND CONTINUED

SEC. 6. The sum of $1,500,000,000 heretofore appropriated and covered into a stabilization fund, as provided by paragraph (6) of section 10, Public Law No. 87, Seventy-third Congress, approved January 30, 1934, is hereby reappropriated and covered into the general fund; and paragraph (c) of said section 10 of said Public Law No. 87, Seventy-third Congress, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 7. The short title of this act shall be the "Dollar Value"

Regulation Act of 1939."

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1855), as follows: "A bill to relieve the existing national economic emergency by increasing agricultural purchasing power, to increase the national income, to make possible a balancing of the Budget, and, acting under the power conferred by section 8 of article I of the Constitution, to regulate the value of the dollar in the interest of general welfare, and for other purposes," having considered the same, report thereon with the recommendation that it do pass, as amended, such amendments being as follows: On page 3, line 18, after the word "States" and before the word "at", insert "which agricultural products are purchased for export."

export."

Amendment No. 2. On page 3, line 23, after the word "of" and before the word "this", insert "Section 4 of."

Amendment No. 3. On page 3, line 23, after the word "shall" and before the word "be", insert "not." Such amendment being a transposition so that said line 23 will read as follows: "of section 4 of this act shall not be higher than $1.29 per fine ounce."

Amendment No. 4. On page 5, line 4, change "Section 6" to read "Section 7"

"Section 7."

The bill has for its main purpose the raising of the general price level; hence, the raising of the prices of farm commodities.

The bill contains seven sections.

The first section is a declaration of policy, such policy being to adjust and regulate the price level to the point of 100, and thereafter keeping such price level adjusted to said point as nearly stable as is humanly possible.

Section 2 fixes the weight of the gold dollar by law definitely at 120 greaters of said print paths fine The present gold dollar parts.

12.9 grains of gold nine-tenths fine. The present gold dollar contains 15\%1 grains of gold, so that it is proposed to reduce the gold content of the dollar from 15\%1 grains to 12.9 grains.

If section 2 is adopted, then the new gold dollar will contain just one-half of the gold content of the old gold dollar in use from 1834 to 1934 to 1934.

Section 3 provides that all the free gold in the general fund of the Treasury shall be used as the basis for the issuance of new currency. The free gold referred to is as follows:

(a) Gold in the general fund in the sum of approximately $700,000,000; and

$700,000,000; and
(b) Gold resulting from the devaluation as provided in section 2 in an estimated sum of $2,700,000,000; and stabilization fund and covered into the general fund.
(c) Any gold which might hereafter be acquired, either from domestic producers or in the due course of trade, and the sum of $1,500,000,000 reappropriated by section 5 of the bill from the stabilization fund and covered into the general fund.

If section 2 and section 6 should be enacted, then we would have an approximate sum of $4,900,000,000 of free gold in the general fund which will be converted into a special reserve fund to be held as the basis of a like amount.

Section 4 provides first for the repeal of the Silver Purchase Act of 1934 (Public Law No. 438, 73d Cong.).

Secondly, the section provides for the purchase of all newly mined silver from mines located in the United States at a price of $1.04 per fine ounce.

The regular or coinage value of an ounce of fine silver is $1.29

The regular or coinage value of an ounce of fine silver is $1.29 per fine ounce so that on the basis of purchase as herein provided, the Government makes a profit from the seigniorage in the sum of 25 cents per ounce.

The plan of purchase is for the Government to issue silver certificates and exchange such certificates for all silver purchased under the act.

The section further authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase silver, both foreign and domestic, pursuant to the provisions of this act, until the amount of silver held in the Treasury of the United States shall constitute 25 percent of the total metallic monetary reserves of the United States.

Section 5 provides that all certificates issued under this act and all silver certificates issued against silver bullion in the Treasury shall not be retired, converted, or destroyed, but shall be reissued and kept in constant circulation.

Section 6 provides for the reappropriation of the sum of $1,500,-000,000 from the stabilization fund and covering such sum into the special reserve fund for the purpose of currency issue. Section 6 repeals section 10 of Public, No. 87, Seventy-third Congress, which provides that the law creating the stabilization fund shall expire on June 20 1320.

fund shall expire on June 30, 1939.

If section 6 is enacted, then the stabilization fund is retained indefinitely with the sum of $500,000,000 of the original $2,000,000,000 left in such fund to be managed as provided by law.

RESULTS OF LEGISLATION

The bill, if enacted into law, will bring about the following

The bill, if enacted into law, will bring about the following positive and definite results:

First. It will reduce the weight, hence the value, of the gold dollar and fixes such weight definitely by law. On March 6 we had in the Treasury the sum of $14,916,000,000 in gold; hence, the further devaluation of the gold dollar will result in a profit for the Treasury of approximately $2,700,000,000.

Second. The bill, if enacted, will provide for the issuance of approximately $5,000,000,000 of new currency against a like amount of free gold in the Treasury. Should this policy be adopted this money could be used to retire maturing obligations in the form of bond indebtedness and maturing bills. This would relieve the necessity of further borrowing and at the same time would make it unnecessary to raise the legal limit for the issuance of bonds above the present $45,000,000,000.

Third. If the bill should be enacted, the amount of permanent, nonretirable currency in circulation would be increased by approximately $5,000,000,000.

At the present time we have in actual circulation approximately $1,000,000,000 in silver certificates, approximately $275,000,000 of United States notes, and approximately $4,000,000,000 of Federal Reserve notes.

Under the law and common practice Federal Reserve notes fluctuate widely. These notes are issued by the Federal Reserve banks upon collateral furnished by the member banks, and when the member banks pay their notes the currency is automatically

Under the present policy the silver certificates, the United States notes, and the Federal Reserve notes in actual circulation total only about $5,275,000,000.

The silver certificates and the United States notes in the total sum of $1,275,000,000 are the only nonretirable money we now have in circulation.

While the record shows that we have gold certificates, Treasury notes of 1890, Federal Reserve bank notes, and national bank notes in circulation, the facts are that such notes have been ordered retired and the moment they appear in practical circulation or reach the banks, they are sent in to the Treasury for retirement and cancelation.

and cancelation.

This bill, if enacted, will increase the permanent, nonretirable currency in the approximate sum of $5,000,000,000; however, it is provided specifically "that all such certificates shall be issued and paid into circulation to meet maturing bills and in such a manner as to assist in carrying into effect the policy set forth in section 1 of this act."

Fourth. The bill, if enacted, will make it possible to keep the silver mines of the United States in operation. Otherwise most, if not all of such mines, will have to suspend operation.

Silver and gold have been recognized as monetary metals since the dawn of civilization. The first unit of currency in our money of account was the silver dollar containing 371¼ grains of fine silver.

During all our national history this dollar, known as the stand-ard silver dollar, has never been changed or altered as to the silver

Today we have coined silver dollars in the sum of $547,079,989, and have outstanding against a portion of such silver dollars and against silver bullion the sum of $1,645,213,645 in the form of silver certificates.

Some 11 of our States produce silver, and while it has been the policy of our Government to help industry by tariffs and agriculture by subsidies, it cannot be charged that the policy herein suggested and provided is out of harmony with the general policy of the United States.

Fifth. In addition to raising the price level, which means agricultural prices specifically, and the placing of additional currency in circulation, the enactment of the measure will have the following effect upon our metallic monetary stock:

EFFECT UPON METALLIC MONEY STOCKS

By revaluation of the dollar our gold stock in the sum of approximately $14,916,000,000 will become approximately $17,-600,000,000.

At present we have a total silver stock, as valued in gold, in the sum of approximately $1,675,000,000, and by adding the revalued gold stock to the present silver stock, we find that we have a total metallic monetary stock in the sum of approximately $19,275,-

In passing, we might suggest that we are not issuing silver certificates against our metallic silver to the full extent of the law. We have sufficient silver in the Treasury which could be used for the issuance of an additional $1,250,000,000 of silver certificates; hence, in the event this bill should become the law we would have acquired gold and silver stock sufficient to become the legal base dollar for dollar, of over $20,000,000,000 of currency. However, should we follow the formula set forth in the Federal Reserve

Act, of issuing money against a certain percent of gold and a certain percent of liquid collateral, we would have ample gold and silver to become the legal base for approximately $50,000,000,000 of currency.

MONEY UNCERTAINTY

Today the most serious problem confronting our people and our economic structure is monetary uncertainty. This uncertainty is brought about in the main by the changing value of the

The dollar is our monetary unit and serves two purposes: (a) As a medium of exchange, and (b) as a measure of value. In order to measure value we must have a standard. Public confidence is based upon just governmental policies and upon stability, and stability must be founded upon a standard.

DOLLAR CHANGES VALUE

All must admit that our monetary unit, the dollar, expands

All must admit that our monetary unit, the dollar, expands and contracts as a measure of value.

In 1920 the dollar, as a measure of value, was worth 64 cents.

In 1933 the dollar was worth 167 cents, in March of 1937 the same dollar was worth 112 cents, and today such dollar is worth 130 cents.

Based upon this record, this question suggests itself: How may we have stability when the yardstick of value—the dollar—by which we measure stability is itself unstable?

The main objective of this bill is to raise prices by regulating and adjusting the value of the dollar to that point which will serve the best interests of all the people, and your Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recommends that the dollar should be regulated and adjusted so that its value in terms of commodities and property will be 100 cents, as shown by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, and your committee further recommends that when such dollar value has been regulated and adjusted to 100 cents that such value be stabilized at such point.

CONGRESSIONAL MANDATE

CONGRESSIONAL MANDATE

The bill gives a mandate to our money managers to regulate and adjust the value of the dollar to 100 cents, and then a further mandate to keep such dollar regulated and adjusted to the said 100-cent value.

CONDITIONS TODAY

CONDITIONS TODAY

Cotton and wheat, two major farm products, are world commodities; hence, as such, they are measured constantly in terms of gold throughout the world. The prices of these two commodities, when measured in terms of gold, are today the lowest in history.

Were it not for the Federal loan policy, cotton would be selling for less than 5 cents per pound, and wheat would be selling for less than 30 cents per bushel.

The Government loan policy has raised the price of cotton to some 8½ cents per pound to the farmers and has raised the price of wheat to some 50 cents per bushel.

The Government cannot continue its present commodity loan program, and farmers cannot possibly live on 5-cent cotton and 30-cent wheat.

AGRICULTURAL COMMITTEE'S POLICY

In reporting the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 your Committee on Agriculture and Forestry developed and announced its policy. On page 7 of such committee report the committee recompolicy. ( mended:

"That the purchasing power of the dollar should be fixed and stabilized at that point to serve the best interest of the people, trade, commerce, and industry, and that when such value is once fixed it should be stabilized at such value.

"We report further that no just, substantial, reliable, or permanent relief can be provided agriculture or any other industry until the money question is considered and adjusted."

DOLLAR VALUE NOT PROPERLY REGULATED

All must admit that to date the dollar value has not been satisfactorily regulated and adjusted.

As stated, the dollar value or purchasing power was reduced from 167 cents in February 1933 to 112 cents in March 1937. From March 1937 the dollar value has been increased from 112 cents to its present value of 130 cents as measured in commodities and

No one can conclude that such a value or purchasing power is a proper one. Our money managers have obviously adjusted and regulated the value or purchasing power of the dollar to 130 cents, but such value is not reducing unemployment, is not permitting of a balanced Budget, and is not providing even cost of production to the producers of raw material, including farm com-

1933 MONETARY PROVISIONS

Later, during the consideration of the bill in the Senate, the committee recommended that the said bill be amended to include monetary provisions calculated to cheapen the dollar and thereby raise prices.

Title III of said act was added to the bill on the floor of the Senate, and such title carried the monetary adjustment provisions. This title conferred upon the President discretionary powers as

First. To have issued some $3,000,000,000 in Federal Re notes.

Second. To issue $3,000,000,000 in United States notes.

Third. To revalue the gold dollar by reducing its gold content by as much as 50 percent; and Fourth. To provide for a wider use of silver in our monetary

ADMINISTRATION'S POLICY

During the first days of the new administration the President announced a policy of raising commodity prices. On May 6, 1933, over a Nation-wide radio hook-up, President Roosevelt said:

"The administration has the definite objective of raising commodity prices to such an extent that those who have borrowed money will, on the average, be able to repay that money in the same kind of dollar which they borrowed."

Again, on July 3, 1933, in a message to the London Economic Conference, the President said:
"Let me be frank in saying that the United States seeks the kind of dollar which a generation hence will have the same purchasing and debt-paying power as the dollar value we hope to attain in the near future."

And on July 5, 1933, in a second message to the World Economic

And on July 5, 1933, in a second message to the World Economic Conference in London, he said:

"The revaluation of the dollar in terms of American commodities is an end from which the Government and the people of the United States cannot be diverted. We wish to make this perfectly clear: We are interested in American commodity prices."

On October 22, 1933, in a Nation-wide radio address, the President said:

"It is the Government's policy to restore the price level first."
Also, in this address he said:
"When we have restored the price level we shall seek to establish and maintain a dollar which will not change its purchasing and debt-paying power during the succeeding generation. I said that in my message to the American delegation in London last July, and I say it now once more."

The purpose of this recommended legislation is to carry into effect the definite and announced policy of the President as just set forth.
In support of the President's policy the committee calls attention to the platform declarations of the political parties of 1932 and 1934, 1936, and 1938. as follows:

In support of the President's policy the committee calls attention to the platform declarations of the political parties of 1932 and 1934, 1936, and 1938, as follows:

The Democratic platform of 1932 contains the following declaration: "We maintain the depression of 1920 and the depression (the bankers calling old loans and refusing to make new loans) of 1929 were due to the indefensible contraction of credit for private profit at public expense, and we pledge the Democratic Party to preserve a sound currency at all hazards. * * * We promise to restore property values and to endeavor to establish a dollar of uniform permanent debt-paying power. * * * We approve the objective of a permanent sound currency established so as to prevent the former wide fluctuations in value, injuring, in turn, the producers, debtors, and property owners on the one hand and wage earners and creditors on the other hand—a currency which will permit full utilization of the country's resources * * *."

The Republican platform of 1932 contains the following plank: "We pledge a sound currency at all hazards. We will restore to the Congress the authority lodged with it by the Constitution to coin all money and regulate the value thereof * * *."

The Republican platform of 1936 on money is as follows: "We advocate a sound currency to be preserved at all hazards. * * We will restore to Congress the authority lodged with it by the Constitution to coin all money and regulate the value thereof * * *."

The Progressive platform of 1938 declared as follows: "The Progressive platform of 1938 declared as follows: "Th thereof * * ""

The Progressive platform of 1938 declared as follows:

"The ownership and control of money and credit without qualifications or reservations must be under public and not private control * * ""

The Farmer-Labor platform of 1934 likewise declared as follows: "Congress shall exercise the constitutional power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof."

The objective of the bill is to vitalize the provision of the Constitution wherein the Congress is given power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof.

The policy set forth by the President is the identical policy as set forth in the platform declaration of all of the political parties from 1932 to date.

In addition to the commitment of the President and the endorsement of all political parties, we report that all of the farm organizations are on record as being in substantial support of the organizations are on record as being in substantial support of the suggested legislation.

To carry out the policy announced and exercising in part the powers conferred, the President proceeded to cheapen the dollar, which had the effect of raising prices correspondingly.

EFFECT ON PRICES

With the passage of said act and the exercise of a part of the powers by the President farm prices began to improve, and by March 1937 farmers began to see the dawn of better days for agriculture. Because of the monetary-adjustment program and other enactments, the price of cotton was increased from some 6 cents to some 14 cents per pound, and the price of wheat was increased from some 50 cents to $1 per bushel.

The following table shows the total increase in the farm income for the years succeeding 1932 to date:

Inc.; Dairymen's League Cooperative Association, Inc.; New York State Farm Bureau Federation.

The New York State Conference Board further reports that "as the dollar's buying power goes up, farmers' and other basic producers' income goes down." Further, the report says:

"Between 1929 and 1933 the value of gold increased 140 percent, causing a very sharp drop in farm prices. Due to this monetary derangement, farmers of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, between 1930 and 1937 to be the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the United States have lost, but the producer of the United States have lost, but the United States have lost the United States derangement, farmers of the United States have lost, between 1350 and 1937, inclusive, $32,000,000,000 of their predepression average buying power. Producers of other basic commodities lost $15,000,000,000 during the same period.

"Farmers and other basic producers comprise approximately 55,000,000 of our population. This reduction in income and buying power has caused urban unemployment."

CHANGES IN DOLLAR VALUE

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that in 1926 the dollar had The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that in 1926 the dollar had a buying or purchasing power, in terms of commodities, in the sum of 100 cents. This Bureau further reports that by February 1932 the buying or purchasing power of the dollar had increased from 100 cents to 167 cents. This report further shows that, with the administration's program to cheapen the dollar and raise prices, the dollar's buying or purchasing power fell from 167 cents in February 1933 to 112 cents in March of 1937.

As the dollar increased in buying power from 1929 to 1933, farm income and national income decreased correspondingly, and from 1933 to 1937, as the dollar was cheapened, farm income increased correspondingly.

correspondingly.

FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD PRODUCED RECESSION

Then, in 1937, when the man-made recession was brought upon the country, farm income and national income again decreased.

Based upon this record the New York State Conference Board of Farm Organizations reports that during the 8 years from 1930 to 1938 the farmers lost a total income in the sum of $31,665,000,000. This board also reports that other basic producers lost a total of $15,100,000,000, making a total deficit for farmers and other basic producers in the total sum for the 8 years of $46,765,000,000.

HIGH PRICE LEVEL PRODUCES HIGH INCOME

The record shows that a high price level produces high incomes. For example, take the year 1920 with the highest price level in recent years, we find the following record.

High price level

Farm income	$13,000,000,000
National income	69, 000, 000, 000
Value farm property	66, 000, 000, 000
Value exports	8, 200, 000, 000
Amount Treasury income	6,000,000,000
Then take 1932, with a low price level, we have	ve the following record: T Tama1

Low price level
Farm income	$5,000,000,000
National income	48, 000, 000, 000

Amount treasury income—
with a high price level in 1920 wheat sold for $2.50 a bushel, cotton sold for 42 cents a pound, corn sold for $1.90 per bushel, and oats sold for $1.04 per bushel.

In 1933, with a low price level, wheat sold for 30 cents per bushel, cotton sold for 5 cents per pound, corn sold for 15 cents per bushel, and oats sold for 10 cents per bushel.

EFFECT OF DOLLAR VALUE ON NATIONAL WEALTH

In 1929 the national wealth was estimated to be $461,000,000,000, and as the dollar increased in value from 100 cents to a value of 167 cents in 1933, the national wealth declined correspondingly to the sum of $213,000,000,000.

As the dollar became cheaper from 1933 to 1937, the national wealth again increased until 1937, when the recession came, and since that time the national wealth has been decreasing.

EFFECT OF DOLLAR VALUE ON BANK DEPOSITS

As the dollar became cheaper bank deposits incr	eased as follows:
1933	$37,000,000,000
1934	41, 000, 000, 000
1935	45, 000, 000, 000
1936	51, 000, 000, 000
1937	53, 000, 000, 000
1938	52, 000, 000, 000

As stated, a high price level produces high income; hence, a high price level produces increased buying or purchasing power.

The following table shows the farm income under high and low

STATUS OF GOLD AS MONETARY METAL

Section 2 of the bill proposes to reduce the weight, hence, the value, of the gold dollar.

From 1834 to 1934 the gold dollar contained 25.8 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine. In 1934, because of the increased value of gold, the weight of the gold dollar was reduced from 25.8 grains to 15\%; grains, nine-tenths fine.

In 1933 we had in the whole world a total of $11,741,000,000 of monetary gold. When we revalued gold in terms of the new dollar content, we find that we have now in the world a total of some $26,244,000,000 of monetary gold.

content, we find that we have now in the world a total of some $26,244,000,000 of monetary gold.

Of the world's supply of monetary gold, we have in our Treasury as of date March 6, 1939, the sum of $14,916,417,692.50, which constitutes 57 percent of the total monetary gold in the world.

World statistics show that gold, because of increased demand brought about by increased taxes, increased debts, increased interest, and expanded international trade intercourse, has increased in value some 140 percent.

If the United States has some 57 percent of the world's gold, then the other fifty-odd nations together have only 43 percent.

VALUE OF GOLD INCREASING

Because of conditions not necessary to detail here, gold is coming to the United States daily and as gold comes here our percentage of the world's supply is increased and the gold left among the other nations is decreased.

As gold becomes scarcer in other nations its value increases, and as more and more gold comes here its value, as measured in commodities and property, increases correspondingly.

WORLD'S EXCHANGE BASED ON GOLD

At this time all world or international exchange is based upon

At this time all world or international exchange is based upon gold; hence, with a diminishing supply among the other nations and with world trade increasing, the smaller the supply of world gold the greater will be its value.

In 1933 the old gold dollar of 25.8 grains had a purchasing power as measured in terms of commodities and property of 167 cents. Today if the domestic dollar is comparable in value to our new gold dollar, then the so-called 59-cent gold dollar has a buying power of 130 cents plus; hence, if section 2 is approved and the weight of the gold dollar is reduced to one-half the size of the former or old gold dollar, we will have a gold dollar weighing 12.9 grains, nine-tenths fine, but such gold dollar will have a buying or purchasing power of over 100 cents as measured in commodities and property.

MORE MONEY REQUIRED

MORE MONEY REQUIRED

Since 1933, taxes, debts, and interest have increased, making necessary more money with which to meet such increased overhead and fixed charges.

With the United States' share of the world's gold, in the sum of almost $15,000,000,000, out of circulation and buried in Kentucky, we find that with standing increased world fixed charges there is less gold now available to back world currencies than before the several currency units were devalued.

WHAT PRICE GOVERNMENT?

The National Industrial Conference Board has made a report based upon the year 1936 showing the cost of government in the United States. From this report the following facts are reported: "The cost of all government—Federal, State, and local—was $17,047,000,000.

"That was more than the year's yield in this country from soil and earth—crops, livestock, metals, coal, oil, lumber; more than we spent for food, clothing, and rent; more than one-quarter of the national income.

"Federal and State Governments cost $11,009,000,000.

"That was far more than American farmers raised; almost as much as our factory workers earned; almost as much as investors and landlords received.

"Federal Government cost $8,576,000,000.
"That was more than American farmers' cash income; almost as much as it cost the American people to eat.

"State governments cost $2,433,000,000.

"That was more than rent; almost as much as clothing.

"Local governments cost $6,038,000,000.

"That was more than investors' stock dividends; more than interest on bonds and mortgages; more than premiums paid on all forms of insurance; more than freight and passenger transportation; more than the year's automobile sales."

ECONOMIC LAWS

The same economic law which controls the value of commodities, such as cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, and rice, controls the value of our dollars. When such commodities are plentiful they are cheap, and when they are scarce they are high as measured in other

The foregoing is the quantitative theory of value. This economic law has been recognized since man began to think. The farm-relief program of this administration has been predicated upon this law, as evidenced by the following:

(a) Cotton was plowed under to make cotton scarcer, hence higher in price.

(b) Wheat was plowed under for the same reason. (c) Hogs and cattle were killed in order to raise the price of

(d) The present farm law provides for limited and controlled production of farm commodities in order to enable farmers to continue to reside upon the land.

SINGLE GOLD STANDARD

The single gold standard means that money is based upon and redeemable in the single commodity of gold. Formerly the United States and many of the leading world powers were on such a standard. Today no nation, large or small, is on a gold standard. Perhaps our country is the nearest to such a standard. We have our basic dollar fixed by law at fifteen and five-twenty-firsts grains of gold, but our domestic currency is not redeemable in either coined gold dollars or gold bullion, so that domestically at least we are on a paper dollar or paper-currency standard.

ADVANTAGES OF COMMODITY DOLLAR

Since our money is not redeemable in gold, the only thing we can get for our dollars are other dollars or commodities or some can get for our dollars are other dollars or commodities of some form of property.

So long as the dollar was redeemable in gold the value of such dollar was the value of the amount of gold contained in the dollar. Gold being a commodity fluctuated in value or in terms of other property the same as any other commodity fluctuates in value in terms of other property.

The record shows that when gold was used to redeem money and dead to the same proportion as taxes and debts increased.

and trade expanded, the value of gold was used to redeem money and and trade expanded, the value of gold remained stable, but at any time that a new gold field was discovered and gold came into circulation faster than the regular demand for money increased then gold itself became cheaper, the dollar fell in buying power, and prices increased and prices increased.

This statement is borne out by the discovery of gold in California,

In Alaska, and in South Africa.

In times of increased debts, taxes, and interest, if gold is not produced in increased proportion to such increased demand for money, then gold increases in value or buying power and prices fall.

GOLD NOT STABLE MEASURE OF VALUE

All now agree that any fixed quantity of the single commodity gold is not a stable measure of value. Every nation has a system for measuring value and such system is known as a commodity index. The number of commodities in the various systems varies. Some systems embrace but a few commodities, while our system, the Bureau of Labor Statistics, embraces some 784 commodities. All must agree that the average price of 784 commodities would be more stable than the price of any one of such number of commodities.

The theory of a commodity index system is that should one commodity, such as gold, silver, copper, lead, iron, wheat, cotton, or corn, increase in value some other commodity in the system might lose value, so that the average would not be changed unless the standard by which such index was measured itself changed.

To the extent that the standard is changed, the price or value of the commodity or commodities which make up the index likewise

It is the standard or measure of value which is now too high, and it is this standard which the Congress has the power to regu-and it is this standard which the Congress has the power to regulate, and your Committee on Agriculture and Forestry recommends that the value of such standard or yardstick of value be reduced to the end that prices may be increased correspondingly. This recommendation is not based merely upon the wish of your committee, but upon a positive necessity if our Budget is to be balanced, if our debts are to be paid, and if our form of government is to continue to exist.

The Budget has not been balanced, taxes have not been paid, and debts have not been reduced on a 130-cent dollar.

The owners of tax-exempt bonds and the managers of banks are

The owners of tax-exempt bonds and the managers of banks are acting neither in the public interest nor even in their own personal interest when they exercise their economic power to foster upon the country an impossible standard or yardstick of value. Our money managers are now working on fallacious premises.

They claim that the dollar value can neither be regulated nor stabilized. The answer is that Governor Strong did both. While he was governor of the New York Federal Reserve Bank he regulated the dollar value up from 64 cents to 100 cents and then maintained such value without material fluctuation during the remainder of his life.

Our money managers have obviously fixed the value of the dollar

Our money managers have obviously fixed the value of the dollar at 130 cents and for months past they have maintained such value without material fluctuation.

DIFFERENCE BETWEEN REAL DOLLARS AND CREDIT DOLLARS

Your committee recommends and demands that the dollar value such 100-cent value is reached that all necessary power be used to stabilize such value at such point as nearly as is possible.

Your committee further suggests that our money managers are

Your committee further suggests that our money managers are working on another fallacious premise. It is claimed by some in high places that an increase or decrease of credit or deposit dollars in circulation has the same effect upon prices as an increase or decrease of real dollars—gold, silver, or paper.

Since this depression came upon us the Government has issued bonds and pledged same for the creation of credit or deposit dollars to the extent of over $30,000,000,000.

The increase in the national debt from $16,000,000,000 to some $40,000,000,000 accounts for $24,000,000,000 of these credit or deposit dollars.

dollars

To the foregoing must be added the credit or deposit dollars created by the R. F. C. and the other agencies of our Government. Since March 1937, while credit or deposit dollars have been increasing by multiplied billions, the value of the dollar has increased from 112 to 130 cents where it is today. Some persons in high places seemingly have no fear of an increase in the Nation's bonded indebtedness; hence, have no fear of an increase in the number of credit or deposit dollars which are being forced into circulation; however, when it is suggested that some of our free surplus gold be used as the basis for a few real currency dollars, then our money managers express the fear that inflation is on the way.

The difference between real dollars—gold, silver, or currency—and credit or deposit dollars is that real dollars are price-measuring units, while credit or deposit dollars are not price-measuring units. If credit or deposit dollars were price-measuring units, then the expansion of such units by some $30,000,000,000 in the past few years would have reduced the value of such units rather than have increased their value.

years would have reduced the value of such units rather than have increased their value.

Your committee suggests and recommends that the expansion of the currency by real dollars will cheapen such dollars and that to the extent that such real dollars are made more plentiful, to a like extent prices will be raised. By such a program the price level can be raised to any given point.

No one can possibly deny that an increase in the currency in circulation will raise prices and that a decrease in such circulation will lower prices.

will lower prices.

At this time we are not on a gold standard domestically, so that the amount of gold in our dollar has little if any effect on domestic prices. This cannot be said of so-called world commodities such as cotton and wheat domestic prices. This cannot be said of so-caned world commodities such as cotton and wheat.

Your committee suggests that when we were on an orthodox gold standard, with the gold content of the dollar definitely fixed by law, yet the price level could be changed at the will of the money managers without changing or altering the content of the gold in the dollar. The explanation and argument follows.

So long as we are able to buy and sell gold at the present price of $35 per ounce, or at any fixed price, the dollar value in terms of gold will not change, but by expanding or contracting the currency in circulation we are able to raise or lower the price level, notwithstanding that the basic or redemption dollar is of gold with a fixed gold content.

For illustration: Today gold is worth $35 per ounce and wheat is now worth 50 cents per bushel; hence, an ounce of gold is now worth 70 bushels of wheat. It cannot be denied that we can raise the price of wheat by expanding the currency in circulation. By adding new price-measuring units—real dollars; not credit or deposit dollars—to the circulation, we can raise the price level so that wheat will sell for $1 per bushel.

Germany increased her circulation so as to make wheat sell for some 2,000,000,000,000,000 marks per bushel.

for some 2,000,000,000,000 marks per bushel.

for some 2,000,000,000,000 marks per bushel.

If by expansion of the currency wheat can be made to sell for $1$ per bushel, then without changing the gold content of the dollar the same ounce of gold is not worth 70 bushels of wheat, but instead is worth only 35 bushels of wheat.

It must be obvious to any student of money that whether we are on or off the gold standard we always have a managed currency. In 1919-20 we were on the orthodox gold standard, and at that time the dollar was worth only 64 cents as measured in commodities and property.

Likewise, in February 1933 we were still on the orthodox gold standard, and the same gold dollar as measured in commodities and property was worth 167 cents.

DUTY OF CONGRESS

The money question resolves itself into one issue, and that issue relates to the agency that is to manage our money. The Constitution says that the Congress shall have power to coin money and to regulate the value thereof. It is obvious that the Congress cannot perform this complicated task. The Congress works through committees, and no congressional committee has the time to devote to this all-important and highly technical matter.

matter.

The management of our money, namely, the regulation and stabilization of the value of the dollar, should be in the hands of the most capable men that the country has produced. These managers should have the most competent assistants that can be found and this task should be their first and only concern.

The Congress cannot possibly do this work, yet the Congress can create an agency to exercise its powers under a definite mandate to reach a certain and definite end.

The short and simple bill herein referred to sets forth the definite end to be reached, namely, the 100-point price level, and then provides additional power to existing Federal agencies to be used in reaching the end set forth.

While the bill is in the nature of an emergency measure, yet it is a necessary step in the matter of regulating the value of our money.

our money.

Again your committee suggests that there can be no possible return to prosperity until the value of the dollar is regulated downward, and that the sooner this is accomplished the sooner will better times come again to the people of the United States. Your committee recognizes that the Committee on Banking and Currency has jurisdiction over the subject matter embraced in S. 1855; hence, we recommend that the bill, with the suggested amendments and this committee report attached thereto, be referred to the said Banking and Currency Committee.

AMENDMENT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY ACT OF 1933

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, and I submit a report (No. 189) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be received, the bill placed on the calendar, and, without objection, the report will be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to which was referred the bill (S. 1796) to amend the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report it back to the Senate with the recommendation that said bill do pass.

The bill provides for the amendment of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, by striking out of said act sections 15 and 15a, and inserting in lieu thereof section 15.

The nurrose of the bill is to make possible the consummation of Authority Act of 1933, as amended, by striking out of said act sections 15 and 15a, and inserting in lieu thereof section 15.

The purpose of the bill is to make possible the consummation of the transaction in which the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and the Southern Tennessee Power Co. are to be purchased by the various municipalities and the Tennessee Valley Authority. All of the generating properties and transmission lines are to be purchased by the Tennessee Valley Authority. All of the distribution systems are to be purchased by the several municipalities. The negotiations for the purchase of these properties have been going on for more than a year between the Tennessee Valley Authority, on the one hand, and the Tennessee Electric Power Co. and the representatives of the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, on the other, the latter in reality being the owner of the properties to be so purchased. These properties include local distribution systems, transmission lines, and generating plants. The local distribution systems, if the plan is completed, will be purchased and operated by the various municipalities. The transmission lines and generating plants will be purchased and operated by the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Under the existing Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, the board of directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority are empowered to issue bonds and use the proceeds thereof for the construction of dams, steam plants, or any other facilities to be used for the generation and transmission lines and for making loans to municipalities and cooperative organizations for the purchase of existing transmission lines and distribution properties. The authority under the law to issue bonds for the purchase of existing generating plants is extremely doubtful. It is this defect in existing law which the proposed amendment is mainly designed to remedy. The Authority has now, under existing law, authority to issue bonds for the construction of generating plants, but there is no express au

The total amount of the bond authorization is not increased. Under existing law the Authority is authorized to issue a total of $100,000,000 in bonds. Of this total, $50,000,000 is authorized under section 15 for the construction of dams, steam plants, and other properties, and for the purchase of transmission lines, and $50,000,000 is authorized under section 15a for loans to municipalities and cooperatives. The proposed amendment merely combines these two sections into one authorization of $100,000,000, the proceeds of which may be used for the purposes already authorized under existing law and, in addition thereto, the one additional purpose of acquiring existing generating facilities.

Section 15 of the existing law provides that the bonds issued thereunder shall have all the rights and privileges of Panama Canal bonds. This provision is omitted from the proposed amendment. This omission is made because of the objection of the Treasury Department to the issuance of any more bonds having the rights and privileges of the Panama Canal bonds.

Under existing law the authority to issue bonds under section 15a The total amount of the bond authorization is not increased.

and privileges of the Panama Canal bonds.

Under existing law the authority to issue bonds under section 15a will expire on the 31st day of August, 1940. The proposed amendment would extend this time until the 1st day of January 1941. The Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation are now negotiating for the sale of some other properties now owned by the Commonwealth & Southern, and this extension of time is thought wise, in order to give more time for the perfection of such negotiations.

In trying to bring about the consummation of the agreement the perfection of such negotiations.

In trying to bring about the consummation of the agreement referred to for the sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties, there is one comparatively small hydro-generating plant, located about 50 miles from Nashville, Tenn., on a tributary of the Cumberland River. This is one of the properties included in the proposed sale. While there is no express provision in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, prohibiting the purchase of a generating plant on any stream other than the Tennessee River or any of its tributaries, it is nevertheless believed that all the powers of the Tennessee Valley Authority are confined either to the Tennessee River, or some tributary of the Tennessee River, and it is the opinion of your committee that the purchase of this one hydro-generating plant on a tributary of the Cumberland River is not authorized under existing law. The purchase of this hydroelectric plant on a tributary of the Cumberland River is of minor importance, but it is one of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and it would be unfair to expect the Tennessee Electric Power Co. to sell its entire system of generation, transmission, and distribution of electric current and not dispose of this one minor generating plant. In fact, the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, as owner of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., would not and could not be expected, in all fairness, to dispose of its other properties and have that property still remaining on its hands. its hands.

It can, therefore, fairly be stated that the proposed amendment, if enacted into law, would, in addition to the powers it now has under existing law, give to the Tennessee Valley Authority power under easing law, given as follows:

(1) To purchase this one generating plant on the tributary of the Cumberland River;

(2) To issue bonds and use the proceeds thereof in the purchase of existing generating plants as distinguished from the construction of expecting plants:

(2) To issue bonds and use the proceeds thereof in the purchase of existing generating plants as distinguished from the construction of generating plants;

(3) To extend the power to issue such bonds from the 31st day of August 1940 to the 1st day of January 1941; and

(4) To eliminate from existing law the Panama Canal bond privilege now possessed by Tennessee Valley Authority bonds issued under section 15 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

These are the only changes made in existing law.

Ever since the enactment of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act there has been a constant controversy existing in the courts between the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, representing its various subsidiaries, and a great deal of expensive litigation has been the result. The agreement reached by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the Tennessee Valley Authority to carry out this sale of the Tennessee Electric Power Co. properties would end all such controversies and do away with any possible competition between the parties. The price agreed upon for the sale of these properties amounts to $78,600,000, and has been agreed to by the representatives of the Tennessee Valley Authority and the Commonwealth & Southern. The proposed legislation is therefore agreeable to both the Tennessee Valley Authority and the private power companies. The principal objection that has always been made by the private power companies is that the Tennessee Valley Authority should purchase an entire system, such as the Tennessee Electric Power Co., at a value satisfactory to the private owner of the property, and thus refrain from doing an injury to the owner of such private electrical property. The tentative agreement of sale which the bill in question would approve meets this objection. The bill, therefore, is designed to give protection to the private owner and amend the law so that such protection can be brought about.

Therefore, the purpose of the proposed amendment is more for agreement of sate winds the bill, therefore, is designed to give protection to the private owner and amend the law so that such protection can be brought about.

Therefore, the purpose of the proposed amendment is more for the protection of the private owner of electrical facilities in the Tennessee Valley than it is for the benefit of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The price agreed upon for the sale of these properties is liberal. It is admitted by Tennessee Valley Authority officials that the price is liberal and is probably greater than the value of the property to be purchased. When it was announced after the long negotiations that had taken place that an agreement for the sale of these properties had finally been reached, such agreement was given almost universal approval by the foes, as well as the friends, of the Tennessee Valley Authority. The price was admitted to be a very liberal one even by the enemies of the Tennessee Valley Authority agreed to such liberal price on the theory that it would end all litigation and useless and unnecessary, as well as destructive, competition. The committee feel, therefore, that the passage of this bill will give satisfaction to all interested parties.

Sections 15 and 15a of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act, as amended, and which this bill would repeal, are as follows:

"Sec. 15. In the construction of any future dam, steam plant, or other facility, to be used in whole or in part for the generation or transmission of electric power the Board is hereby authorized and empowered to issue on the credit of the United States and to sell serial bonds not exceeding $50,000,000 in amount, having a maturity not more than 50 years from the date of issue thereof, and bearing interest not exceeding $50,000,000 in amount, having a maturity not more than 50 years from the date of issue thereof, and bearing interest not exceeding $50,000,000 in amount, having a be sold below par, and no fee, commission, or compensation whatever shall be paid to any person, firm, or corporation fo

Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to purchase any bonds issued hereunder, and for such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation shall be reated as public-debt transactions of the United States. The new section which the proposed bill seeks to enact into law is as follows:

"Sec. 15. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury the Corporation is authorized to issue bonds not to exceed in the aggregate $100,000,000 outstanding at any one time, which bonds may be sold by the Corporation to obtain funds for the construction or acquisition of dams with appurtenant facilities, generating plants, transmission lines, rural distribution lines, and other electric utility properties as authorized by this act, including the purchase of the electric utility properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., and for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of section 12a of this act. Such bonds shall be in such forms and denominations, shall mature within such periods not more than 50 years from the date of their issue, may be redeemable at the option of the Corporation before maturity in such manner as may be stipulated therein, shall bear such rates of interest not exceeding 3½ percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the ing 3½ percent per annum, shall be subject to such terms and conditions, shall be issued in such manner and amount, and sold at such prices, as may be prescribed by the Corporation with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That such bonds shall not be sold at such prices or on such terms as to afford an investment yield to the holders in excess of 3½ percent per annum. Such bonds shall be fully and unconditionally guaranteed both as to interest and principal by the United States, and such guaranty shall be expressed on the face thereof, and such bonds shall be lawful investments, and may be accepted as security, for all fiduciary, trust, and public funds, the investment or deposit of which shall be under the authority or control of the United States or any officer or officers thereof. In the event that the Corporation should not pay upon demand, when due, the principal of, or interest on, such bonds, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to the holder the amount thereof, which is hereby authorized to be appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and thereupon to the extent of the amount so paid the Secretary of the Treasury shall succeed to all the rights of the holders of such bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds from the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under such act, as amended, are extended to include any purchases of the Corporation's bonds hereunder. The Secretary of the Treasury may, at any time, sell any of the bonds of the Corporation acquired by him under this section. All redemptions, purchases, and sales by the Secretary of the Treasury of the bonds of the Corporation shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States. With the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall have power to purchase such bonds in the open market at any time and at any price. No bonds shall be issued hereunder to provide funds or bonds necessary for the performance of any proposed contract negotiated by the Corporation under the authority of section 12a of this act until the proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to and approved by the Federal Power Commission. When any such proposed contract shall have been submitted to the said Commission, the matter shall be given precedence and shall be in every way expedited and the Commission's determination of the matter shall be final. The authority of the Corporation to issue bonds hereunder shall expire January 1, 1941, except that such bonds may be issued at any time after the expiration of said period for refunding purposes or to provide bonds or funds necessary for the performance of any contract entered into by the Corporation, prior to the expiration of said period, under the authority of section 12a of this act."

It will thus be seen from an examination of existing law and the proposed amendment, that this bill, in effect, reenacts section 15a as it now exists, in its entirety. The only changes made therein are to give authority to "purchase" existing generating plants, as well as to "construct" generating plants, and by its terms expressly authorizes the purchase of the properties of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., which corporation now owns the one hydroelectric generating plant, above referred to, on a tributary of the Cumberland River. It also increases the amount of bonds to be issued under said section to $100,000,000, but inasmuch as the bill strikes out section 15 of the Tennessee Va Act, there is no increase in the amount of bonds which can be issued.

If this bill is enacted into law it will decrease the amount of appropriation hereafter to be made by Congress for carrying out the objects of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act to make the Tennessee River navigable to the depth of 9 feet from Knoxville, Tenn., to the mouth of the river, because all of the purchase price of the properties included in the contemplated sale will be paid for by the Tennessee Valley Authority from the moneys received from the sale of electric power to municipalities. The largest hydroelectric plant included in the properties to be sold by the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation to the Tennessee Valley Authority is the Hales bar generating plant on the Tennessee River, a short distance below Chattanooga. This is the only privately owned dam on the Tennessee River, and in order to carry out the provisions of law included in the Tennessee Valley Authority Act it will be necessary for the Tennessee Valley Authority to purchase this dam and to increase its height, or to build another navigation dam between Hales Bar and the Chickamauga Dam, located a short distance above Chattanooga. If this sale is consummated, it will therefore follow that this dam will be purchased by money received from the sale of power, instead of by appropriations from Congress. It will thus lessen appropriations necessary to be made by the price of the purchase of Hales Bar Dam, or, in lieu thereof, the cost of a navigation dam between Hales Bar and Chattanooga. It is estimated that if this contemplated contract is consummated, moneys received from the sale of power will be increased in the neighborhood of $5,000,000 per annum, with the result that the total revenue received by the Tennessee Valley Authority from the sale of electric power would be between $11,000,000 and $12,000,000 per annum.

The appropriations hereafter to be made by Congress to give effect to the Tennessee Valley Authority Act will also be greatly lessened by the purchas received from the sale of power.

Notwithstanding the liberal price to be paid for the properties included in the contemplated sale, both the friends and critics of the Tennessee Valley Authority, as well as the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, the real owner of the property to be sold, are satisfied with the price agreed upon for the sale of such properties. The elimination of potentially wasteful competition in this area would be a factor of major importance. An audit of the properties to be purchased, made by the engineers of the Tennessee Valley Authority, indicated that the value of the properties involved in the contemplated sale were not worth more than $70,000,000. The difference between this sum and the total consideration of $78,600,000 agreed upon can be regarded as the cost of eliminating this destructive competition, a competition consideration of $78,600,000 agreed upon can be regarded as the cost of eliminating this destructive competition, a competition damaging and injurious both to the Tennessee Valley Authority and to the private owner of the properties to be purchased.

It is extremely important, if this contract of purchase is to be made possible, that the legislation proposed be enacted into law as speedily as possible. Some of the municipalities in the area mentioned have already taken steps to build competing distribution systems. Such attempts are being held in abeyance, awaiting the consummation of the contract between the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation and the Tennessee Valley Authority. Chattanooga is an instance which illustrates the importance of speedy action. Something over 3 years ago, Chattanooga voted by an overwhelming majority to take Tennessee Valley Authority power, and, in order to do so, to issue bonds for the construction of a distribution system in Chattanooga, or to buy of the Tennessee Electric Power Co., through the Commonwealth & Southern Corporation, the existing distribution system in that city. Lengthy negotiations between the municipality and the Commonwealth & Southern have not resulted in the sale of in that city. Lengthy negotiations between the municipality and the Commonwealth & Southern have not resulted in the sale of the distribution system, and the municipality has already commenced the construction of a municipal distributing plant, in order that it may get the benefit of cheap Tennessee Valley Authority power. This work is being held up until it is ascertained whether the tentative contract of sale will be carried out. But the city cannot wait indefinitely, and unless the legislation proposed is speedily enacted into law, the city must of necessity go ahead with the construction of the competing distribution system in Chattanooga, which would be to the detriment both of the city and of the Tennessee Electric Power Co.

The purchase of the properties involved in this tentative sale would bring to the municipalities of a large section of Tennessee Valley the cheap electric rates of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and thus save to the citizens of more than 100 municipalities millions of dollars in the purchase price of electric current.

Since the proposed change to be brought about by the enactment of this bill into law is agreed to by the officials of the Tennessee Valley Authority, is satisfactory to the private owner of the properties to be purchased, and is likewise agreeable to the public generally, and since the bill's enactment would reduce by many millions of dollars future appropriations to be made by Congress, your committee believe the speedy enactment of the bill into law is very desirable.

VIOLATIONS OF FREE SPEECH AND RIGHTS OF LABOR (PT. 3, REPT. NO. 6)

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report (pt. 3 of Rept. No. 6) from the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, pursuant to Senate Resolution 266 of the Seventyfourth Congress, investigating violations of the right of free speech and assembly and interference with the right of labor to organize and bargain collectively, relating to industrial munitions, and ask that it be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the report submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin will be received and printed.

TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY-PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS

Mr. DONAHEY submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 7), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives con-curring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the special Joint Con-gressional Committee of the Congress appointed pursuant to Public Resolution No. 83, approved April 4, 1938, to make a full and complete investigation of the administration of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, as amended, be, and is hereby, empowered to procure the printing of 2,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the said committee during its investigation.

REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS-MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF MUNITIONS

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 8), which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas recent expressions from the administration here in Wash-Whereas recent expressions from the administration here in Washington and by constituted authorities of certain other nations make it appropriate at this time to bend every effort to avoid another general war during the present generation because such a conflict would be so deadly and such a burden for all nations that eminent authorities agree modern civilization in its present form could not survive such a catastrophe for even a few years; and

Whereas the United States of America has long pursued the policy of contributing to the furtherance of peaceful relations between various nations through its activities in the establishment of The Hague Tribunal, the furthering of the success of the Washington Conference called in this city in 1921, in its participation in the London Conference in 1930, and in addition, to other attempts, its action in the First General Conference for the Limitation of Armaments held in Congress 1932, and

FREIGHT RATES ON CERTAIN TEXAS COMMODITIES

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 108), which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission is hereby directed to make the necessary investigation and submit to the Senate tables showing existing railroad rates in this country on shipments of sulphur and sulphur products; petroleum and petroleum products; cotton and cotton products; agricultural products, natural and processed, including fruits and vegetables; poultry and peultry products; moducts made wholly or partly of steel or iron; lumber and lumber products; wool and wool products; mohair and mohair products, from points in Texas to points in freight zones to which Texas does not belong; and railroad rates on such shipments for similar distances from points in such other zones either to other points in such other zones in which Texas is located.

SALE OF COTTON ABROAD BELOW COST

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I submit a resolution which I ask to have read by the clerk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 107) was read as follows:

Whereas the world is today confronted with an international crisis of the gravest magnitude; and Whereas the market for American cotton is rapidly becoming demoralized: and

Whereas cotton is a vital commodity to national defense; and Whereas the United States Government is in possession of the largest quantity of raw cotton in the world; and Whereas there is now under consideration the disposal of American cotton to the foreign trade below the cost of production and considerably below its cost to this Government; and

Whereas such policy is fraught with the gravest dangers and injustices to the American farmers, American industry, and the national economy: Therefore be it Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that pending this world crisis no American cotton be sold to foreign purchasers at a price below the actual cost of said cotton to the Government of the United States, and that the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to negotiate no sales of American cotton to the foreign trade below its cost to this Government without the approval of the Congress.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to speak to the resolution at this moment, but to give notice that I shall bring it up at the earliest opportunity after the disposal of the pending bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, does the Senator desire the resolution to lie on the table?

Mr. GEORGE. I was about to make that request.
Mr. McNARY. May I anticipate the request? I assumed that the able Senator would ask that the resolution lie on the table. On account of its extreme importance, the fact that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] has a bill which he wishes to take up this week looking toward the export of some of our surplus cotton, the effect it will have upon loans, and otherwise, I suggest that the resolution go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, because at this time that committee is giving intense study to the very problem involved in and suggested by the resolution of the Senator from Georgia

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have very great respect for the opinion of the distinguished Senator from Oregon. but I should much prefer to have the resolution remain on the table. It will in no sense conflict with the consideration by the Senate of the bill introduced by the distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], and that is not its purpose. It is a resolution expressing it as the sense of the Senate that no sales of American cotton to foreign purchasers should be made below the cost of production pending this world crisis without reference to Congress

I should like to have the resolution remain on the table, with the assurance that I shall bring it up at the earliest possible opportunity.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I submit for the RECORD a telegram just received from the president of the Oklahoma State Cotton Exchange, supporting the George resolution. I ask that the telegram be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram is as follows:

OKIAHOMA CITY, OKIA., March 20, 1939. Senator Elmer Thomas,
Senate Office Building:

Please support George resolution being introduced Senate today, directing Secretary not negotiate sale cotton without approval

W. M. HYNDS, President, Oklahoma State Cotton Exchange.

BLOCK BOOKING AND BLIND SELLING OF MOTION-PICTURE FILMS

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Committee on Interstate Commerce be discharged from the consideration of Senate bill 280, to prohibit and to prevent the trade practices known as compulsory block booking and blind selling in the leasing of motion-picture films in interstate and foreign commerce. This bill, which I introduced on January 4, was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce on that day. On the 2d day of February the bill was referred to a subcommittee, with instructions to conduct hearings thereon. But these instructions have not been obeyed. This motion must, under the rule, lie over 1 day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will lie over, under the rule.

NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT-ADDRESS BY SENATOR BURKE

PHILIPPINE INDEPENDENCE—EDITORIAL FROM NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE

[Mr. Gibson asked and obtained leave to have printed in the Record an editorial from the New York Herald Tribune on the subject of Philippine independence, which appears in the Appendix.]

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4425) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, before the Senate adjourned on Friday last I requested that subdivision (b) of section 3 of the pending bill go over until today. At that time the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] was attempting to correct or modify the subdivision by some committee amendments. Will the Senator proceed along that line now, so that we may offer individual amendments?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator will pardon the Chair a moment, the Chair will ask the clerk to state the first amendment passed over by unanimous consent.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, line 18, it is proposed to strike out the words "United States Employees' Compensation Commission."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will reject that amendment. I briefly expressed my view on that subject on Friday. I thought the able Senator having the bill in charge was willing to have the amendment rejected.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I stated that I did not think the Senate should reject the pending amendment. I said I was going to ask the Senate to reject the amendment as to the Tariff Commission.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am somewhat confused about the situation. For many years the distinguished Senator from South Carolina has specialized in the field of administration mechanics. He has a bill, with which I am more or less familiar, known as Senate bill 1265. On page 12 of that bill he attempts to transfer the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board. In view of the fact that we are treating of the United States Compensation Commission, would the Senator be willing to include the United States Employment Service in the class exempted under the section we are now considering?

Mr. BYRNES. To include it in the exempting provision? Mr. McNARY. In the Senator's bill, which is now being considered by the select commmittee of which he is chairman, he attempts to transfer the United States Employment Service to the Social Security Board—a proposal which in itself has brought about much opposition in the country from organized labor and the employers of organized labor. Inasmuch as we are treating the subject of the employment situation and the service situation, would the Senator be willing to place in the section of this bill which we are now considering, subdivision (b) of section 3, a provision exempting the United States Employment Service from any Executive order that may be made by the President which would bring about a consolidation of that Service with another service?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I certainly should not be willing to make an agreement of that kind. As to the bill to which the Senator refers, on which hearings have been held, and with regard to which he and I know there is considerable difference of opinion, I will say that it was the thought of the Senator from South Carolina that whenever that bill is considered the committee will give consideration to the testimony, and determine whether or not, if the Unemployment Compensation Commission and the Employment Service are merged, they should be put in the Department of Labor, or in the Social Security Board, or in a public-works department, as urged by the Senator from Arizona. As a result of the hearings, the Senator from South Carolina will certainly enter into the consideration of that question with a more open mind than he had on the subject 6 weeks ago.

I see no reason at all why one bureau of one department should be exempted in this bill, and placed on an entirely different status from all other bureaus. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that the other bill has nothing to do with the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. I presume the Senator is discussing that matter only in connection with this one.

Mr. McNARY. I recognize the dissimilarity of the two agencies; but I am somewhat unhappy because the bill which is now being studied by the Senator's committee is in the nature of a reorganization bill, in that it deals with the creation of a new department of government and the transfer of a number of agencies.

Among those is the agency I now mention. In the bill providing for complete reorganization now pending broad functions are given to the President to abolish or transfer these agencies and the functions thereof. There is tremendous opposition throughout the country, as I view it, to placing the United States Employment Service under the Social Security Board. I thought we might meet that situation and remove all doubt by specifying in the pending measure that this agency of the Government should not be transferred. The purpose of the section we are now studying is to impose an inhibition against the employment of the executive functions of the Government to transfer any of these agencies, and the whole question can be settled now and forever if we include the agency mentioned by me in the subdivision we are now considering.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I certainly should not be willing to agree to that under any circumstances. While it is true that a number of persons have testified that they prefer that the Employment Service should remain in the Department of Labor, there has not been one man who has given any study to the subject, there has not been a single witness, who has not said that if the United States Employment Service is ever to amount to anything, that Service and the Employees' Compensation Commission must be tied together. I have stated time and again in the committee, and have said so publicly in a statement, that I care not where it goes, except that I believe that in the interest of efficiency and in the interest of the workers of the Nation there should be one door through which a worker can go to report that he is out of a job, register for another job, and in the same place and at the same time file his claim for unemployment compensation; that he should not be made to run all around the town, to one office here and another office there, to different officials, presenting his case. So long as both services are placed in one bureau, I do not care in what department they are included. The Senator from Arizona urges with considerable force that they should be put into the Public Works Department, and I believe that matter certainly should be left to the consideration of the committee. I shall approach it with an open mind, and I think that the Senator will upon consideration agree with all of the witnesses. Even the Secretary of Labor made the statement before the committee that she was firmly of the opinion that the services should be put together; that she preferred that they should be placed in the Department of Labor; but that in the interest of the worker, and in the interest of the taxpayer, too, those two activities should be put together.

I hope the Senator from Oregon will not attempt to exempt this agency and provide that it shall never be touched, and place the Employment Service in the same status with the quasi-judicial organizations.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have great respect for the able Senator, who is in charge of the two bills to which I have referred, and I shall not attempt to direct his course. If he desires to make two separate issues, one in the consideration of the pending bill, and one in the consideration of the bill to come later, I shall yield to his wishes in the matter

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator frankly that nothing specific is said about the matter. We give the power to abolish or transfer. We do not know what power the President will exercise under the measure. When it comes to the four organizations referred to in the bill to which the Senator has made reference, W. P. A. and P. W. A., the Employment Service, and the Employees' Compensation Commission we might have the notion that Congress itself will act on the matter, and if it does not think they should go in, it would be entirely satisfactory to me. If it is thought they should go into the Department of Labor, that will be entirely satisfactory to me.

I must say that since the hearings have started on the bill I have seen many reasons why the Employment Service should be left in the Department of Labor, provided we place the Employees' Compensation Commission there, or that it might be put in Public Works. My only interest is to put the two together, so that the worker will have one place where he can go and present his claims.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President-

Mr. McNARY. I shall be very happy to yield in just a

It would meet my notion better if the activity were covered in subdivision (b), but I shall not make the issue here, if it is the pleasure of the able Senator to have it raised in connection with the other bill. I shall be guided by his wishes in the matter, so I shall not again refer to it.

Mr. BYRNES. I hope the Senator will follow that course. I have indicated to him that I am open-minded on the subject.

Mr. McNARY. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.
Mr. HATCH. In view of the agreement which has just been reached between the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from South Carolina, there is no occasion for my interrupting further.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. In the matter of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, this Commission was exempted by the House committee and by the action of the House. By the committee amendment it has now been excluded from the agencies exempted from the possibility of an Executive order, which implies that the present President, or some future President, may change the location of this agency of government.

I have received many protests in the last few days about excluding this Commission from the exempted list, and I should like to know from the able Senator what reason he has in mind which makes him so tenaciously cling to his view that the Employees' Compensation Commission should remain the target of any President who wishes to issue an Executive order.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I have no objection to telling the Senator at this point the reasons which actuated me in suggesting this course in the committee.

I have no information from anyone connected with the administration that the President has any idea of issuing any order about this Commission. I may say for the benefit of other Senators that I have never conferred with the President about the pending bill since December 7 last, and neither then nor at any other time has the President indicated to me what ideas he has had in mind about a reorganization plan.

The fact is that the Employees' Compensation Commission has three duties. One has reference to the Longshoremen's Act. Under that act the Commission performs no quasijudicial duty. Certain civil-service employees who are known as deputy commissioners are charged with the investigation of claims, and in the report of the Employees' Compensation Commission for the year ending June 30, 1938, this is what is said of that work:

Claims are handled by the deputy commissioner for the compensation district in which the injury occurred, and hearings are provided for where requested by any party in interest or deemed necessary by the deputy commissioner. A compensation order awarding compensation or rejecting a claim becomes final after 30 days from the filing of such order by the deputy commissioner. Within certain limitations—that is, on the ground of a change in conditions or on the ground of a mistake in a determination of facts, a deputy commissioner may review a compensation case at any time prior to 1 year after the date of the last payment. * *

No review by the Commission of the action of the deputy commissioner upon a claim is provided for in either act.

Therefore, under the law the Commission has no power to review the action of a commissioner, and it means simply the determination by an agent, a civil-service employee, in the field of a case or an action.

There is no department of government which has not the power to consider claims for damages not exceeding $1,000. Such claims are considered every day in the Navy Department, the Department of Agriculture, and the Interior Department, and no one would think of saying that the claims divisions of the departments should be exempted from consideration. They are on the same status with the activity provided for here as to everything except Government employees. The only other function is the determination of claims of Government employees. If we take the claims by Government employees, we find that most of their cases now come under the emergency acts.

The number of new cases reported during the fiscal year 1938 under the Employees' Compensation Act was 37,000, but the Works Progress Administration had 188,150. They consider claims for injury to a truck or to an individual. I saw no reason why this activity should be placed in a class with the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or any of the other agencies which are set forth. I admit that when I read the Record of the House proceedings, and saw that the gentlemen on the Republican side of the House asked those in charge of the bill how in the world the Employees' Compensation Commission got into the exempted class along with these other agencies, and the Representatives in charge of the bill did not give an explanation satisfactory to me, I thought the organization should be excluded.

I have no idea that the President would ever touch it, but he might transfer to the Department of Labor the administration of the Longshoremen's Act, which is administered by deputies in the field, and thereby save some money. He might transfer to the Civil Service Commission the consideration of the claims of Government employees, instead of having a separate commission with offices and a library and a counsel and all of the other incidents which go to make up the expenses of a commission. That was my reason.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will reject the amendment. I ask unanimous consent at this point to have read into the RECORD a telegram I have received from Mr. William Green, the president of the American Federation of Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1939.

Senator McNARY

Senate Office Building:

In behalf of the officers and members of the American Federation Labor, I earnestly request that the United States Employees'
Labor, I earnestly request that the United States Employees' of Labor, I earnestly request that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission be maintained as a separate, independent organization. I urge that the action of the House of Representatives regarding this administrative body be approved by the Senate. We are strongly opposed to the provision which was incorporated in the reorganization bill by action of the Senate which provides that the Employees' Compensation Commission may be merged by order of the President with other governmental departments. Because of the public service the Compensation Commission rendered to Government employees, we are firmly of the opinion that it should be maintained as a separate, independent administrative body. administrative body.

WILLIAM GREEN President, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, addressing myself to the language on page 3, lines 18 and 19, which was discussed by the able Senator from Oregon, and without any desire to hold the Senate for any great length of time, I wish to draw attention to the fact that labor throughout the entire country is today opposed to having the particular Commission in question transferred to any other agency, which may result in affecting, reducing, or destroying the functions of the Commission as labor has recognized those functions during the existence of the Commission.

Mr. President, there is nothing which more closely touches or is in more intimate relations with the toiler of America today than that which affects him when he is afflicted and comes under the provisions of this particular Commission as it was set up and as it has functioned. So for that reason, as expressed by the telegram from the president of the American Federation of Labor which was just read, labor is interested today that the Employees' Compensation Commission shall not be included in any other department, where sight may be lost of its functions.

From the expressions of the able Senator from South Carolina it is quite apparent that he does not know to what particular branch of the Government the Commission in question might be transferred by an Executive order. That lack of knowledge on his part is the very thing which arouses labor today to oppose anything that would take the Commission out of its position as an independent agency.

Especially is that so in view of the fact that Congress, under the provisions of the bill as it now stands, will have no say whatever as to what may be the future history of any particular agency in which labor may be interested.

We are now addressing ourselves to labor; we are addressing ourselves to the position in which a laborer finds himself when he becomes afflicted. For that reason I trust that the amendment offered by the committee may not be sustained by the Senate, and I shall ask for a record vote upon the amend-

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I have received a number of letters and telegrams from labor organizations and labor representatives in my State opposing the amendment of the committee to strike the Employees' Compensation Commission from the exempted list. They say they are well satisfied with the way the Employees' Compensation Commission is now administered. They say they do not know where it may be placed. The Senator from South Carolina also says he does not know where it may be placed. If they knew where it was going to be placed they might take a different attitude toward the proposal, but so long as they do not know, and they are satisfied with it as it is, they want it to stay where it is, and do not want us to take the chance of its being placed in the Securities and Exchange Commission, or under the Social Security Board, or some other board or commission.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to say only one word in response to what has just been said, and that is that Congress, of course, has no information that the Commission will ever be touched. Should it ever be included in any order Congress will have an opportunity to express its disapproval.

Mr. McCARRAN. I ask the able Senator from South Carolina upon what he bases that statement, in view of the fact that Congress, under the provisions of the pending measure, is excluded from all voice.

Mr. BYRNES. On the specific provision that any order which comes to the Senate will not become effective if the Congress-merely the House and Senate-by a resolution

Mr. McCARRAN. Those are not the terms of the bill as it now stands before the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Oh, yes. Those are exactly the provisions of the bill. Unless the Senate and the House disapprove it, the order becomes effective. So the House and the Senate, without the action of the President, can disapprove

Mr. McCARRAN. That is the point to which some of us are addressing ourselves, and will address ourselves later on. The bill provides that unless there be affirmative legislative action, a reorganization plan becomes effective by the executive order of the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment on page 3, line 18.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President-

Mr. McNARY. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum, but I see the Senator from Illinois has risen, and withhold the suggestion for a moment.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question of the able Senator from South Carolina, the chairman of the committee and in charge of the bill. He is discussing the pending amendment of the committee, which provides for removing the particular labor agency completely out of jurisdiction of the Labor Department.

Mr. BYRNES. No, Mr. President, the pending amendment really has nothing to do with the Labor Department. The amendment has reference to a commission known as the Employees' Compensation Commission. As I have said, so far as I know no one has any knowledge that the Employees' Compensation Commission would be touched by anyone in any reorganization plan. The statement of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] was that he did not want to have the Employees' Compensation Commission eliminated from section 3, which exempts a number of agencies.

He wanted the Commission exempted. The Senator from South Carolina, as previously indicated, has no interest in the matter at all except to say that he believes that it is one Commission concerning which, if the President or anyone else was reorganizing the Government, he might well say, "Here are two activities of a labor character which belong in the Department of Labor, and should be placed there, and one activity looking to the Government employees that might be placed in the Civil Service Commission." I do not think it is a matter of much importance. The number of employees involved is relatively small. In any event any reorganization plan which may be adopted will not save much money. I am content to have the Senate express its views upon the question without a roll call.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the leader of the minority. Do they conceive that the amendment removes certain labor elements from the administration of the Labor Department and transfers them to some new department?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the provision adopted by the House would prevent the inclusion of the Employees' Compensation Commission from any Presidential order. The Commission was placed by the House in the class of agencies with respect to which Executive action may not be taken. By the removal of the exemption the Commission can be transferred from one department to the other by an order of the President. That is what organized labor does not want, because it does not know to what agency it will be transferred. So I am asking that the Senate reject the amendment so that the Commission will remain in the prohibited class against which an Executive order cannot be

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Illinois that the amendment has absolutely no reference to the Department of Labor. The Employees' Compensation Commission has a relatively small number of employees. It has jurisdiction over and can make determination with respect to claims of longshoremen. It has jurisdiction over claims of certain persons in the District of Columbia, which claims are determined under the law by a deputy commissioner. The law provides that if anyone is aggrieved with the decision of the deputy commissioner he may ask for a review, not by the Commission but by the courts. That is why it seemed to me to be a function which really belonged in the Department of Labor.

If I were reorganizing governmental departments, I would take that function and put it in the Department of Labor, and I would take the function of handling the employees of the Government and put it in the Civil Service Commission which has to do with all governmental employees. That would be my idea of how to do it, simply in the interest of efficiency.

I have not the slightest idea that anyone connected with the American Federation of Labor had the opportunity to go into the question along that particular line. I do not have to have second sight to know that the members of the Employees' Compensation Commission are just as human as are the members of any other commission in Washington, and within the last few days nearly every person connected with the Commission in Washington has been writing, and I am sure the Senator has had a chance to see the telegrams and letters on the subject. He has undoubtedly received telegrams from people in Washington, and from people in his home State. One who has a job in the Government is likely to say, "Well, there is not anything in that bill about me, but I do not know. They might reorganize here and merge, and I might be out of a job. There might be done just what the Senator from South Carolina says; an Executive order might turn over to the Labor Department longshoremen's claims, and turn the employees' claims over to the Civil Service Commission. If that were done, what would become of me? I would have to go home and practice law." He is convinced that he was drafted out of his law practice into the position he now holds. He did not want any job here; he was simply drafted out of his job; and now an unpatriotic Government, failing to recognize the importance of his services, will cause him to lose his job, and it just ought not to be done. So then he goes to some friend in the American Federation of Labor and says to him, "Save me. Send a telegram saying that you are opposed to it." I will wager that my dear friend, William Green, as busy as he is with important things, had not the slightest idea what was behind the whole matter. But I know how those things occur. I have my desk filled with telegrams from bankers and building and loan associations. If we quit taking affirmative action simply because we receive requests of this nature there will never be any reorganization. That is the trouble with such matters.

Mr. LEWIS. Does the Senator from South Carolina assume that there is no foundation for the fears expressed by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran]?

Mr. BYRNES. I think the Senator from Nevada is perfectly sincere. He has received a telegram. I know that the man who sent the telegram and gave him the information was sincere. I know what has happened during the recess of the Senate. Of course, members of the Commission would not send a telegram directly to me or to any other Senator, because they fear that if they did so they would get into trouble. So they go outside the Commission, to the fellow who has been asking them to do favors for him, and they say, "Whom can we persuade to get behind Senators and Representatives?"

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. If the telegram read by the Senator from Oregon bears the same date as the telegram which I received. and is of the same import, it was sent long before the time referred to by the Senator.

Mr. BYRNES. I know how such things occur.

The next thing I heard was from a man who has had considerable business with the Commission and who represents quite an extensive national interest. He began sending telegrams throughout the country, and almost immediately half a dozen Senators telephoned me that they had received twoand three-page telegrams, and asked me what it was all about.

We frequently receive such communications. Those who send such messages are obliged to do so in return for the favors done for them. Later the lobbyist will come back and say, "When you were in trouble, old sport, I helped you out,

I want you to do this for me."

We might as well understand how the executive departments act. The members of the Commission persuade their friends to act in their behalf, and the friends are obliged

So far as the particular question under consideration is concerned, I will say to the Senator that it is immaterial to me. There is nothing in the bill which says anything about merging the employees of any particular commission. The United States Employees' Compensation Commission is left in the same category with every other department of the Government. I have sufficient confidence in the President to feel that in a matter of this kind, if the Commission is performing a duty which should be performed as an independent agency, he will leave it as an independent agency. However, if he moves it, he never could move half of it anywhere except into the Labor Department. If Mr. Green knew the situation I think he would be in favor of the amendment. He could not know where the Commission might go. Government commissions and agencies do not want to be touched, because those at the top are afraid they will lose their jobs. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief comment on the amendment. If it had not been for the fact that the House exempted the United States Employees' Compensation Commission from the operation of the bill, we probably would not have heard of this situation. The House exempted the Commission. For the reasons stated by the Senator from South Carolina, the committee felt that it was not a sufficiently important agency to take a position alongside the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Federal Trade Commission. The committee felt that it was not entitled to exemption from the power of the President to consolidate or to transfer it.

I agree with the Senator from South Carolina that it is not very material one way or the other what we do with respect to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission. I doubt very much if any money will be saved whether it is left where it is or whether it is transferred to the Department of Labor or to some other department. I do not think the question is important enough for us to get into a row over it. As a member of the committee, I will say that, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly satisfied to join the Senator from South Carolina and have the Senate vote on the question by viva voce vote. If the Senate decides to reject the amendment, we on the committee will accept the decision as an expression of the opinion of the Senate. I think we might as well vote on the amendment with that understanding.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am so much opposed to the multiplicity of agencies and departments that I believe they should be consolidated wherever possible. I am very much in sympathy with the position taken by my friend from Nevada [Mr. McCarran]; but I believe labor would fare better if this agency were placed in the Department of Labor than if it were to remain as an independent agency. If it were transferred to some organization hostile to labor, such action would be most inappropriate. However, I am sure that if any change is made it would be assigned to the Department of Labor, and I think that action would be to the advantage of the beneficiaries of the act.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I shall vote against the committee amendment. Inasmuch as my reasons may not be considered adequate by other Senators, I wish briefly to state those reasons.

If I had my way about it, Mr. President, I would not have any exemptions. I would vote for a motion to strike subsection (b) out of the bill entirely, so that there would not be any exemptions. I do not know why it is feared that certain bureaus or certain offices in the Government are in danger of being injured or obliterated by a reorganization bill. Everybody wants a reorganization bill. The committee has reported a bill which exempts from reorganization certain agencies, bureaus, and offices named in subsection (b) on page 3 of the bill. I am not fully informed as to the duties and jurisdictions of the various exempted agencies. I do not suppose any Senator knows them all in detail.

However, in a general way, in my judgment, many of them ought not to be exempted, for the reasons which have here-tofore been given. So far as I have heard the reasons given, they would entirely disqualify from exemption more than half of the commissions included in subsection (b), if we were to apply the same reasoning to them that is now being applied to the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

If we are to exempt any agency, it seems to me the United States Employees' Compensation Commission ought to be exempted. It seems to me there is more reason for exempting it than for exempting many of the others included in the list of exemptions.

For these reasons, inadequate though they may appear to some, I shall vote against the committee amendment with respect to this particular agency. If we are to exempt other agencies which have not as good reasons to be exempted as has the United States Employees' Compensation Commission, then I wish to leave the Commission in the exempted list.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. How many employees and officers are there in the Commission?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. Can the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] tell us how many officers and employees there are in the United States Employees' Compensation Commission?

Mr. BYRNES. I do not know the exact number. I can obtain the information for the Senator. The Commission spends $500,000 for administrative expenses. I do not know the number of employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. I imagine that no very great saving could be made in any event.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think there would be any great saving, whether or not we exempted this particular agency. If there were no exemptions, I should not assume that the President of the United States would do anything radical or wrong in readjusting the agencies of the Government, which we wish to consolidate as much as possible.

I believe the President is just as anxious as are we to economize and to do nothing in the reestablishment, relocation, or remodeling of any of the agencies which would be detrimental to the public service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I shall be glad to yield in a moment. If we are to draw the distinction which the Senator from South Carolina said the other day was drawn—for which I admit there is some reason—so as to exempt quasi-judicial agencies, and if that is the guide by which we are to act, under that definition I think there are reasons why the United States Employees' Compensation Commission should be exempted. Personally I would not exempt any of them, because I think the only way to get a scientific readjustment and realinement of agencies of the Federal Government is to have no exemptions. Now I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is a great deal of force in what the Senator from Nebraska says; I am inclined to agree with him that probably there ought not to be any exemptions; but, as the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] explained in his address the other day, it is a condition and not a theory that we face. Every time there has been a reorganization bill before either House of Congress someone has expressed a fear that the President was going to remove this division or this bureau or that bureau from where it is and place it under some other jurisdiction.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Take, for instance, the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, which is a part of the Army. I dare say not a President of the United States who ever served or one who ever will serve would take the Army engineers out of the Army and out of the War Department. That is where the Army engineers belong; they are part of the Army.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course they are.

Mr. BARKLEY. They are a part of the military set-up. Yet someone was so fearful that some President might take the Army engineers out of the Army and put them somewhere else that the Army engineers were included in exemptions.

Mr. NORRIS. I concede, I will say to the Senator from Kentucky, if exemptions are to be provided the Army engineers are entitled to be exempted, but I think that can be said of every other agency of the Federal Government.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am inclined to agree with the Senator. Of course, the large list of exemptions found in the bill was included, I should say, in the House originally and has been agreed to, in the main, by the committee of the Senate in order to avoid controversies, some of them over moot questions, in order to get a bill through. It is a practical situation.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the theory on which the bill is drawn, and that is what the Senator from South Carolina very frankly admitted last week, that the exemptions were put in in order to pass the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should say that there is probably just as little likelihood of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission being transferred to some department as there is that the engineers of the Army will be taken out of the Army and put in the Navy or the Labor Department or anywhere else. So it is not at all difficult to put the United States Employees' Compensation Commission on a parity with some of the agencies that are exempted, although not all of them.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose someone could become very much excited on the theory that, under this bill, if we should not exempt the Army engineers the President might put the Army engineers under the United States Employees' Compensation Commission; that would be possible; everyone has got to admit that, I think; or the President might put them under the Navy Department. That is possible. He might do all these things.

Mr. BARKLEY. If any President did that, I think the very fact that he did so foolish a thing might raise some question as to his qualifications for the other duties that are incumbent upon him.

Mr. NORRIS. It certainly would. It seems to me that the best thing to do is to have no exemptions; but, no matter whether we have them or not, if we leave any bureau or agency unexempted we have got to have sufficient confidence in the President to think that he will not make a fool of himself.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. I was going to say that I agree entirely with the Senator; but, if we are going to have some exemptions, why not exempt other bureaus? Here is the Reclamation Bureau. I agree that there should not be any exemptions, but the reason why people are demanding and asking for exemptions is that they are concerned as to what might happen; and then we would find ourselves in such a position that one branch of Congress might say that a given plan was all right and the other branch of Congress, the Senate of the United States, might say it was all wrong; but it would still be a law. That is the thing creating the fear; that is why if the fears for a particular agency are sufficiently powerful it has been exempted, and if they are not sufficiently powerful it has not been exempted. The whole legislation is based upon the wrong theory.

Mr. NORRIS. I think it is. If there were no exemptions, Mr. President, I would feel more like supporting the amendment of the Senator from Montana, for whatever may be said about it it is more logical, it seems to me, than is subsection (b) which provides many exemptions without any reason for the exemptions that do not apply to the other bureaus and agencies that are left out of the exempted list. If we should undertake to draw a line, as the Senator from South Carolina said the other day, and exempt semijudicial agencies, while I do not believe that is necessary or desirable, we would have to say, it seems to me, if we were fair, that there was a reason given, and if we thought the reason was sufficient we ought to support it. As to this particular agency, I think that reason would leave it in the exempted class. I think it is a semijudicial agency, though not to the same extent as are some of the others that are in the exempted class. But if we are going to base our action on that theory, then it seems to me we ought to exempt it. although, it is conceded, I think, by all that its importance is probably overestimated.

I have mentioned the entire exempted list because when we put them all together the proposal becomes very important, for I think the exemptions take away, to a very great extent, from the good effect that this bill might have if it did not contain the exemptions.

I do not believe we are justified, Mr. President, in exempting agencies merely for the purpose of getting votes of Senators and Members of the House of Representatives. It makes me think somewhat of the old public buildings bills and rivers and harbor bills which always went through the Congress because they were built up on the basis that every Member of Congress had a piece of pie in the measure, and his votes for everything were secured on that account. Fundamentally it is wrong. So far as I am concerned, I would rather see reorganization defeated entirely than to have it passed in an emasculated form; but, so long as we are in the exemption business, this particular agency, in my opinion, is much more entitled to be exempted than are a great many others that are in the exempted class in the bill as now framed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me that if it were possible to determine the manner in which Congress is to have control over reorganization, it would be much easier to vote on these matters. If we could vote on the Wheeler amendment in advance of determining these exemptions, some of us would know better what we should do. In other words, I am interested in knowing what control Congress is going to have over reorganization. If, as a matter of fact, an affirmative vote by Congress is to be required in order to approve a reorganization plan, there is no need for any exemptions in the bill. On the other hand, if such a plan will go into effect unless there is an affirmative vote by both Houses, a different situation is presented. I do not know that it would be agreeable, but if the consideration of the Wheeler amendment could be advanced ahead of the committee amendments in subsection (b) of section 3, and the question of what control Congress is to have over any proposed reorganization could be decided, it would be much easier for us to decide the question now presented.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. So far as I am concerned, if the Congress had the right by affirmative vote to say whether or not the reorganization of this particular bureau or that particular bureau should take place, then I would say that I would be perfectly willing that all the exemptions should be stricken from the bill, because, after all, the Congress then would have the right to say whether the exemption should be made. Why should a little group say, "We want to be exempted," and why should some other group say, "We want to be exempted"?

The President ought to send a reorganization plan to the Congress, and say, perhaps, that this commission should be reorganized and that one should be reorganized and this bureau should be reorganized, because such action would save money and result in more efficient and effective government. Then the Congress should vote affirmatively upon such a plan. If the bill were in such a form, then I would say take out all the exemptions and put all agencies upon an equal footing when they come before the Congress of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I would not disagree with the Senator's contention; indeed, if we should adopt the Wheeler amendment, I think it would be perfectly proper to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill except the Wheeler amendment, because the Wheeler amendment simply says to the President, "You can send a message to Congress on the subject of reorganization." The Constitution of the United States already gives him that power; today the President can send a message making any recommendation he pleases about any agencies, and when it is sent here a bill has to be acted upon. I agree that if the Wheeler amendment is adopted we can strike out all the remainder of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I have this feeling as to reorganization: As the Senator from South Carolina has told us, we have talked reorganization ever since I have been here and it was talked long before I came here; the Senator from South Carolina in the other House urged reorganization, but there is one thing that has never been done either by Congress or the President and that is to submit a plan of reorganization in detail. We have always debated the question as to who was going to do the reorganizing.

I know that the Wheeler amendment, if adopted, would simply put reorganization upon the basis of every other piece of legislation. The President recommends to us day by day legislation which he favors and we then pass upon it.

I am not clear why there should be any difference in reference to reorganization. I do not think it is a sound, complete criticism of a reorganization bill that we ask the President to make a recommendation to us, as he does in reference to the Army, in reference to the Navy, in reference to our currency, in reference to agriculture, and in reference to every other thing that comes before the Congress. In those respects the President exercises his constitutional function to make recommendations to us. In this measure we seek to do something different—to delegate authority, and to tie our hands to pass upon the result of the delegation.

It seems to me Congress could well work out a plan of reorganization; but we have not done it. We say to the President, "You work it out"; and the President says, "You give me the authority, and I will work out the details." Apparently, there never has been a willingness on the part of the Executive or of the Congress to work out a practical, detailed plan of reorganization; but we are arguing back and forth as to who is to do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. Yes.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that which he already knows—that under the Bureau of the Budget bill, passed away back in 1922, the President was given unlimited power to organize and reorganize many of the branches of the Government. He has failed to do so, but he still has that power. I do not know why we should accord to him a disposition to do more in the future, when he has failed to exercise the authority which has been given to him in the past.

Mr. ADAMS. I will say to the Senator from Utah that the President has had the opportunity, and Congress has had the opportunity, and we have both failed. In other words, we all say that reorganization is desirable, but we do not set about doing it; and there are very practical reasons why we do not do it. If we set about a wholesale reorganization, we bring in enough bureaus and enough outside influences to destroy every effort we make.

Congress naturally wants to put the burden back on the Executive, because, if we cut out the functions or the personnel of a bureau, down upon us come all the friends of the bureau; but I think we ought not to shirk our burden.

I do not think it is an answer to the need for reorganization for us to ask that authority be finally left in the Congress to assume the burden. We cannot delegate the power to pass legislation. There is no way in which we can do that. Bills which we pass, conferring powers upon the Executive, are sustained only when we lay down the rule that is to be applied. We cannot validly delegate the power to reorganize, any more than we can delegate to the President the taxing power.

We might say in an act of Congress, "The President of the United States shall levy such taxes as he thinks are in the public interest, and when he submits his tax measure to Congress it shall become effective unless by a concurrent resolution of both Houses it shall be disapproved"; but no one would contend that such a measure would be valid, because we cannot escape our responsibility. So, if we are not only going to give the President the power but are going to ask him to make a recommendation, I do not like to see us tie our own hands. I doubt if we can do it effectively.

Within the past few weeks we enacted a law in which we said to the President, "If you find certain things, we invite you to make a recommendation for the appropriation of additional money." The President did not wait long to take advantage of the invitation to make the request. If he has a definite plan for reorganization, I suggest that he set about doing greatly needed things. I am anxious to go ahead and have a reorganization which will be effective in increasing the efficiency of our governmental agencies, in reducing personnel, and in reducing expenses; and I am sure a majority of the Senate and of the House will sustain any reasonably fair reorganization plan. Apparently, by reason of numbers, we lack the ability to work out the details; but for that reason should we shirk the responsibility?

So, personally believing in reorganization and believing in the good faith of the Senate, I expect to vote for the Wheeler amendment if that shall be brought up first; and I shall then vote to leave to the President absolute and complete power, and cut out all of the exemptions from his recommendation

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I summon the able Senator from Colorado to reflect upon his observation to this extent: If there should be carried out the intimation made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER], and other Senators on the floor, including the Senator from Colorado, that the President should at once send down his designation of what bureaus are to be merged out and what particular ones are to take their places as substitutes, promptly what would arise? There would arise what heretofore arose in a similar case: Eminent Senators on this floor would promptly rise to accuse the President of the United States of seeking to make a dictator of himself. It would be said that he assumed to direct what should be done when he knew that it was the duty and privilege of Congress to do it. It would be said that he was seeking to usurp the functions of the Senate; that he was seeking to subordinate Congress, and seeking to constitute himself the supreme dictatorial power. That is the form of utterance which would come if such suggestions as the able Senators have made should be followed by the President of the United States.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I will yield in a moment, if the Senator will pardon me. I think the answer to the able Senator from Illinois is that it is not the President of the United States who is seeking to usurp powers. It is the Congress that is seeking to give him certain powers. The question we are discussing is, What powers we are going to give the President, whether or not we propose to make him a dictator; not that he proposes to assume authority, but what are we going to do? Are we going to delegate our authority or are we going to abdicate it? That is all that is involved in this matter.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ADAMS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course there is nothing in any statement made by the able Senator from Colorado, or by me, which would indicate that we thought that anything the President was doing, or that anyone was seeking, was designed to make him a dictator. There is no intimation of that kind; and it seems to me unfortunate that we cannot legislate upon the floor of the Senate without that charge being brought into the matter in one way or another.

What we are now asking is that the Congress of the United States act in accordance with the Constitution of the United States. We are asking only that Congress legislate in the manner provided by the Constitution. I submit to the able Senator from the State of Illinois that when any lawyer who looks into the question will say, as Attorney General Mitchell said when President Hoover's bill was under consideration, that if the power is retained in one branch of the Congress to kill legislation by voting against it, such a course is unconstitutional. Legislation delegating legislative powers to the President is unconstitutional. And that is what we are doing-delegating to the executive branch of government the power to abolish functions of office and repeal laws, and then say that if one branch of the Congress approves the President's action and the other branch does not, it shall become the law. What lawyer upon the floor of the Senate will rise in his place and say that that would be constitutional? The fact that we con-demn that practice on the part not of President Roosevelt but of any President of the United States, whoever he may be, and say it is unconstitutional, furnishes no ground for saying that we charge any President with wishing to become

As I understand, the President is not asking for this legislation. This is legislation which was drafted in the House of Representatives and by that body sent over here. I submit that it is unconstitutional and is contrary to every fundamental principle of American Government.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana forgets, I dare say, in the pressure of things occurring intermediately, what were the exact charges made against the President when the previous measure called the reorganization bill was pending in this body. The able Senator from Montana will not forget his own utterances, and the fears expressed on his own part and on the part of others that the President, in assuming to put this department and another department together and turn them into one, was creating for himself a power which gave to him peculiar arbitrary rights which were in violation of his own rights and those of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. I have never made the statement upon the floor of the Senate—

Mr. LEWIS. Where did the Senator make it?

Mr. WHEELER. I have never made the statement, either on the floor of the Senate or off the floor of the Senate, that the President of the United States was seeking dictatorial powers. I appreciate the fact that some Senators tried to put those words in my mouth, but never at any time have I said that; and I challenge the Senator to go back and read the Record and find any such utterance on my part.

Mr. LEWIS. If the Senator says so, I take his word, of course.

Mr. WHEELER. I challenge the Senator to go back and read the Record and find any place where I ever made the statement that the President of the United States wanted to become a dictator. I did say, and I repeat, that the people of the United States are jittery. I did say that we have given the present President of the United States more power that we have ever given to any other President in peacetimes. I did say, and I repeat, that the Congress of the United States ought to exercise its functions under the Constitution as the forefathers drafted the Constitution. We ought to have the intestinal stamina to stand up here and say that we can legislate. How can we expect the people of the State of Illinois, or the people of the State of Michigan, or the people of the other States of the Union, to trust parliamentary government if we ourselves assert that we cannot trust ourselves to legislate honestly?

Mr. LEWIS. What is all this talk I hear, this contradictory palaver around me constantly, assuming that the President is usurping something, always assuming that he is doing something offensive to the Constitution? It is asked Why does he not choose the executive departments he asks to have consolidated and those he asks to have abolished and send the list to the Congress? This has been constantly asserted, and now it is asserted that if he did so, he would be wholly within his rights, after he has been condemned completely because it is assumed he should have done so.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that we stand on the floor of the Senate and say to the executive branch. "If you want some legislation, why do you not send a message to Congress and state what you want? Why do you not send your recommendations here?" The President has sent his recommendations to Congress upon every piece of legislation, practically, which he has desired. No one has criticized the President of the United States for sending recommendations to Congress. On the other hand, some Senators have stood on the floor of the Senate and criticised the President because legislation was drafted in the executive department of the Government. I have never been one of those. I say that it is perfectly proper for the executive department of the Government to draft legislation, and that they should send their proposals to the Congress. I do not condemn the executive branch for doing that. I do not condemn the President for doing it. I condemn any weak-kneed Senator who has not the intestinal stamina to stand up, if he disagrees with the executive department, and say to the President of the United States, to Mr. Ickes, to Mr. Wallace, or to any other officer, "I disagree with you." If at any time I have denounced, it has been a denunciation of the Congress itself because of its spineless attitude in voting as "yes" men for every piece of legislation, fearful, as some Members of Congress have said, of losing their patronage.

Mr. LEWIS. Then we have before us-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President— Mr. LEWIS. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. ADAMS. I had the floor, and I desire to make an observation or two; then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LEWIS. I pause to hear the observation addressed particularly to myself.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not have in mind to direct an observation entirely to the Senator from Illinois, except, if I may, I did want to point out that the Wheeler amendment, which is now on the table, and which can be taken up later, goes beyond the bounds the Senator from Montana is suggesting. We have not in that amendment reserved to ourselves full legislative control.

I have not read the Wheeler amendment for a year, but, as I recall, it provided that when the President sent a reorganization plan to Congress the only right to vote which Congress would have would be "yes" or "no" on the plan as a whole; that Congress would surrender its right to make amendments; and, more than that, that we would bind ourselves to take a vote within a very limited time; and, in the Wheeler amendment, we would be going beyond any legislative proposal that ever came out of this body when we permitted the President to send us a measure which we took as it was, without change, or rejected it without change.

It seems to me that we would be going a long way in the Wheeler amendment. To say that the Wheeler amendment merely gives to the President the right to make recommendations is not accurate. It gives him power to submit a plan. which may be comprehensive and inclusive, and leaves us without any right to include anything in the plan or exclude anything from it.

One further observation, corroborating what the Senator from Montana has stated: I happen to be one of those who have never denounced on the floor of the Senate anyone who does not happen to follow my line of thought. I have never criticized the President of the United States. I have never said anything about dictators. If I have any criticism-and it is not really criticism but comment-it is that Congress has the right to do as it pleases. The powers which the President of the United States enjoys, with the exception of very limited powers, come to him from the Congress. If we take the Constitution and scan the powers which the Constitution gives the President, we find his power as Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy, his power to negotiate treaties, and to nominate officers; but, with very limited exceptions, every power he exercises is subject to the control either of the Congress or of the Senate.

There is not a Secretary in the President's Cabinet who does not owe his existence as such officer, and his salary, to an act of Congress. We can abolish all of the departments of the Government. Every Cabinet officer derives his position, his functions, his power, and his salary from the Congress. If Congress saw fit, it could strip the executive branch until all that remained of it was the President and the Vice President. They are the only constitutional officers in the executive branch. Whatever arbitrariness is exercised by the executive department is because Congress has vested the power and the opportunity in the Executive. Any complaint of dictatorship, of arbitrariness, is a complaint against Congress and not against the President.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, unless I wholly misunderstand the statement of the able Senator, it is that there is to be submitted, or it is assumed there is now pending to be submitted by the President, a proposal to amalgamate the departments as he thinks best for the service of the Government and for the purpose of reducing expenses; and, as the able Senator from Montana used as his basis, that he shall do so exercising his constitutional right. Yet, after he has done his duty as the President and exercised his constitutional right, he is to send the report of the action back to Congress under an amendment called "the Wheeler amendment" for supervision by the Congress, so that it may pass upon whether it regards his action as Presidential and discretionary. We are constantly to sit in judgment on him and take power to reverse whatever he does. Then we, the Senate, shall make suggestions and with such amendments as we desire pass the law again. Then he, the President, may veto that. Then the measure is to be sent back to us and the President's veto is to be overruled. Finally, we are to have the ceaseless cycle, heaping condemnations upon condemnations, until at the end the departments will have worn themselves out and all their salaries run for the period of lifetime before action is had, and then all is clear. This is a theory which is called "succinct," "economical," and "beneficial" to be carried out.

In the first place, I answer the Senator from Colorado. I concur with him that he does not denounce, that he proposes wherever he can make suggestions of remedy.

In matters of finance he is literally a senatorial Euclid, who may present complete items of addition and subtraction and mathematical memoranda which I never can hope to understand. But in this other matter he has never so violated as to call for anyone's criticism, for the denunciation of anyone, or anything.

I insist now, however, that we have again this morning returned to the same ejaculations and expressions we indulged when the previous bill was before us, when everything was brought here on the theory that the President of the United States is an individual of such sinister design and dark intention and such hidden purposes that he is not to be trusted; that whatever he does he must return to Congress on the assumption that we are the sole depositories of all wisdom and virtue, and that we must pass on the wisdom of his actions or the honor of his intentions.

I say that such a method is wholly without patriotic sense. From that point of view it is not wise, it is not practical, it does not appear to me statesmanlike that a Senator should rise and say, "Why does not this man, as President, designate specifically what he wishes done in the matter of amalgamation and combination of this department and the other," and at the same time wait to say, if he should do that, that the President has committed such an offense against the Constitution, against his privilege, and in violation of the honor of his office that we should regard any action of his contemptuously, and then visit on him not only condemnation, but condemnation as one who is repudiated by the Senate as wanting in capacity and lacking in a sense of the dignity of his office.

That sort of thing we condemn. If we trust the President, say so, and do so. If we do not trust in him, let us say so, and not send the matters to him, but dispose of them completely in this body. If the President cannot be trusted in the discharge of his constitutional duties, let us withdraw him from cooperation in this task. Let us trust with confidence something to him, as he trusts us to perform our duties. It is that which I wish to press upon this honorable body as worthy of our present and great consideration.

Mr. ADAMS. Just one word more, Mr. President. In the matter of trust, the question is, Do we trust in the soundness of the Constitution of the United States? Do we believe in the processes of government there laid down?

A legislative body is, as we see day by day, somewhat crude in its methods. We have difficulty in working out detailed legislation on the floor of the Senate, but in the final analysis we speak the voice of the people who sent us here, and it is the process of difference, of dispute, and of consideration, which ultimately results in making of the Congress of the United States the honest spokesman of the opinions of the people of the United States, crude and cumbrous in its processes, with no comparison in efficiency and in expedition with the executive branch.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is a very able and distinguished lawyer.

Mr. LEWIS. I will not dispute that. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHEELER. I knew the Senator would not. He does not have to dispute it; he can admit it. I merely wanted to say to the Senator that if he will later, in the calm of his office and surrounded by his lawbooks, review the speech which he has just made, he will want to change it before he puts it into the Congressional Record, because, followed to its logical conclusion, his argument would be that if legislation is recommended and sent to Congress by the President and the distinguished Senator from Illinois disagrees with it, he, by that action, is saying to the country, "I do not trust the President of the United States."

Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that other legislation which is advocated by the President of the United States is upon exactly the same basis as is the reorganization bill which has been recommended to the Congress. When Senators violently disagreed with the President with respect to some vital legislation which I proposed at the request of the President of the United States, and battled through the Senate, the Senator never heard me say that any Senator who disagreed with the President did not trust the President of the United States. An effort is now made to draw a red herring across the trail by saying to anyone who votes his convictions upon this matter and complies with the Constitution, "You do not trust the President of the United States."

I think the Senator from Illinois will want to amend his remarks when he comes to read them, because I believe that, able and learned as is the distinguished Senator, he does not wish to impute to any Senator, Democrat or Republican, that he does not trust the President of the United States merely because he votes against him or votes contrary to his views upon some legislative proposal.

Mr. President, since when has it come to pass in the United States Senate that a Senator cannot vote his convictions without the charge being made that he does not trust the President? It seems to me it is beneath the dignity of any Senator to make such a statement. If he will look at the record he will find that when it comes to progressive legislation I have as consistently voted with the President and with the present administration as has almost any other Member of the United States Senate. I resent the charge which is made that I do not trust the President of the United States. The Senator from Illinois entirely misconceives the legislation that is pending before us when he makes the statement he has made. I am sure that on reflection, and upon a reading of the bill, and a reading of my amendment he will change his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, there is no observation here made by me——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I still have the floor.

Mr. LEWIS. I beg the Senator's pardon. I thought the Senator turned to me and asked me respecting my correcting my statement.

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I will say there is nothing being stated about the legislation which comes from the President. There is nothing being said about the President sending down some recommendation of his for legislative action. I am referring, and specifically so stated, to the fact that the privilege is his under the Constitution to merge departments and agencies, and if he cares to undertake it, to do so on his own volition, or if he cares to do it by way of recommending that we do so by legislation, that is his privilege. But when that is within his power, when this body passes an act authorizing him to carry out that purpose, and when he does so and we require that he shall send his action back for our superior judgment, we reflect upon his action in a way that is unworthy, because that is not the tender of legislation. We would thereby propose to review his executive acts as President of the United States, performed within his power under the Constitution. That is the point and the distinction I make, I will say to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, it is a distinction without a difference. I am amazed that the Senator from Illinois would stand on the floor of the Senate and say that it is part of the executive duties of the President of the United States to merge the various agencies or other branches of the Government. The Congress of the United States created those branches. It was the Congress of the United States, not the President of the United States, that created the Forestry Service. It was the Congress of the United States that created the W. P. A. It was the Congress of the United States that created every single bureau, and not the President of the United States. Consequently when the question arises of repealing the laws creating those agencies, it is the duty of the Congress of the United States, as the representative of the sovereign people of this country, to say whether or not those laws shall be repealed.

Mr. President, the statement has been made that Congress cannot do the reorganizing. The only excuse for turning over to the President the matter of reorganizing the Government departments is that Congress cannot do its duty under the Constitution, that Congress is impotent, that Congress cannot be trusted.

Mr. President, we are not saying to the President, "We want to interfere with you," or "We do not trust you." But we say to him, "Neither you nor any other President of the United States can possibly understand all of the problems that affect the West." The President of the United States cannot possibly understand some of the problems that affect some other portions of the United States.

Mr. President, who is going to do the reorganizing? Does the distinguished and able senior Senator from Illinois for one moment think that the President of the United States is going to sit down in the White House and work out the details of the reorganization plan? Certainly not. Who is going to do it?

Mr. LEWIS. After the legislation is passed by the Congress authorizing the President to reorganize the Government departments it becomes his duty to do so.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator knows the President of the United States himself cannot do it. There is no Senator who does not know that it would be a physical impossibility for the President, with all his other duties, to sit down and work out the details of a reorganization plan. To whom must it be delegated? It must be delegated to the same committee to which he delegated it before, or to some clerks in the departments, or some other men, and they will do it. If the President sends in a comprehensive plan, he will not be able to read the whole plan. He cannot study and fully comprehend all the details of reorganization any more than he can fully understand and thoroughly examine the details of legislation which is sent here. It is a physical impossibility for any President to do it. And the distinguished Senator from Illinois, with his long and useful service in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, must know that that statement is correct.

Consequently we are not saying to the President of the United States, "We do not trust you," but we are saying to some little fellow in one of the Departments, "If you want legislation enacted to place the Forest Service in the Department of Agriculture, the Congress must approve it. The people in my State would say, 'We do not want that done, because we know how such a reorganization will affect us.'" If the House, with few Members representing such people, approves it, there is nothing I could do.

Mr. President, the House of Representatives contains relatively few Members from the West, as compared with the East. Let us assume that a request is sent to the House to abolish the Reclamation Bureau. We do not believe such a request will be made, but it could be made under the provisions of the pending bill. It might be said, "We want to abolish the Forest Service." We do not think any Government officials are going to do it, but they might want to do it. Or they might place the Forest Service under Mr. Ickes. Every stockman, every cattleman, and every farmer in my section would protest violently against such action. The House of Representatives might say, "We are in favor of it."

It would come over to the Senate, and a considerable number of Senators might vote against it, because there are relatively more Senators from the West in the Senate than there are Representatives from the West in the House. But the provision would still become the law, and our protest would not be heeded, our people would have no voice as to what should be done with reference to the legislation. That would be legislation with respect to a bureau which the Congress of the United States of America has created, a bureau which the President of the United States has not created.

Mr. President, it seems to me the idea, upon its face, is preposterous.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have gotten away from the matter which is pending in order to debate an amendment which seems to be in the offing.

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.

Mr. BARKLEY. But inasmuch as a constitutional question has been raised as to the power of the Congress to delegate to the President the right to reorganize the executive branches of the Government subject to a veto of Congress, I wish merely to observe that we have time and time again constituted the President as the agent of Congress to execute some duty that might be legislative in a sense. Congress can undoubtedly reorganize the departments; that is, it can legally do it. It has created them. If when it created separate agencies it had located them in some department, we probably now would not be confronted with the confusion and the chaos of duplication and all the difficulties that bring this proposed legislation to the floor.

What is the constitutional difference between delegating to the President the authority to regroup or transfer the agencies that we have created, and the passage of a law providing for a certain number of public buildings in the United States, and authorizing the President to determine where they are to be located?

In former days Congress, by what the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] this morning referred to as the old "pork barrel" method, provided in legislation the location of post offices and other public buildings. Finally, years ago Congress decided not to do it in that way. It provided for buildings. It made the appropriation, but it delegated its authority to locate those buildings to the President of the United States. No one has questioned the constitutionality of that delegation any more than now is questioned the delegation to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the authority to make rates which Congress constitutionally and legally can do, but physically and politically cannot do.

Wherein lies the difference between making the President our agent to shift one bureau from one department to another, or to take into some department those that are floating around, like Halley's comet, all tail and no head, and authorizing him to do all the things we authorize him to do in the construction of public buildings, whether under the P. W. A., the W. P. A., or the annual appropriations we have provided for the construction of public buildings, wholly Federal, all over the United States? We have done the same thing as to flood control. We have passed flood-control bills authorizing the President, out of the funds appropriated, to decide where the flood-control devices shall be located and which shall have priority over the others. In a sense, those are legislative matters. Congress could have specified all the details in the act, but it did not see fit to do so. It delegated administrative authority to the President to decide the details. Wherein lies the difference?

Mr. WHEELER. I am very glad indeed that the Senator called my attention to that situation, because I think there is no doubt in the world that we have authority to delegate to the President of the United States, if we desire to do so, the power to shift bureaus back and forth. I say that fundamentally we should not do it. However, we have the authority to do so.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator will pardon me, I shall be glad to yield in just a moment. However, when we say to the President, "You may abolish functions of office," we give him authority to repeal any law which we have placed upon the statute books.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, that is not the issue before us. Mr. WHEELER. I said to the Senator a moment ago that if he had read the bill he would not have made the argument which he did make.

Mr. LEWIS. I am referring to the amendment of my friend.

Mr. WHEELER. I will call the Senator's attention specifically to the bill, so that he will understand it. At the last session of the Congress the Senate took out of the bill the power to abolish functions of office. In the pending bill it is proposed to put it back. In the last session of the Congress the Senate said, "We will not give the President the power to abolish functions of office, or to create new functions of office." In the pending bill it is proposed to grant that power.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to venture a word as to the two analogies submitted by our distinguished majority leader.

With respect to public buildings, Congress appropriates a certain sum of money. However, Congress does not appropriate a lump sum of money for the heads of the departments to construct any building they please. Congress specifies the localities in which the buildings may be erected, and the amount that may be spent on each of them. What Congress does is to establish a list of public buildings, which is a larger list than the money will cover, and to say to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Postmaster General, "You may select public buildings from the approved list."

In the matter of flood control the same situation exists. A lump sum of money is appropriated, but it may be expended only upon projects which are approved by Congress. A flood-control bill contains a specification of individual projects and their costs.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

When we come to certain other Federal functions, speaking of the Tariff Commission or of the Interstate Commerce Commission, those are specific arms of the legislative branch of the Government. They are not arms of the executive branch of the Government. So I say to my distinguished leader that there is a vast difference between the functions of an arm of the legislative branch of the Government and those of an arm of the executive branch of the Government.

Let us lay aside entirely the constitutional question. Is the Congress of the United States impotent to act? I think we ought to answer that question. When I find myself in disagreement with the learned Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], I always doubt the correctness of my view, because he is so often correct. However, when he stands before the Senate and says that we cannot act, we cannot legislate, I ask, "What are the people in Europe fighting for at the present time?" We are told that they are fighting over ideologies. They are fighting over the question whether more power shall be given to the executive branch of the Government, or whether parliamentary government shall be preserved. People are giving their lives over that kind of an ideology. What do we find down through Anglo-Saxon history? The fight that has been made from the beginning of Anglo-Saxon history has been in behalf of retention of power by the parliaments. If we take the history of Norway, Sweden, and the other Scandinavian countries, what do we find? We find that the fight that has been going on from time immemorial is the fight over the question whether or not the power of the king shall be taken away. When the power of the king was taken away, I have no doubt that some who were subservient to the king stood on the floor of the parliament and said, "You do not trust the king, and so you want to take away this little power and that little power until finally you have a democracy."

The whole course and trend today in Europe, and the whole trend in the United States of America, is towards giving up parliamentary government and turning the power over to the executive branch of the government. I say that such a trend is wrong, and as long as I remain in this body I shall continue to fight that sort of thing, regardless of whether or not I am charged with not trusting the President of the United States.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. LEWIS. Would the Senator say that if the Constitution of the United States vests a certain power in the President, and he proceeds to execute it, in that respect it is not his right to do so? Is not such a power a direct gift from the people themselves? It does not come from legislation; nor can legislation take it away from him.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is asking me whether or not it is a violation of the Constitution for the President of the United States to exercise a power granted to him. Of course it is not a violation of the Constitution, but will the Senator point out to me where in the Constitution of the United States the President is granted the power to abolish the functions of offices created by the Congress of the United States? Where in the Constitution is there a provision that the President of the United States has the right to repeal laws placed upon the statute books? Where has he the right under the Constitution to shift around bureaus which are created by the Congress of the United States?

Mr. LEWIS. Where is there any effort on his part to assume to do so?

Mr. WHEELER. There is none.

Mr. LEWIS. Then where is the foundation of the condemnation of assumptions of actions which have never transpired?

Mr. WHEELER. None, except as the Senator is trying to

Mr. LEWIS. Why does the able Senator assume a condition and give it out to the world as an offense that the President is about to commit, and state that for that reason he will stand in this body as the one great guard at the bridge, to guard against the invasion and destruction of the country by the individual called the President of the United

Mr. WHEELER. After I listened to the discourse by the Senator from Illinois, I thought it was necessary to make that kind of a statement.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, some of us who are very anxious to go along with the Senator from South Carolina and the committee with respect to the amendments have very grave doubts as to the advisability of striking the United States Employees' Compensation Commission from the exempted class. I understood the Senator from South Carolina to say that no great economy would be effected one way or the other. I wonder if the Senator would not be willing to withdraw his insistence on this amendment, in order that we may make progress with the bill.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I said several times that I did not believe that any great economies could be effected. I do not know that the United States Employees' Compensation Commission will ever be touched by any reorganization plan. I had no idea that the subject would provoke 2 hours of discussion. Of course, the discussion has not been on the amendment. The discussion has been on another feature of the bill.

I must admit that I am extremely eager to answer about a dozen statements of the distinguished Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler]. Of course, the time to answer them is when an amendment is pending relevant to the subject. I will agree to ask that this particular amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 3, line 18, striking out "the United States Employees' Compensation Commission."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The next amendment passed over was, in section 3, subsection (b), on page 3, line 19, to strike out "United States Tariff Commission.'

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the bill as it passed the House included the United States Tariff Commission as one of the agencies which should not come under the provisions of the bill for reorganization. The Senate committee amended the House provision by striking out, on page 3, lines 19 and 20, the words "United States Tariff Commission."

I have prepared an amendment striking out the Senate committee amendment. I have conferred with the Senator in charge of the bill and am advised that he will ask that the Senate committee amendment be rejected. Anticipating that there might be some opposition to my amendment, I have prepared a statement in support of my amendment referring to the duties and responsibilities of the Tariff Commission and the absolute necessity, if it is to be maintained, of keeping it as an independent body. In view of the assurance I have received that the committee amendment will be rejected, I shall not take the time of the Senate to make the statement which I have prepared, but I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the statement may be printed in the RECORD.

The statement is as follows:

As the bill passed the House subsection b of section 3 of part I, title I, exempted the United States Tariff Commission from the agencies which the President might reorganize under the bill.

The Senate Reorganization Committee now proposes to treat the Tariff Commission as one of the agencies the President may reorganize under the bill. The Tariff Commission should not be included in the plan for reorganization and therefore should be specifically exempted by name in subsection b of section 3 of part I, title I, as is provided for in the bill as it passed the House.

Certainly the Tariff Commission is one of the independent agencies of the Government that Congress should maintain as independent as possible. The maintenance of its independence is essential to the accomplishments of the purposes for which it was organized. Without that independence it might as well be abolished entirely.

polished entirely.

Before the establishment of the Tariff Commission, the Congres Before the establishment of the Tariff Commission, the Congress was generally dependent upon interested parties, or upon political sources, for information with respect to tariff questions. In order to remedy this situation, the Tariff Commission was created in 1916 for the purpose of providing the Congress with a source of authentic foreign trade and tariff information. Since its establishment, the Tariff Commission has functioned continuously as an analysis of the company observed with the duty of secretaring and ment, the Tariff Commission has functioned continuously as an independent agency charged with the duty of ascertaining and reporting directly, without the intervention of any political officer, to the Congress and to the President facts regarding the operations and economic effects of our commercial policies and tariff laws and pertinent facts concerning proposed changes therein. On a subject so highly complex and so much a matter of sectional and party controversy as the tariff, it is essential that the fact-finding body shall be as nonpartisan, unbiased, and as independent as it can be made. It was from a realization of this that the Congress provided that the Tariff Commission, unlike any other governmental board, be composed of an even number of members and that not more than half of them be members of the same political party. If the Congress desires to be assured of a source of objective data and independent judgment on questions of foreign trade and tariff policy, it would seem essential that the Tariff Commission be continued as an independent agency.

As an extension of its fact-finding functions, the Commission, under the so-called flexible tariff provision (sec. 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930), "finds" differences in costs of production and in doing so exercises independent judgment and discretion in passing upon difficult questions of cost determination which at the same time involve important questions of public policy. Examples are decisions as to comparability of foreign and domestic products, as to methods of cost allocation, and cost averaging, and as to the selection of markets to be used in computing transportation costs. With respect to findings under this section, the President has only the power of approval or disapproval.

In addition, the Commission has certain functions which are formally quasi-judicial in character. Under section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930, prohibiting unfair methods of competition in connection with imports, the Tariff Commission acts in a quasi-judicial capacity and its findings, before going to the President, are subject to review on questions of law by the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. Its findings on questions of fact, if supported by evidence, are conclusive.

In my opinion, the authority should not be given to transfer the Tariff Commission to the State Department, the Department of Commerce, or the Department of the Treasury and put it under someone in one of those agencies. To do so would destroy the Tariff Commission and its usefulness to the Congress. Its reports would then be considered to be biased and partial to the policies of the particular political administration in power, and they would be opposed by all of those who are opposed to those policies. With six members of the Commission, not more t used with certainty that the full facts have been stated without bias or partisanship. If there is a difference both sides may state their positions in a report and, consequently, the full facts are bound to be reported and made a record of. Therein lies the special value of the strictly bipartisan independent Tariff Commission makes findings of fact and law, and its findings of fact, if supported by evidence, are conclusive. Its findings on questions of law alone are reviewable by the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. The work of the Commission under all other sections of law is essentially fact-finding. The Commission is essentially a research body, finding the facts, and reporting those facts fully, frankly, and without bias or partisanship.

Furthermore, a brief analysis of the functions of the Tariff Commission will show that it has not been itself a general regulatory authority and, with one exception, section 337, does not exercise quasi-judicial functions. Therefore, no need exists for takcise quasi-judicial functions. Therefore, no need exists for taxing from the Commission any of its administrative functions and, in particular, the control over the selection and promotion of its personnel. Furthermore, the analysis will also show that such a course would seriously impair the usefulness of the Tariff Commission.

Section 337 of the Tariff Act of 1930 which is still in effect, authorizes the Commission to investigate unfair acts or practices in importation and sale of commodities. The functions the Commission under this section are quasi-judicial. The Commission makes findings of fact and law, and its findings of fact, and law, and its findings of fact, and law, and its findings of fact.

The Commission is primarily an agency for the collection of reliable and unbiased information that is needed for a full objective consideration of tariff questions. Although the mere existence of a vast body of factual data is not a guaranty that all tariff action will be determined on a factual rather than a political basis, it is certain that without such information the Congress in adopting legislation, and the President in exercising the authority granted him regarding tariff matters, will be deprived of the best means of judging the merits of various proposals for tariff changes and the merits of information submitted in relation thereto by pressure groups.

Facts relative to tariff making, in order to be of use to the Facts relative to tariff making, in order to be of use to the President, to the Congress, and to the public must fulfill the following requirements:

(1) The data must be gathered and developed impartially. The reports of the Tariff Commission have earned a high reputation in this respect; the public and all political parties have confidence in them not only because of the bipartisan membership of the Commission but also because of its nonpolitical and objective approach to tariff questions and because of the caliber, training, and experience of its economic, technical, and statistical staff.

and experience of its economic, technical, and statistical staff.

(2) It is not sufficient merely to gather facts; they must be interrelated so as to show in their proper perspective the various factors affecting the competition between imported and domestically produced commodities. Other governmental bodies gather some of the data pertinent to tariff problems, but none of them is equipped to present the data in such a way as to throw light on the various elements entering into this competition. To do that is the special province of the Tariff Commission. It uses all the official statistics of the Departments of Commerce and Agriculture and the Census Bureau, but uses them only as a starting point in its analytical studies. Nearly always it finds it necessary also to obtain special information on its own initiative by field work and by questionnaire. In this way it obtains data as to costs, prices, and many aspects of the competitive situation.

The objective analysis of problems as complex as those which relate to tariffs involve a steady succession of qualitative judgments. If these judgments are made on a thoroughly disinterested basis and if the facts are fully developed and interrelated by experienced and competent analysts, the conclusions usually are unmistakable. The unprejudiced and sound exercise of these judgments requires a board rather than an administrative head of the organization and a nonpartisan composition of that board.

Whatever party and administration may be in power, and what-

Whatever party and administration may be in power, and whatever may be the future vicissitudes of tariff policy, there will be no lessening of the need for a reliable and an unbiased factual basis for tariff making.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I desire to ask that the pending amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 3, line 19, striking out the "United States Tariff Commission."

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next passed-over amendment of the committee.

The next amendment of the Select Committee on Government Organization was, on page 3, line 22, after the word "Board", to insert "the Federal Deposit Insurance Corpora-tion, or the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio desire to address himself to the amendment last stated? Mr. TAFT. No; I have an amendment of my own that comes in at this point.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the committee

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, would it not be better if we should, after completing the consideration of the committee amendments to subsection (b), consider all individual amendments to that subsection? I ask the Senator from South Carolina if he would have any objection to such procedure?

Mr. BYRNES. The only objection is that there are a number of amendments, and it will be sought to exempt practically every department. I thought we could dispose of the committee amendments in a very short time and then could recur to subsection (b).

Mr. McNARY. Very well.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 24, page 11, line 17, after the words "limited to", it is proposed to strike out "20 minutes" and insert "not to exceed 2 hours", so as to read:

(a) If the committee to which has been referred a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan has not reported it before the expiration of 10 calendar days after its introduction (or, in the case of a resolution received from the other House, 10 calendar days after its receipt), it shall then (but not before) be in order to move either to discharge the committee from further con-order to move either to discharge the committee from further consideration of such resolution, or to discharge the committee from further consideration of any other resolution with respect to such reorganization plan which has been referred to the committee.

(b) Such motion may be made only by a person favoring the resolution, shall be highly privileged (except that it may not be made after the committee has reported a resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan), and debate thereon shall be limited to not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. No amendment to such motion shall be in order, and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which such motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just stated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next amendment passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 25, page 12, line 14, before the word "hours", it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert 'twenty", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 25. (a) When the committee has reported, or has been discharged from further consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, it shall at any time thereafter be in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) to move to proceed to the consideration of such resolution. Such motion shall be highly privileged and shall not be debatable. No amendment to such motion shall be in order and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which such motion is agreed to or disagreed to.

(b) Debate on the resolution shall be limited to not to exceed 20 hours, which shall be equally divided between those favoring and those opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate shall not be debatable. No amendment to, or motion to recommit, the resolution shall be in order, and it shall not be in order to move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is agreed to or disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was an amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] which was pending when the Senate took up the committee amendments today. The amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, it is proposed to strike out "The President" and insert:

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of continued national deficits, beginning in 1931, it is imperative to reduce drastically Government expenditures and that such reduction may be accomplished in great measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this act. Accordingly, the President.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by striking out the word "imperative" and substituting therefor the word "desirable."

tive" and substituting therefor the word "desirable."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Then, I desire to strike out the word "drastically" and insert the word "substantially" in lieu thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified accordingly.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire what was the last request of the Senator?

Mr. BYRD. To change the word "drastically" to "substantially." I also ask to modify the amendment by changing the word "great" to "some."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified as requested by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the amendment, as modified, reads:

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of continued national deficits, beginning in 1931, it is desirable to reduce substantially Government expenditures and that such reduction may be accomplished in some measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this act. Accordingly, the President.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield to me?

Mr. BYRD. I am glad to yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that to his amendment as modified I have no objection.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, my purpose in offering this amendment is to obtain a clear declaration from the Congress that the expenditures of the National Government today are excessive and should be substantially reduced. The amendment, as modified, carries out that declaration. I ask for the immediate consideration of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MILLER in the chair). Let the clerk report the amendment as it now reads as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. As modified the amendment now reads:

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of continued national deficits, beginning in 1931, it is desirable to reduce substantially Government expenditures and that such reduction may be accomplished in some measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this act. Accordingly, the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, as modified.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word. As offered originally the amendment of the Senator from Virginia carried with it the implication of a sort of self-condemnation on the part of Congress because none of these expenditures could have been possible without the action of Congress. Notwithstanding the recommendations of any President, unless Congress appropriates the money the expenditures cannot be indulged in.

It seemed to me also that as originally offered the Senator's amendment carried with it a compulsory connotation that might not be possible of accomplishment. We all desire retrenchment in the expenditures of our Government. Of course, such retrenchment ought to be consistent with the efficiency of the Government. For that reason I agreed as a member of the committee to the amendment as modified by the Senator from Virginia. We all realize that it is desirable that expenses should be reduced, and while we may be too optimistic with respect to the amount of economy that can be brought about under any reorganization bill, I think we all hope that automatically very substantial economies will be effectuated. So I am glad to join with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES], the chairman of the committee which reported the bill, in accepting the amendment as modified by the Senator from Virginia, and I wish to express my appreciation to the Senator from Virginia for his willingness to modify the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, if the Senatory from Kentucky is anxious to avoid the implication that the expenditures of the Government are excessive, then my modified amendment does not do that. In fact, it specifically states that "Congress hereby declares that by reason of the continued national deficits beginning in 1931 it is desirable substantially to reduce governmental expenditures," and to this extent is a condemnation of deficit spending as authorized by Congress. I want the Senate to understand that in supporting this amendment that the Members are voting to declare that the present expenditures of the Government are excessive and should be reduced.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McNARY. Does that complete the committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending amendment of the Senator from Virginia, as modified, has not as yet been acted upon. It is not a committee amendment.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the committee amendments have all been acted upon.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, with reference to the observations made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley], may I say that this bill, if it should be enacted into law, will not, in my opinion,

Mr. McNARY. That was the nature of my inquiry work very great economies so long as the Congress yields to the importunities, as it has done for years and is now doing, of groups and organizations in all parts of the United States to take over functions of States and municipalities and to have the Federal Government exercise a sort of omnipotent power and assume the duties of a kind of benevolent despot to rule and control all the affairs of this Republic?

I am not blaming the executive department so much for expenditures; I blame the Congress. We close our ears to appeals for economy and rush to pass laws increasing expenditures for many purposes not within the power of the Federal Government. There are bills now pending before Congress for authorizations which, together with appropriations which will be made for the ordinary expenses of the Government for the next fiscal year, will reach $14,000,000,000 or $15,000,000,000. Before this session of Congress adjourns I have no doubt that there will have been appropriated at least $10,000,000,000 and authorizations amounting to three or four or five billion dollars. The fault is with Congress. The Congress is failing, in my opinion, in its duty. It is too anxious to please the people, too anxious to make appropriations for every conceivable and for many inconceivable subjects. People are rushing to Congress for funds to aid in building houses and to assist in various private activities. Many citizens are losing their initiative and those fine qualities which were the basis of the progress and development of this great Republic.

So I agree with my friend, if I understood his statement, that we will be disappointed in the economies which this bill will effectuate. The President may act as wisely and as economically and as patriotically as he desires, but we will not accomplish the objectives which we are declaring we seek when we lend ourselves to all kinds of wild and visionary schemes that demand appropriations from the Treasury aggregating, as I have said, $14,000,000,000 for the next fiscal year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to say a word in regard to what the Senator from Utah said a moment ago. I would be in favor of economy in the expenditures of the Federal Government even if there were no deficit. The only reason why there is a deficit is because the Congress has not raised the amount of revenue necessary to pay the expenses of our Government. But whether there were a deficit or not, I would always be in favor of reducing expenses insofar as they could be reduced consistently with the efficient operation of the Government. It may be that there have been times in the history of the country during the last 40 or 50 years when, even though the Budget was balanced and there was a surplus, the Congress could have reduced expenditures below what they were. So there is no difference between the Senator and myself as to the desirability of a reduction wherever it can be brought about without affecting the efficiency of the Government's operations.

Mr. KING. Just a word, Mr. President. If I understand my friend from Kentucky, there is an implication that we have neglected to impose taxes sufficient to bridge over the chasm which we have created by inordinate expenditures. It was only a few years ago when the revenue of the country was approximately from $800,000,000 to $1,000,000,000 a year. We have during the past 6 years under the present administration and during the last year or two of the preceding administration, by increasing taxes, augmented the revenues by between 500 and 600 percent. Taxes have become so heavy that individuals, corporations, and business generally have experienced a great depression and have failed to expand their activities and to increase the number of their employees in the various departments of activity in which they are engaged.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I did not mean by my observation to criticize the Congress for not raising sufficient revenue so as to make unnecessary a deficit. I recognize that times come in the history of governments when they have to expend more than they raise in revenue, and that it would be unwise to make the burden of taxation sufficiently heavy to enable the Government at all times to meet with its revenues the expenses incurred.

Of course, in wartime we did that on the theory that the expenditures were protecting and preserving the liberties, the institutions, and traditions of our Government, which would be as valuable to future generations as they were to the generation that was alive at the time of the war. Even back before that, however, back in the nineties, it became necessary for the Government to borrow money on the theory that in the midst of a depression it was not wise to increase taxation sufficiently to enable the Government to meet its expenses, which at that time were almost insignificant in comparison to what they now are.

I am not in any sense criticizing Congress, because I think now and then there arise in all nations great crises, the solution of which is of benefit to future generations, when a part of the expense of the solution of the problem may be passed on. I am not one of those who would insist that Congress now ought to raise enough revenue to keep our expenses current and keep the Budget balanced, so long as we have an emergency the solution of which, if we can solve it, may be infinitely more valuable to those who are to come after us than to us who are alive today.

When I referred to the cause of a deficit being that the Congress had not raised enough money to pay what it had expended, I did not want the Senator to understand that as a criticism in any way of Congress for not doing so.

Mr. KING. I think I correctly understood the Senator. I am complaining of the persistent demands for the intervention of the Government in matters outside of the jurisdiction of the Federal Government. There was a demand a short time ago—and it came, as I am advised, from various agencies in the executive departments—that we increase the bonded indebtedness to $50,000,000,000, and I saw a statement from one of the most reputable of our newspaper correspondents—and they are all reputable, I may say—that we should go, or perhaps might go, to $75,000,000,000 of public expenditures.

Demands for appropriations of such an amount are so fantastic as to receive the derision of all honest people; the figures of but $50,000,000,000 are so excessive as to demand opposition.

A few years ago, if anyone had suggested that the Federal Government would increase its taxes five or six hundred percent and, notwithstanding that enormous increase, would increase its expenditures from 1,000 to 1,200 percent, and would increase its national debt to forty or forty-four billion dollars, such a person would have been regarded as an enemy not only of economy but of democratic government, because these enormous expenditures, if continued, can result only in inflation, and inflation imperils, if it does not destroy, democratic government.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr KING. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to just two rather dramatic figures to sustain his point of view, and certainly to sustain the pending amendment.

The total cost of Federal, State, and local government in the United States in 1937 represented the equivalent of every penny of income enjoyed west of the Mississippi River; and the total cost of Federal Government represented the complete confiscation of every penny of personal income in excess of $5,000 in the United States. We not only are in the position that the Senator describes, we not only are in need of the pious declaration contained in the pending amendment, but we are very definitely in need of doing something about it, instead of merely talking about it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I recall some of the figures

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I recall some of the figures mentioned by the Senator from Michigan, and he has not exaggerated the situation. The burden of taxation last year imposed by the Federal Government, the State governments, and the subdivisions of the States, amounted to approximately 25 percent of the gross income of all the people of the United States. The gross income was substantially $60,000,000,000, and 25 percent of that was taken from the people for the purpose of meeting the expenses of our various governments.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. In just a moment. This year, in my opinion, the governmental appropriations will call for 30 percent of the gross income of all the people of the United States.

I now yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator has made the point I intended to make—that the actual expenditures of government now are 30 percent of the total earnings of the people of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator now is referring to all governments?

Mr. KING. Yes; I stated that I referred to the National Government, the State governments, and their political subdivisions. But the expenditures of the National Government—which will this year, in my opinion, be approximately $11,000,000,000—are a large part of the gross income of the people of the United States.

I am merely protesting against the failure of Congress to do its duty. We respond to the demands of the executive departments, and every executive department is asking for increased appropriations. I have examined the hearings of every subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, and the hearings of the various subcommittees of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate this year; and I am within the bounds of accuracy when I say that substantially all witnesses who testified asked for increased appropriations.

I do not recall that any Members of either branch of Congress appeared as witnesses to oppose appropriations. Most of the testimony was given by persons in the executive departments; and substantially all of them were appealing for increased authority in their respective departments and agencies, and for increased appropriations, and in many instances for increased salaries.

It is unfortunate that in the consideration of appropriation bills, representatives of economy are not selected to appear before the committees and oppose demands for increased appropriations. There used to be, in the ecclesiastical courts, a "devil's advocate." There should be, in our hearings upon appropriation bills, active and energetic persons to elicit the facts and to oppose all demands for inordinate and wholly unjustifiable appropriations.

We have today upon the Government pay rolls, including of course the C. C. C. and the W. P. A., more than 5,300,000 employees; and the compensation of that enormous army aggregates something like eight or ten billion dollars. We are going on blithely appropriating more and more, however; and an examination of the appropriations bills this year will indicate, I believe, that we are increasing the appropriations by from one to two billion dollars over the appropriations for the preceding year.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I can see no real reason for a reorganization bill in the form of that which is pending before the Senate, even if the Wheeler amendment should be adopted thereto.

Under our form of government, the President may formulate a reorganization plan without any act of the legislature, and he may submit it to the Congress with a message showing its need and merit, and the Congress may either accept it in whole or in part or reject it. No law is needed to accomplish the submission of a reorganization plan to the Congress by the President. On the other hand, the Congress itself, after appropriate hearings, may initiate a plan to reorganize the Government, pass it through both Houses of Congress, and submit it to the President for his approval. If he approves it, it becomes the reorganization plan of our Government. If he disapproves it, he may veto it, and then the law fails unless enough Members of both Houses vote to pass it over his veto, in which case it becomes the law anyway.

This is a Government in which legislation is supposed to originate in one of the two Houses of Congress, and not with the Executive. It is the Executive's mission to suggest or recommend appropriate legislation which may be needed from time to time. There is need for reorganization of the Government; but I insist that there is no need or excuse for abandoning the time-honored and constitutional ways of carrying out the objective we have in mind.

Already, I believe, one of the great causes of unrest in this country has been the transference of legislative power to separate and independent agencies, which in effect is creating a fourth branch of our National Government, not that of legislation, not that of judicial or executive functions of the Government, but administrative legislation within supposed limits fixed by Congress in passing various acts. As I have observed the workings of these legislative administrative agencies, they not only fill the country with uncertainty, but they allow a single man not elected by the people, not a Member of either House of Congress, in effect to pass laws in the name of Congress. We find that situation in the case of the National Labor Relations Board, in the case of the Wage and Hour Act, and in the case of various other activities of the Federal Government.

I am not at this moment complaining against any of the purposes for which the National Labor Relations Board was set up, or against the Wage and Hour Act, or other similar legislation. I am complaining that instead of Congress performing its legislative duties, it is more and more and more transferring in bulk to the executive branch of the Government our power to legislate. In times of great emergency that plan must always, to some extent, be adopted.

In times of great stress, when the welfare of the Nation depends upon quick action, we must to some extent surrender temporarily some of our legislative functions, perhaps, in the interest of saving the Nation. But does such a condition now exist, in the case of the reorganization bill, as when the banks were closed in 1933, and it became necessary to hand over Wide power in order to produce an economic flow of such strength as the slow and deliberate legislative action could not provide? No; such a condition does not exist. Of course, the need for reorganization exists; but even if no reorganization shall be effected at all at this session of Congress, the Government and the Nation will still endure. There is no real emergency, in the sense in which I use that word, and the President should either formulate some tentative plan for the reorganization of the Government and submit it to the Congress for such action as we may see fit to take, or we should initiate it and pass a bill through the two Houses of Congress and submit it to the Executive for such action as he may see fit to take.

Here we have a legislative proposal which transfers to the President, to some extent, and by our approval, the right of Congress to legislate, and leaves us only the slim authority of approving or disapproving any plan the President may propose. If the plan submitted should meet 90 percent with our approval and 10 percent with our disapproval, we would have no opportunity to correct the 10 percent which we did not like. We would adopt the plan in order to get 90 percent of what we might desire, when by the regular legislative processes we could get 100 percent if we desired.

No CITIDOTTAD No Desident

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President-

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota. Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I am sure the Senator is aware of the fact that we have for some time submitted to the practice of departments themselves writing bills.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. They come here and present them and ask Congress to pass them, and I have known of instances where they requested Congress not to restrict or to define what they have in mind too closely, but to leave wide discretion to the department in the administration and interpretation of what the law actually means.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not wish to go afield, but let me support what the Senator has just stated by a concrete illustration.

Congress passed an act providing that on certain governmental contracts only concerns could bid which paid the minimum wage found to exist in the community by the Department of Labor. In my State the highest wage for common labor was paid by a concern employing 15,000 to 18,000 people, and it was 561/2 cents per hour. But the Department found that the highest wage paid ordinary labor in Pittsburgh was 62 cents an hour. So the whole State of Maryland was blanketed into the Pittsburgh area, notwithstanding the fact that there was not one concern in the entire State of Maryland, I am advised, which paid more than 561/2 cents an hour. In other words, the Department found that the prevailing wage for ordinary labor in Maryland was 62 cents an hour, when not one concern in Maryland paid over 561/2 cents an hour for ordinary labor. That is an example of the application of the legislative authority vested in the Department of Labor by this very Congress itself. That shows the abuse of legislative authority. It shows how we are really legislating, not on the floor of Congress but in the depart-

Of course a reorganization bill is going to result in many conflicting points of view. Perhaps no two Senators will agree 100 percent as to how the whole Government should be reorganized; they will disagree even on the President's proposal, if we authorize him to take action, and he submits a plan to the Congress. But, incidentally, he needs no authorization. He can recommend a particular plan to us in a message to the Congress without this legislation being passed at all, and why should we give up our legislative authority in this left-handed manner to the executive branch of the Government, when we ourselves are sitting here and, I believe, are perfectly competent to write our own reorganization bill?

I am not casting the slightest reflection or intending to cast any reflection upon the good will of the Executive, upon his desire to reorganize the Government in a proper and economical and efficient manner; I do not mean to make any such implication. What I am attempting to say is that if there is need for reorganization, Congress having created the agencies which are to be reorganized, or consolidated, or eliminated, then Congress should do its job; it should initiate the legislation here and pass it on to the Executive for his approval or disapproval.

Of course, the proposal of the able Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] is better, in my judgment, than to have no legislative right to have a voice in the matter at all, and I think he is on sound ground when he says that the act of Congress will contravene its constitutional authority if we allow a reorganization plan to stand if only one House disapproves it, because under our Constitution legislation must receive the approval of both Houses of Congress, and I believe Attorney General Mitchell was on sound ground in so advising a former Congress.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I desire to ask the Senator a question which I think relates to the point he is discussing. Suppose we should pass the pending bill as it is now before us, as offered by the able Senator from South Carolina, and suppose the President should send a plan to the next Congress, we will

Mr. TYDINGS. In pursuance of the proposed legislation. Mr. BORAH. Yes; and suppose that Congress should say, "We do not propose to be bound by that legislation. We will proceed with this matter in the full powers of the Congress, and deal with it as we would deal with an ordinary bill which comes here." What would prevent them from doing so?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not a thing in the world. The next Congress could undo entirely what this Congress is doing in this or any other bill.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me so.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield. Mr. BYRNES. I would agree that the Congress could change the rule; but unless Congress did change the rule, they would have to proceed in accordance with the rule laid down in the pending bill. If the Wheeler amendment should be adopted, the same situation would exist. If Congress could say, "We will pay no attention to the rule of the Wheeler amendment, which rule is that when the order of the President comes to the Congress it is not referred to a committee but is immediately made a special order for the consideration of the Senate or the House, and is not subject to amendment and must be voted on by the tenth day. That is the Wheeler amendment. That would have to be done unless the Congress said, "We have changed our mind," and should bring in a different rule, which, if a majority of the Congress adopted it, would be the law.

Mr. BORAH. I think I entirely agree with the Senator. What I was seeking to develop was the idea that it would be impossible for this Congress to lay down a rule as to legislation, as to how we should proceed, and so forth, which would bind the next Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct.
Mr. BYRNES. We cannot lay down a rule even to bind this Congress, if Congress wants to change its mind.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with that, too; and I am quite sure. from my observation in the past, that no plan will reach this Congress. It will take a much longer time than that to formulate a plan and send it here.

Mr. TYDINGS. How ludicrous it is for us as a legislative branch of the Government to say that one of the great problems before this Nation is the necessity of reorganizing and consolidating and taking other action in respect to the functions of the executive branch of the Government, in the interest of economy and efficiency, but that we do not intend to do a thing in the world about it except to pass a resolution inviting the President of the United States to legislate for us, and that whatever way he legislates will be satisfactory to us if we do not act on the plan within 10 days after he submits it.

Under the amendment of the able Senator from Montana we could not amend the President's plan, we could not dot an "i," we could not cross a "t." we could not take out a line or a paragraph. We would have either to vote it up or vote it down. If we agreed that 75 percent of it was good and that 15 percent was questionable and that 10 percent was bad, we would be bound to vote either "yes" or "no." would have no chance to eradicate an injustice or a bit of inefficiency which might creep into a plan proposed by the President. Whereas if we act here in this body, after full debate, in the light of full discussion, we can correct, if we think desirable, any phase of a plan in the interest of efficiency or economy, or justice to the persons who are working in the bureaus.

Why should Congress abdicate its functions? There is no great emergency. The German Army is not at Bladensburg. No cities are being bombed. The farmers will not get any more for their wheat whether we reorganize or do not reorganize. The unemployed will still be unemployed. There will be millions on relief. The banks will still be functioning. The railroads will not be any worse off than they are. The slums will still be present, and only a gradual program of rehabilitation will be operating. Where is the emergency, that we should take our legislative power and hand it over to the Executive, who is not the legislative branch of this Government, and say, "We do not care to legislate on this particular proposal"?

Although we are the legislative branch of the Government. Constitution or no Constitution, tradition or no tradition, orthodox way or unorthodox way, we are going to let you do it for us, and even though we do not like the plan which you formulate, we will have no right to turn it down, to correct it, if we agree that a considerable part of it is good.

If that is the way to run a great government such as ours, then I think we ought to abdicate entirely, and let the President have any neutrality act he wants; let him take care of the raising of taxes; let him appropriate what he wants for relief; let him have all the money he wants, and let him carry out all the plans he has for helping the farmer, and for carrying on all the other phases of government.

Mr. President, if there is need for reorganization, we should write the plan in Congress. Let it go through the normal processes of government up to the Executive, and have him approve it or disapprove it. If we feel there is no need for reorganization we should do nothing at all.

We ought not to abuse the various executive activities of the Federal Government on the floor of the Senate, and hold this branch and that branch up to ridicule and abuse, and then continue to allow more legislative authority to be transferred to the executive branch of the Government.

I want to reorganize the Government as much as does anyone else; I am going to vote for the Wheeler amendment rather than not have reorganization; but, unless the Congress takes the initiative in this matter, I am not going to vote for any plan to reorganize the Government, because the executive branch has no right to become the legislative branch of this Government.

What I am about to say has no particular reference to the present administration, and I hope that no one who listens to these few sentences will think I mean to make any reference to the present administration; but there is something to be gained from the lessons of history. I remember when Germany lived under the constitution of Weimar. Germany had as chancelor a very good man named Bruening. The Reichstag, or German Congress, could not function, so Mr. Bruening decided that he would issue a few decrees under his police powers, because of the emergency that existed. So for a short while Germany was governed by decrees issued by the Chancelor.

Then Mr. Hitler came to power, and Mr. Hitler felt that what Mr. Bruening could do he could do, and he has been doing it ever since, and we have seen the results of all the power being confined in the executive branch of the government and its ramifications in what is taking place in Europe and elsewhere today.

Mr. President, ours is a democracy. Let us quit talking about democracy unless the legislative branch of our Government is going to pass the legislation. There is no use beating our breasts about democracy and in a time when there is no stress, when there is no real emergency, handing over unlimited power to the executive branch of the Government, which, under our Constitution, has no right to legislate in behalf of the Congress.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. The Senator from Maryland is aware, although he did not mention it—and I think it ought to be mentioned—that the Reichstag of Germany granted Chancelor Bruening the legislative power and right to issue decrees.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator for his contribution. Yes; just as we are doing here, the Reichstag in Germany did under Mr. Bruening. It gave him the right to issue temporary decrees in his name; but that is not the American system of Government.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I will yield in just a moment.

Mr. HATCH. I was interested in the point just raised by the Senator. How did the Senator say that right arose in Germany?

Mr. TYDINGS. To what right does the Senator refer?

Mr. HATCH. The right of the chancelor to issue executive decrees.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand the Reichstag adopted a resolution providing that during the time it was not in session the chancelor could issue such decrees as he deemed necessary to cover the period of the emergency.

Mr. HATCH. Was it not a constitutional right?

Mr. TYDINGS. No. The constitution of Weimar was a democratic constitution which lodged the legislative power in the Reichstag, or the German Congress.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Under the present proposal we do not have to pass any law. We simply acquiesce and let the Executive run the business. That is the only difference.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the radio these days is full of appeals for democracy, appeals against the totalitarian states, appeals against authoritarianism, appeals against dictatorships. What, in essence, is the difference between dictatorship and democracy? Countries under a dictator have tax laws; we have tax laws. They have railroad legislation; we have railroad legislation. They have relief programs; we have relief programs. They have rearmament programs; and so do we. In effect, the dictatorship countries do the same things that we do. They carry out governmental programs. What, then, is the essential difference between their program and our program? It is one of method; that is all.

Our method of carrying out those programs, our method of formulating those programs, our method of operating government is different from theirs. We have a representative government. The chosen representatives of the people form the legislative branch, and in that branch resides all the legislative power possessed by the Federal Government. The Executive cannot pass a law or a resolution, or formulate a policy, or spend a dollar, or do one thing that we do not empower him to do. That is all the difference there is between the two forms of government. Yet, while we are condemning the authoritarian states, we are bit by bit adopting their methods which we condemn.

We go on the air; we arouse the country to the danger, and then we pursue the exact methods that the authoritarian states pursue. Is that not true? Who will rise to say that that is not true? Who will take issue with my statement? While we are talking about preserving democracy, while we are appropriating billions of dollars to save democracy, we are shooting democracy to death right here on the floor of the United States Senate and perhaps, also, at the other end of the Capitol.

Where is the emergency? There is no foe at the gate. There exists no such emergency today as existed in 1933, 1934, and 1935. The worst days of the depression, happily, are behind us. The banks are still open. Why cannot we legislate on this important subject? Why must we turn it over to the executive branch? Are we incompetent? Are we unable to do so?

Oh, I know the argument. It is said, "You cannot write a plan to reorganize the Government to which the House and Senate will agree." Who said that? Who can produce any proof to support that point of view? That is a mere supposition. I believe the Congress can write a plan, and I believe if that were done and the plan were presented to both Houses of Congress it could be adopted and would go to the Chief Executive, who would perform his regular function of approving or disapproving the plan.

Have we not gone far enough in handing over power to the executive branch of the Government? Many powers had to be handed over, perhaps. There may be just argument to support what has been done; but why hand this power over? Where is the emergency? There is no emergency. If we hand this power over, if we pass the bill, we simply write on the statute books of our country that the legislative branch of the Government is incompetent to legislate.

Furthermore, while we are on the subject, let me say that I do not want too much neutrality legislation, either. I would rather see Congress stay in session all summer, if need be-that is what we were elected for-and all fall, and all winter, and deal with these questions as they come up. Good man though the Chief Executive may be, and though his intentions may be of the very best, and his acts may be in the interests of the whole people—I do not want to reflect on him-yet I do not want to give to the Chief Executive the power to declare war, because the Constitution says that the Congress shall have the sole power to declare war. Bit by bit we have been handing him the power, bit by bit we have surrendered one after the other all the legislative powers which we heretofore exercised—the two-billion-dollar equalization fund; the right to reorganize the Government; the right to spend billions of dollars in any way that the President approves; the right to spend billions of dollars under W. P. A., not as you think or I think, but as he thinks.

There may have been some justification for that in 1933, 1934, and 1935, but I submit that the time has come when we ought to say where the money is to be spent and what action the Government may take which will lead to the pathway of war. Likewise we ought to say what plan of reorganization is to be adopted, because that is what we are here for.

Congress goes home in the summertime. When a great emergency exists I would rather have Congress continue in session, or we could come here each Monday morning, after our routine work is done, and consider the international situation from day to day, from week to week, and know where we are going, than to write a blank check which might be all right and might not be all right, and might be contrary to the action we would have taken had we acted as a legislative body should act rather than to have delegated power to the executive branch.

So, Mr. President, although I realize that the Senator from South Carolina has worked hard and long, and has done excellent and constructive work in trying to reconcile warring opinion, I rise merely to say that in my judgment, even though we may have made some headway, the question of passing legislation that we may not want, or somebody else may not want, has nothing to do with the issue. We must do our job; and I hope no Senator, either Democrat or Republican, will again rise on this floor and talk about bureaucracy or the inefficiency of an executive bureau, or dictatorship, or the loss of democracy all over the world, and then, when his name is called, vote for a bill which takes the legislative power away from us and hands it over, lock, stock, and barrel, to the Executive, with the excuse that we have saved our face because 10 days after the plan is submitted, although we cannot amend it or change it, we can take it or leave it. In other words, we may be voting for a plan of reorganization to which a majority of the Senate is opposed.

Mr. MALONEY. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any remarks during the course of the discussion on the bill. I am sorry that I must so soon set aside the expressed hope of the distinguished Senator from Maryland that no Senator would again rise on the floor of the Senate and talk about the abuses of bureaucracy.

Mr. President, I was among those who resisted the reorganization bill last year. I was bitterly opposed to it because it seemed to me that it was a delegation of power without an easy recapture. However, it seems to me that the objections to the bill of last year have been overcome, and that those who led the fight last year have won the fight. So, because I am hateful of bureaucracy—because I detest its growing power and unfair influence-I propose to help bring about reorganization of the Government.

It is true that no real emergency, as such, exists. As I see it, there can be no emergency in the matter of reorganization. There comes before that the final catastrophe. For 150 years bureaucracy has grown; and, much as I dislike to be the one to admit it on the floor, Mr. President, Congress finds itself unable to cope successfully with the matter of reorganization. This is because of the wide difference of opinion here, because of the wide difference of interests over the land, because of sectionalism, or because one Senator or another has a favorite bureau, institution, commission, or organization.

Mr. President, I have concluded that the only way reorganization can come is by delegating the power to the Chief Executive, and at the same time retaining, as best we can, the influence and the power of Congress.

Earlier in the day some thought that a suggestion was made-and I think it was misinterpreted-that failure to vote for the bill would be evidence of a mistrust of the President of the United States. I am sorry there was such an implication. I have stated before that I thought President Roosevelt was the greatest leader of our generation. I have said that I thought he saved this Republic. I have said that I believed he would burn at the stake for his opinion. I do not take any of that back. I continue to insist that I was right. However, I reserve the right to resist any legislation without having it implied that I mistrust the President of the United States. I believe our solemn and sacred duty as Members of the Senate is to abide completely by our own convictions.

I agree with the thought and purpose within the Wheeler amendment. I propose to vote for the Wheeler amendment, and, if the opportunity is afforded, to vote for what appear to me to be other corrections and perfections in the bill. Because bureaucracy is a despicable thing, because there is a need for moving toward economy in government, and because I am firmly convinced that it is a subject so big and so unwieldy that Congress alone will not meet the situation, I propose to vote for the best reorganization bill we can devise.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly in support of the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] to the pending executive reorganization bill.

This amendment would formally declare that the purpose of the bill is to effect reorganizations in the interest of reductions in governmental costs.

I say that this amendment should be adopted, by all means. I can see no logical reason for opposing it, unless the proposed reorganization is to be merely a shifting around and reshuffling of executive agencies, without any gain to the

Mr. President, I was discouraged, and I believe the majority of people in the country were discouraged, 2 years ago when President Roosevelt declared that the Federal Government could not function efficiently on less than $7,000,000,000

Today we are running on a basis of practically $10,000,-000,000 a year; and the President informs us that any decided retrenchment in Government expenditures will seriously impede recovery. That statement is extremely discouraging.

It is proposed in the bill to give very broad powers to the Chief Executive in reorganizing departments. These broad powers could be used by the President to simplify the administration of the executive departments, and also materially to reduce the cost of administration. However, these same broad powers, if not restrained in some way, could also be used greatly to increase the functions of government, and greatly to increase the cost of administration.

Frankly, in the light of the experience of the past 6 years in increasing Government bureaus, boards, commissions, and other spending agencies-many of these increases and expansions having been accomplished by Executive orders without specific approval of Congress, I can see much prospect of increasing bureaucracy and increasing expenditures under this measure, unless it is properly safeguarded.

One safeguard would be to adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn] and to set out plainly in the act itself a direction to the President to effect the reorganization in the interest of economy, with the express object of reducing Government expenditures.

There should be one more safeguard, if the proposed powers are to be given to the President at all. That safeguard should be the retained power of the Congress to pass on whatever reorganization plan is worked out by the President and his advisers.

This second safeguard—and I consider it a more effectual one than merely the direction to the President to use the proposed powers to effect governmental economies-is provided in the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler], which would require affirmative action by Congress before the proposed executive reorganization program could become effective.

Mr. President, I admit that any effective plan of executive reorganization probably will have to be initiated by the Executive, rather than by Congress. However, I also contend that in the last analysis Congress should have and should retain and zealously guard the power finally to pass on any proposed reorganization.

The Nation has had several unfortunate experiences through the tendency of Congress in the past few years to delegate too much power, and especially too much legislative power, to the Chief Executive.

I give the present Chief Executive entire credit for sincerity of purpose and a real desire to serve the best interests of the Nation.

In its present form the bill gives him too much power to be entrusted to one man, no matter who the President may be.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn], as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio will be stated.

The Legislative Clerk. On page 3, line 22, after the words "Railroad Retirement Board", it is proposed to insert the words "Federal Home Loan Bank Board, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, among the exempted agencies which the committee included in the bill are the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. My amendment proposes to include also the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which performs approximately the same functions for the building and loan associations that the Federal Reserve Board performs for the banks, and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, which insures building and loan deposits in the same manner that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation insures bank deposits.

I do not know the reasons which led the committee to include the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. They had not been included by the House. Whatever the reasons are, it seems to me they must apply equally to the organizations which perform the same functions for the building and loan associations.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator knows, does he not, that the Federal Reserve System does not cost the Government a penny? The salaries of the Board itself are paid out of assessments on the banks. The Federal Reserve System is purely a private institution, except for the supervisory power of the Federal Reserve Board. The System does not cost the Government a penny. Neither does the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation cost the Government a penny.

Mr. TAFT. In the first place, the Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation does not cost the Government a penny, either. I am not sure about the Federal Home Loan Board. But if we think the cost ought to be imposed on the building and loan associations Congress is perfectly at liberty to do so. I do not see that there is any distinction as to the function performed, which is the only question we are considering in this particular amendment. The Federal Home Loan Bank Board supervises about nine banks which then finance building and loan associations. Those building and loan associations are today financing about 40 percent of the new-home construction in the United States. They represent an important function in the general program. Of course for years there has been a hostility between the banks and the building and loan associations. They are jealous of each other. In every State of which I know the distinction is recognized. They are under different supervisory powers. So there is every reason for preventing a reorganization which would put building and loan associations under the banks, which is what they fear under a reorganization of the kind proposed, when the banks are excepted and the organizations referred to are not excepted.

It seems to me, in fact, the organizations referred to in my amendment perform a limited function. They supervise only building and loan associations. I myself see much more reason to include the Federal Reserve Board and the Deposit Insurance Corporation under the reorganization. because in the case of those organizations there is a great duplication of power. There are three different bodies supervising banks. There is much less objection, it seems to me, to exempting from this bill the operation of this concern which is limited to a particular group of institutions, administering a policy about which there is no question, administering a policy which, so far as I can see, could not possibly be administered any more cheaply or any better if it were put under some other department. Consequently, the very reasons that lead to the exemption of the list of institutions now appearing in the bill applies with redoubled force to the building and loan associations organization.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the Federal Reserve bank stock is owned by the member banks; the expenses of the Federal Reserve bank are paid by assessments upon the banks; and its funds never go into the general fund of the Treasury. There is a difference between the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board.

Under the reorganization bill passed in March 1933, the President ordered a reorganization of farm-credit institutions, and a splendid service was rendered. We had then, just as we have now, Federal land banks, cooperative banks, and the seed-loan organization. They were merged and were put under a governor who has charge of the Farm Credit Administration. A great service was rendered, in my opinion, in bringing together those agencies affecting loans upon farms.

I do not think the organization referred to by the Senator from Ohio should be exempted. The Government now has the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, the Federal Savings and Loan Association, the United States Housing Authority, and the Federal Housing Administration. Members of the Senate who are now opposed to or who have been opposed to he pending bill, such as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Townsend], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and others, members of the committee presided over by the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], made an investigation, and, so far as my knowledge goes, the one bill that was introduced as a result of that investigation proposed "to establish the Federal Home Credit Administration, to coordinate the housing activities of the United States, and for other purposes."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it not true that the various housing activities and housing authorities and housing commissions created by law are outside, perhaps, of accounting matters, the outstanding examples at the present time of institutions in connection with which great savings might be made under the United States Government by the simplification and consolidation of activities?

Mr. BYRNES. I know nothing about the views of the Executive, but certainly if I had the task of bringing about a reorganization I would have in mind the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri. Today the people in this country say, "You have a United States Housing Authority, a Federal Housing Administration, the Federal Loan and Insurance Corporation referred to by the Senator from Ohio." If there ever was an instance of reorganization being desirable and practicable this appears to me to be such an instance. We talk about Congress doing it, but let me say there was a bill introduced by the Senator from Virginia, with the backing of the committee of which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] and the Senator from Delaware were members. That bill was introduced on May 6, 1937, and here we are in March 1939, and no action has been taken. I will read what the Senator from Virginia said about it. I am sorry that Senator is not on the floor, because I know he would agree with me. The Senator from Virginia said:

I have introduced a bill, though I have not been able to secure any consideration of it—

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] is not present. I wanted to read this for his benefit, because it could have been said 25 years ago and it will be said 25 years from now. The Senator from Virginia, as earnestly advocating a reorganization of the Government as I have done throughout my service in Congress, pleading in the Senate, said:

I have introduced a bill, though I have not been able to secure any consideration of it, providing for the consolidation of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration, and I am advised by experts that the enactment of that bill alone would save—

To the taxpayers—

What is going on? The Banking and Currency Committee of the Senate has pending before it a bill with reference to the Federal Housing Administration. Who is opposing it? The Home Owners' Loan Corporation. The subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee has been sitting day after day. Why? Because that bill might take some little power away from the Home Owners' Loan Corporation. Therefore, the Banking and Currency Committee has held hearings day after day on a subject involving two housing activities, two lending agencies, each fighting for power; and when it comes to a bill which does not even mention institutions referred to by the Senator from Ohio, there is not a Senator on the floor who has not received telegrams from home. These have been sent out-prepaid telegrams—so somebody is paying for them—begging the Senate to vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio. Why? Because, perchance, somebody in the administration at some time might propose a reorganization plan. If any reorganization plan is proposed, I hope this is one place it will reach.

If, as the Senator from Virginia says, in the opinion of experts, by the merger of only two institutions $25,000,000 could be saved, I want to know whether the Senate, at the behest of building and loan associations that are acting merely at the suggestion of a telegram sent by their lobbyist here in the city of Washington, will adopt this amendment and thus prove to my good friend from Maryland that the Senate is incompetent.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Federal Home Loan Bank Corporation was created in the beginning, very largely, to bale out the building and loan associations, put them on their feet, and enable them to function again. If the amendment which is now pending should be agreed to, the President, ihe saw fit, might combine the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration and the United States Housing Authority which is now a bureau in the Department of the Interior, and all other housing activities, but he could not touch the Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which is set up for the aid of building and loan associations.

Mr. BYRNES. It is not intended by the man who holds the job that it shall be touched. I know what has been done during the last week. The question is whether this agency has the power that is behind other agencies so that when they say it cannot be touched it shall not be touched.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. I will yield to the Senator in a moment. In the case of the Federal Insurance Loan Corporation there is no privately owned stock. There are $100,000,000 of Government capital and $16,000,000 of surplus owned by the Government. To say that because telegrams are sent throughout the country by one man in the city of Washington we should not act upon a question such as this is to confess omnipotence, which I certainly am not going to admit at this time. I will wait until the vote is taken.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator state on what principle the other agencies in this long list are exempted?

Mr. BYRNES. That has been stated several times. I stated it with the frankness that I generally employ. They are quasi-judicial organizations, with the exception of the Veterans' Administration, and they are exempted because the Senator from Ohio would have voted to exempt them.

Mr. TAFT. Which one?

Mr. BYRNES. The Veterans' Administration. Will the Senator say he would not vote to exempt that organization? The Railroad Retirement Board is also exempted because the Senator would have voted to exempt it.

Mr. TAFT. Is not the reason that these organizations perform particular functions which Congress does not want to have interfered with?

Mr. BYRNES. They perform particular functions, and certainly Congress is not going to interfere with them; a majority would not do so. The Senator from South Carolina would vote against any exemption, but the Senator from Ohio would not. Another one is the Engineering Corps of the Army. The three organizations referred to have been exempted because not only the Senator from Ohio but Senators from practically all the other States would vote to exempt them, and, rather than spend 3 or 4 days discussing the question, as I told the Senator from Nebraska, the committee last year exempted them and the House exempted them. I do not have to ask why the House did it. The House did it for the reason I have indicated.

It is all right for us to stand here and say, "Look back through the political history of the country, and we must agree that parliamentary government is at stake; and, parliamentary government now being at stake, we cannot say that we cannot act."

Well, what are you going to say? Did you act? For 25 years every Republican President has been demanding action. Did you act? No. When this bill came up in the House of Representatives, every Republican when his name was called voted against it, with the exception of six or seven. Did the Republicans act this time? They did not, because the bill was submitted during a Democratic administration. The same thing happened when Mr. Hoover submitted the proposal during a Republican administration.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] says we must not admit that we are incompetent to act. I say when the proposal was submitted then, it was defeated. What happened during the Harding administration? A joint committee was created. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], the then Senator from New York [Mr. WADS-WORTH], and a number of Members still in the House or Senate sat for nearly a year and submitted a detailed plan of organization which Members today say ought to be submitted to the Congress. What happened? When it was submitted various amendments were offered, just as the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] now offers this amendment, and in a few minutes another amendment will be offered for civil aeronautics, and in a few minutes thereafter another one, and today we have had the amendment about the Employees' Compensation Commission. The Senators who offered the amendments and voted to exempt various governmental agencies in the Harding administration looked at the plan of reorganization and said, "No, no; not us. Not one vote for it. We are for reorganization, but we are not going to do this, because it touches the department in which we are interested."

Senators tell me today, "You know old So-and-so?"
"Yes." "He is a fine old fellow, and he has just been to see me." I said, "Yes; he is a fine old fellow. He has been to see me, too." They say, "Have you looked into civil aeronautics?" "Yes." The telephone companies in South Carolina have made money in the last few days simply reporting on long-distance telephone calls. These calls were inspired by the aviation companies; and why? Because the men who hold the jobs here, knowing that it would be unwise for them to do it, get the representatives outside to do it; and from the Pacific to the Atlantic they are busy at this very minute.

Since I have been on the floor I have had Members tell me about efforts that have been made to get them to vote to exempt certain agencies. That is why we cannot legislate on the matter; and when we exempt them we get into the difficulty of having our friends at home, in the building and loan associations, ask us to exempt agencies. If it is done, we might as well exempt all the others.

I want to say just one more thing to Senators who believe, as does the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd], who has devoted a great deal of time to this question, that one bill he reported from his committee, recommending the merger of these housing activities would save $25,000,000. I want to know if we are going to deny to the President even the chance to consider saving $25,000,000 by merging the various housing activities and agencies that are lending money, when the people of the United States at this time cannot even distinguish between them, because we have so many lending agencies.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRNES. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator were President, and a measure were passed authorizing the President to get up a scheme of consolidating Government agencies, with the exemption of the various housing authorities which have been agreed upon on all sides as the classical illustration of a place where a saving could be made, would the Senator know where to begin on putting a program of economy into effect?

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I should not know where to begin. I dare say the Members of the Senate themselves cannot distinguish between the activities of the United States Housing Authority and the Federal Housing Administration, and they are up here fighting each other to try to hold some power and to hold a little prestige. To exempt them is just an admission that the Congress cannot do anything toward reorganization.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I have sufficient sympathy with the general purpose of the pending bill so that if the committee had not included the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, I should not have offered the pending amendment. Nothing in what the Senator has said, however, seems to me to draw any distinction between the inclusion of those two agencies and the inclusion of the two agencies which I suggest, except that these two agencies are interested in financing and controlling a limited number of building and loan associations, whereas the other agencies control banks. I see nothing in the argument which would justify the inclusion of one without including the other.

I do not know how any money can be saved by abolishing this organization, or by consolidating it with another agency. It is an agency which simply finances a great many existing private organizations. It does not go out and build any houses. We are not going to affect in any way a Government housing program. The Government itself is not doing any financing. It is simply a group which is interested in protecting and building up the building and loan associations; and I may say to the Senator that this is no question of telegrams. This is no question of lobbyists. I have many organizations in my State. I have known the members of those organizations for years. They feel as strongly on this subject as anyone could feel, as strongly as the veterans feel on the subject of the Veterans' Administration. The Senator, in effect, says that because the veterans are strong we are afraid of them and we ought to exempt them, and because the building and loan associations are weak we ought not to exempt them.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, the Senator is hopeless if he cannot understand the difference between the Federal Reserve System and these other systems. It has been stated here that experts have given the opinion that $25,000,000 can be saved by these consolidations. The Federal Reserve System, since its foundation 25 years ago, has cost the Government only $50,000, and that was to set up the banks. Every single, solitary penny that is expended by the Federal Reserve System is exacted in fees from the banks, and the Government does not have to pay a dollar. The stock is privately owned. The Government does not own one dollar of the stock, but it does own stock in these other corporations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Taft].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I have already sent to the desk an amendment which I offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 6, beginning with line 16, it is proposed to strike out all down to and including line 4 on page 7 and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 5. The reorganization specified in the plan shall not become effective until after the enactment of a joint resolution specifically approving such plan. Any such joint resolution shall provide for the approval of such plan as a whole, without modifications, and shall contain no other provisions. If any such joint resolution providing for the approval of any such plan is introduced in either House, it shall at once become the special order therein and that House shall proceed to its consideration, without reference to a committee; and, not later than 1 hour after that House meets on the tenth calendar day (Sundays excepted) after the day on which such joint resolution was introduced, a vote shall be taken in that House on the question of the passage of a joint resolution approving such plan. If any such joint resolution is passed by one House, it shall be sent to the other House, and that House shall immediately proceed to its consideration, without reference to a committee. Not later than 1 hour after that House meets on the tenth calendar day (Sundays excepted) after it has received such joint resolution, a final vote shall be taken in that House on the question of the passage of such joint resolution. No notice or motion to reconsider the vote shall be in order.

On page 9, strike out all of part 2 down to and including line 2 on page 14.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, this amendment of mine has been argued here, prior to the time of its offer, for so long and so vehemently by some Senators that I do not know that it is necessary for me even to take up much of the time of the Senate in discussing it. I do, however, wish to call attention to some statements which have been made with reference to the amendment.

First of all, it has been said by my distinguished friend from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] that if this amendment should be adopted, we might just as well not have any legislation on the subject at all. As a matter of fact, I agree with much that the Senator from South Carolina has said with reference to reorganization. I know, just as well as he does, the difficulties of getting through legislation to reorganize a department, because several years ago-even before the Senator from South Carolina came to the Senate, I think-I introduced, during a Republican administration, a resolution for the purpose of making a study of certain reorganization plans which I felt would save the Government a considerable amount of money. But when we are talking about saving the money for the Government of the United States, let me say that we do not need any reorganization plan to save the Government a great deal of money in a number of the departments.

We can go to the Coal Commission and cut down a great number of employees who have been employed by that Commission, and we can save hundreds of thousands of dollars, without any reorganization bill. If we desire, we can go to the Civil Aeronautics Authority and save thousands upon thousands of dollars without any reorganization plan. We can go into the Federal Housing Authority and save thousands of dollars without any reorganization plan. We can go into dollars without any reorganization plan. We can go into every one of the departments, and, without any reorganization plan, without any legislation of any kind or character, if we really want to do the job, we can do it without any legislation of the kind now proposed.

I say this without attempting to reflect on the administration. Never in my memory has there been such extravagance and such waste as there has been in the new departments which have been set up in the Government under the emergency acts. I challenge anyone who has been in the Senate any length of time to stand on the floor of the Senate and deny that there has not been more waste and more extravagance under these new departments than there ever was in any department of the Government since he has been a Member of the Senate. Notwithstanding that fact, I wish to see a reorganization bill passed. The charge is always made against the reorganization bill that if it comes in there will be a filibuster; that it is not possible to get anything done because some Senator or some group of Senators can occupy the floor of the Senate and debate it and debate it until the proposed legislation is killed.

Under the amendment I have proposed I have suggested that when a proposed plan comes before us we will take it as it comes from the President of the United States; that we will agree to debate it not more than 10 days; that we will not permit it to go to a committee, to be held up in committee, but it will have to come on to the floor of the Senate immediately, and will have to be made a special order of business, and within 10 days voted upon by the House of Representatives and likewise by the Senate.

All I am attempting to do under my amendment is to reserve the right to the Senate and to the House of Representatives to indicate, after debating the proposal for 10 days, whether or not Congress desires to have the plan adopted. By the amendment we would agree to invoke cloture, for after the proposal was discussed for a limited time, the Senate would vote.

Let me read a statement that was made in the House of Representatives by the Honorable Hatton W. Sumners. I think everyone will agree that Mr. Sumners is unquestionably one of the ablest lawyers in the House of Representatives, not only one of the ablest lawyers but recognized by everyone as being one of the outstanding Members of the House. In speaking with reference to this matter he said:

Mr. Speaker, while the House has technically lost jurisdiction of the reorganization bill, that bill is still in process; and if the Members of the House should become convinced, as I am convinced, that some such amendment as that offered by me in the House when the bill was under consideration here should be incorporated before the bill becomes law, that result would probably take place.

The House, by its own bill, has cut itself off from the opportunity itself to prevent the going into effect of a reorganization plan which it may believe to be contrary to the public interest. There can be no question about that.

To quote further:

There is a very definite similarity in relationship and in responsibility between the submission to the Houses of Congress by the President of proposed legislation and the submission by him of a proposed reorganization. Under the Constitution, if the President dent submits proposed legislation, either House of Congress is possessed of the power and charged with the duty to prevent its enactment if in its judgment the proposed legislation is contrary to the public interest

Let me interrupt the reading of the statement long enough to say that the Senator from South Carolina has stated, in reference to this particular proposed legislation, that President Taft urged it, that some other Presidents urged a reorganization legislation. Then the Senator asked, "Did Congress act?" And he said: "Because Congress did not act upon these proposals made by a Republican President, and again by a Democratic President, and again by another Democratic President, the Congress of the United States has shown itself to be incompetent to pass legislation of this

Mr. President, I challenge that statement. I say that that is not any indication whatsoever that the Senate or the House of Representatives is incompetent to legislate. President Taft undoubtedly sent proposed legislation to Congress which one branch of the Congress or the other said should not become a law, because in their judgment it was not in the public interest. President Wilson sent a proposal to the Congress which Democratic Senators and Democratic Representatives, as well as Republican Representatives and Senators, said should not become a law because it was not in the public interest. President Roosevelt has sent a legislative proposal here and Senators have rejected it, at least some of it, because they felt it was not in the public interest.

But because various Presidents of the United States have sent proposals for legislation to the Congress which a majority of the Congress has said was not in the public interest does that mean that Congress is incompetent to legislate and incompetent to do a particular job? Is the fact that some President of the United States has recommended a reorganization bill, or because several of them have done so, any reason for saying that we are incompetent to act, when a majority of the Congress has said the proposals were not in the public interest?

We hear men criticizing the Congress, denouncing the Senate, saying that we are incompetent to act, and that the Congress ought to be abolished. That is what is being said, that Congress ought to be abolished. When we stand before the American people and say that we are incompetent, they are going to quote the speeches we make. I am not one of the Members of the Senate who want to foul their own nest, particularly at this time.

Representative Sumners of Texas, in speaking of the constitutionality of the proposed legislation, proceeded to say:

That arrangement is much older than our own Constitution. It

That arrangement is much older than our own Constitution. It began with the beginning of the British Parliament. That arrangement in the long history of Anglo-Saxon government has helped to preserve stability in government.

This reorganization bill ignores the philosophy of that arrangement, and the House by its own legislation cuts itself off from the opportunity independently to prevent a reorganization from going into effect which in its judgment would be contrary to the public interest.

Just stop and think what the Senate would be doing. We are saying that we are to pass some legislation and turn it over to the executive branch of the Government, and when it comes back we will not be able to stop it even though 99 percent or 100 percent of us think it is contrary to the public interest.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield. Mr. OVERTON. I do not know that I follow the Senator in that contention. It seems to me that the Congress would not be surrendering its legislative power by the enactment of the pending bill. It would retain its power of legislation. If, under the proposed legislation, the President should send to the Congress a plan of reorganization, and if, as the Senator has pointed out, 99 percent of the Members of the Congress should be opposed to the plan-

Mr. WHEELER. Ninety-nine percent of the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. Of the Senate? Then I beg the Senator's pardon. The point I am making is that the Congress does not surrender its power of legislation, because if a majority of the Congress should disapprove of any plan which the President may prepare and may send to the Congress, Congress would still have the affirmative power of enacting legislation which would completely do away with the proposed plan.

Mr. WHEELER. Then it would have to be done by a twothirds vote.

Mr. OVERTON. No.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, yes; because the President could veto the action of the Congress, and there would have to be a two-thirds vote to override his veto.

Mr. OVERTON. No; the Congress, by a majority vote of both Houses, could enact any legislation with reference to any particular plan, or could enact any legislation repeal-ing the provisions of the pending bill, if it should be enacted into law, in whole or in part.

Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no.
Mr. OVERTON. The Congress of the United States cannot, and does not, by the provisions of the pending bill, surrender its legislative power. The only way in which the Congress of the United States can be deprived of its power of legislation is by a constitutional amendment and not by an act of one Congress as against what another Congress may do.

Mr. WHEELER. I agree that from the constitutional standpoint the Senator is correct. There is no power under the Constitution to do what is sought to be done in the proposed legislation. I agree with the Senator 100 percent in reference to that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. But I am saying that if what is being sought by the proposed legislation is constitutional, then we would deprive one branch or the other of Congress of the opportunity to keep from going into effect legislation upon which 100 percent of the Members of that body thought was contrary to the public interest.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think the Senator misunderstood the Senator from Louisiana when he referred to the fact that the pending bill provided that the President might veto a resolution condemning a plan submitted by him to the Congress, and that it would take a two-thirds vote to override the veto. The bill provides for the adoption of a concurrent resolution, and concurrent resolutions never go to the President.

Mr. WHEELER. I understand.
Mr. BARKLEY. There would not be any question of veto.
Mr. WHEELER. The Senator and I were discussing an entirely different situation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. I quite agree with what the able Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Overton] has said, that, notwithstanding any legislation we may enact, the present Congress or a subsequent Congress may enact such legislation as it chooses, whether or not it conforms with the pending measure. But then what is to be gained by passing the proposed legis-lation? What are we to gain by it? The President, for instance, could send in a reorganization plan without our authority; it is not necessary for us to tell the President that he may send it in. There is nothing gained in that respect by passing the proposed legislation. Then, when the plan reaches Congress we may do with it what we please. So, what is gained by passing the proposed legislation?

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with what the Senator from Idaho has said. If the legislation is constitutional, then by its very terms the Senate is depriving itself of the power of preventing legislation going into effect when it itself says that in its judgment it is against public policy.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I was simply taking issue with the Senator in what I understood to be the statement made by him that if we pass the bill we are surrendering and abandoning legislative authority.

Mr. WHEELER. We are if the bill is constitutional. Mr. OVERTON. I understand we are simply giving the power to the President of the United States to initiate reorganization in the form of a plan, and that plan will go into effect unless it meets with the disapproval of both Houses.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; but I am sure the Senator does not follow it through.

Mr. OVERTON. I think I understand the theory of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. I made a suggestion to the Senator the other day. I said, suppose the plan is sent to Congress by the President of the United States, and the House of Representatives should approve the plan, but the Senate should disapprove the plan; it would still become law.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.
Mr. WHEELER. Consequently I say, without fear of contradiction, that we would be depriving either House of the Congress of the United States of its constitutional right affirmatively to pass upon legislation, if the bill now under consideration should pass.

Mr. OVERTON. To that extent I agree with the Senator. Mr. WHEELER. Of course.
Mr. BARKLEY. The same thing might be said about any proposal for legislation. One House might adopt it unanimously, but if the other takes no action on it we have no law. Every law that is enacted to some extent interferes with the status quo. So if one were to use that argument against the right of Congress to veto a plan which the President had been authorized to submit, he might as well argue that although both Houses have not passed a measure, by reason of the fact that one of them passed it, it should be law.

Mr. WHEELER. Just the reverse of the situation is true.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. If I correctly follow the argument of the Senator from Montana, it seems to me his contention is that we delegate to the President the power to do certain things which we have no right to delegate to him, and if a Presidential order comes back to the Congress, and the Congress does not disapprove it, then it becomes a fixed order, without the approval of Congress, and if attacked in the courts perhaps would be held unconstitutional.

Mr. WHEELER. I think so.

Mr. LOGAN. While under the plan proposed by the Senator from Montana the President makes the reorganization, and then Congress affirmatively passes a resolution approving it after it has been done, thereby retaining its own legislative power, and exercises its own legislative power.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. The Senator has stated my exact position better than I myself could have stated it. I want to say that it is not my position alone, but every lawyer in this body with whom I have talked, who has examined the proposal, has come to the same conclusion with respect to it.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator and all other Members of the Senate will agree that if no act were passed at all, and the President had at this time on his desk a complete plan for reorganizing the Government, he could submit it to the Senate and the House with the recommendation that we incorporate it into law. Is that not true?

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.

Mr. TYDINGS. In that event we could examine the plan and take it all or change it. In the event we pass the pending legislation, and the President submits a plan to both Houses, have we the right to change it?

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. TYDINGS. If we should vote it down the whole gesture would be a complete nullity, would it not?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. Mr. TYDINGS. We would be right where we are today.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then why, I ask, does not the President, who wants a reorganization, submit a plan to the Senate and the House, such as he thinks will be wise, with the recommendation that we incorporate it into law? Why is not that done, rather than to proceed in this indirect man-

Mr. WHEELER. I agree with the Senator that that is what ought to be done, and I have said that I am willing to go along, because I want to see reorganization. Argument was made on the floor of the Senate when the previous reorganization bill was under consideration that the President could not accomplish any reorganization because Senators would filibuster against it, and debate it, so that the measure would not have a chance. So I said, "We will limit debate to 10 days." Then it was said, "But it may go to the committee, and the committee may hold it up." In reply I said, "We will provide that it shall not go to committee, and that it will be taken up in the Senate." I said. "We will agree that it will be voted upon without amendment. We will take it up and debate it for 10 days, and then Congress will either vote it up or vote it down." Of course, there are those who do not want to see Congress take affirmative action, and act to deprive one branch of the Congress of its legislative right, and even provide that if one branch acts favorably and the other does not the plan shall become the law. That would be quite the contrary, just the opposite from what the Senator from Kentucky said a moment ago.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I recall that some years ago, soon after I came to the Senate, I made the statement that we create bureaus and that was the last control we had over them: that after that they controlled the Congress. If the President should send to the Congress a reorganization bill which should be placed before the Congress without any limitations at all, other than under such rules as we have, of course we would never get such a bill through Congress at all. But the simple amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana brings the legislation within the Constitution. In addition, he compels action within a reasonable time on any reorganization plan submitted by the President.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. I understand the Senator views as unconstitutional the provision now in the bill, which provides that any reorganization measure shall be sent to Congress by the President, and unless Congress objects, it shall become law

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I think there is no doubt about it. Mr. MINTON. Let me direct the Senator's attention to action of the Congress when, with respect to the rules of procedure in the highest court of the land, it passed legislation at a former session to permit the Court to formulate the rules which were to go into effect unless the Congress took adverse action before the adjournment of the last session. We provided that the Supreme Court should adopt those rules of court and submit them to the Congress and if the report of the Court should stay on our desks in Congress until the last session adjourned, and we took no action about the rules, they should become the law of the land, and they are the law of the land, because we took no action concerning them. I take it that the Supreme Court of the United States would not have been a party to a proceeding of that kind had they thought that the whole thing was a nullity.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not think that is a parallel case at all, in that it does not deal with substantive law. It simply deals with the rules of practice before the Court itself. That seems to me quite a different proposition from dealing with substantive law.

Mr. MINTON. It deals with the whole law of procedure. Mr. WHEELER. Let us assume that the Senator is correct in that statement; is that any excuse whatever for taking away from the Congress of the United States the power to pass upon questions of public policy which perhaps vitally affect the people of the State of Indiana, or the people of Montana? I will repeat what I said before. The West is vitally interested in reclamation; it is vitally interested likewise in the Forest Service, because of the vast forests in the West. In the House of Representatives there are, relatively speaking, few Members from the West, because the Western States are sparsely settled. Legislation affecting that section, to do away with the Reclamation Bureau, might very easily be passed by the Congress of the United States, because I would say that a large part of the Eastern States are opposed to irrigation and reclamation.

Suppose, however, that the House approved a reorganization plan doing away with irrigation and reclamation, and it came over to the Senate of the United States, and because of the numerical strength of the West in the United States Senate we said, "We will not approve it." It would still be the law of the land, notwithstanding the fact that both branches of the Congress had not approved that particular legislation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is accurate to say that the Court, as a matter of its own inherent right, makes rules of court without any reference whatever to Congress. However, the President of the United States cannot reorganize the Government without action by Congress.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not believe the analogy drawn by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] is a correct one. The Court may act on its own initiative, but the President may not do so.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield. Mr. MINTON. The Court may not make rules of court which have the force of law unless Congress says it may make them, or unless the Congress has failed to provide for rules and the necessity requires rules. The courts have no inherent power to make rules, except as a matter of necessity. Otherwise, they would be a legislative body.

Mr. WHEELER. The Congress of the United States has always delegated to the Interior Department and to other departments of the Government the right to enact rules and regulations for the government of the particular departments in carrying out legislation, the details of which we cannot attend to. That course has been held to be constitutional. For example, the Department of the Interior makes rules and regulations with reference to public lands in the carrying out of the public-land laws.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President

Mr. WHEELER. I shall be glad to yield in just a moment. So it is with every other department. We delegate to the departments the power to make rules and regulations. However, we do not delegate to the departments the power to change the substantive law of the United States of America in making those rules and regulations. When we delegate the power to make rules and regulations we do it with reference to a specific piece of legislation which we enacted. We do not grant general power to change the law or to abolish functions of office. We give no department the power to abolish the functions of office. I never heard of such an instance except the one to which the Senator called my attention the other day. If we did it in that instance, in my judgment, we did something that we should not have done, something that we had no right to do.

That instance is then cited as a reason why we should give the President of the United States the right to abolish functions of office and to repeal any law upon the statute books

Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. BYRNES, and Mr. McKELLAR addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky. Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to return to the analogy stated a moment ago by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON]. Undoubtedly the Supreme Court would have inherent authority to fix regulations of some sort with respect to the time counsel might occupy in argument, and various minor functions of that sort. However, the Supreme Court would have no authority, without the consent of Congress. to adopt a code of practice applicable not only to it but to all other Federal courts. The Congress authorized the courts practically to establish a code of practice in the Federal courts of the United States, with the provision that unless Congress should see fit to act otherwise by a certain date, or on the happening of a certain contingency, those rules and regulations should become substantive law. Otherwise, it was not necessary for Congress to authorize the Supreme Court to do what it could have done anyway.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President— Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee. Mr. McKELLAR. On that very point, let me read the provision of the Constitution which has something to say about this very subject. I quote from article III, section 2:

In all the other cases before mentioned, the Supreme Court shall have appellate judisdiction, both as to law and fact, with such exceptions, and under such regulations as the Congress shall

In other words, the Constitution requires that such regulations be adopted by Congress before they can become the

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. There is no similarity between the case referred to by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar] and that referred to by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY]. The Supreme Court enacted no law. It provided rules of procedure relating to the conduct of cases in the respective courts.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. LOGAN. The Court did so pursuant to the powers vested in the Court by the Congress of the United States.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. LOGAN. After the rules of practice had been prescribed, there was no change in the law. The rules were referred back to Congress, perhaps merely as a matter of courtesy. However, I think it goes without saying that the Supreme Court undid nothing which the Congress of the United States had done. The Congress of the United States has not attempted to prescribe any rules and regulations for the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court in its rules did not enlarge its jurisdiction or the jurisdiction of any other court.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not.

Mr. LOGAN. It simply said, "A case shall be handled by this particular method or through this channel when it comes into any of the Federal courts."

Mr. WHEELER. I entirely agree with the Senator. Suppose the Congress of the United States had said to the Supreme Court of the United States, "We will give you the power to diminish the jurisdiction of the lower Federal courts," or "We will turn over to you the power to diminish your own jurisdiction, or to increase your own jurisdiction," I should say immediately that unquestionably we would have no authority under the Constitution to do anything of that kind. We say to the Court, "You may make rules and regulations pertaining to the practice in the Court." That is an entirely different thing. One situation deals with substantive law. The other deals with rules of practice before the courts, which is an entirely different thing.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I seldom interrupt. I am always willing to have the Senator interrupt me.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is welcome to interrupt. Mr. BYRNES. Evidently Congress thought differently about it, because the Congress did not provide that it be advised as a matter of courtesy. I quote the law:

The Court may at any time unite the general rules prescribed by it for cases in equity with those in actions at law so as to secure one form of civil action and procedure for both: Provided, however, That in such union of rules the right of trial by jury as at common law and declared by the seventh amendment to the Constitution shall be preserved to the parties inviolate. Such united rules shall not take effect until they shall have been reported to Congress by the Attorney General at the beginning of a regular session thereof and until after the close of such session. session thereof and until after the close of such session.

In order to preserve trial by jury, Congress thought it was necessary to provide that the merger of actions in equity and actions at law should be submitted to the Congress, and should not become effective until the end of a session, in order to give Congress the right to take action.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator agree that the merger of common law and equity cases is not substantive law?

Mr. BYRNES. I agree to that statement.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator will agree that that is not a matter of substantive law. It is a matter of practice.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree. What I say is that in the bill we provide that an order shall take effect at a certain time unless there is negative action. There has been considerable discussion of that provision. What I have stated is exactly what was done by the Congress. The rules became effective at the end of the session if Congress did not act in the meantime.

Mr. WHEELER. There is a vast difference between delegating to the Supreme Court, or to the head of one of the departments, the right to make rules of practice before that body, and changing the substantive law upon the statute books of the United States.

Mr. BYRNES. I agree; and I think there is an entire difference between Congress attempting to say what a court shall do, and Congress delegating to the head of the executive department the right to rearrange departments in the executive branch of the Government and submit an order to the Congress, that order not being effective if a majority of the House and Senate say it shall not become effective.

Mr. WHEELER. That is an entirely different thing. Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to make a further observation. In the law as read by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], there is no suggestion that the Congress shall act in one way or the other. I said a moment ago, and I repeat, that the Court was given authority to do certain things, with the proviso that certain rights should not be denied. The rules were submitted to Congress as a matter of courtesy. The time at which the rules were to become effective was extended so that Congress could see whether anything had been done outside the authority conferred upon the Court by the act, and for no other purpose.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much. Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me make a suggestion to the Senator from Montana. As he and all other Senators will recall, the question of the revision of the rules was a matter of debate and controversy for a long time. It was discussed in the Senate. The Senator's former colleague, the distinguished Thomas J. Walsh, was then a Member of the Senate, and was very much interested in the matter. There was no delegation of power to the Justices to change substantive law. There was merely the power to prescribe the rules of practice and procedure in the courts. It was thought by some that the Court might go beyond the scope of its power, and might infringe somewhat upon substantive laws and rights; and so, out of an abundance of caution, the provision which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] read was put into the act, that if in consolidating the equity and common-law jurisdictions there was any attempt to circumscribe the right of trial by jury which obtained in common-law actions, the Congress itself should have the right to review and scrutinize the action.

As the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] well points out, the rules and regulations prescribed by the Court were not to come back to Congress for any act of the Congress to give them validity. They were to come back to the Congress and remain with the Congress for a period of time merely because it was not contemplated that there should be any change whatever from the substantive law. In the meantime, if the Justices had gone beyond their powers during the period when their work was before the Congress for scrutiny and supervision, Congress, of course, was at liberty to take any action it wished to take. It was not the affirmative action or negative action of Congress that gave power to the rules. The law itself provided that the rules would not become effective until a certain event had taken place.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator very much for his statement

Mr. MINTON. Of course, the Senator knows that for 150 years the Congress of the United States has been making what the Senator has referred to as "procedural law" for the Federal courts of this country?

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is assuming a great deal. Mr. MINTON. No; I do not think so. The Senator knows that the Congress of the United States has been making that kind of law. The Senator may make the distinction that lawyers make between procedural law and substantive law: and there is such a distinction, but nonetheless it is law.

The Supreme Court of the United States by promulgating a rule, which when applied and is applicable, becomes a law of the land, has taken over this function of Congress. It is done under an act of Congress which contains fewer safeguards, as the Senator from Georgia has just pointed out, than does the bill we are now considering, because under the bill any proposed plan must come back to the Congress, and, if it is to be set aside, there can be some action or check on the part of Congress, whereas the action of the Supreme Court under the legislation to which I have referred could come back to Congress, but there was not any requirement that Congress should take any action at all. So there was far more delegation of authority to the Supreme Court than there is to the President under this proposed act.

Mr. WHEELER. I cannot agree with the Senator's statement with reference to that matter at all. However, let us assume, for the sake of argument, that we delegated to the Supreme Court the power to make the rules of procedure. Then, if the Senator desires, let us assume that we perhaps should not have done that, although I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan], both of whom are very able and distinguished lawyers, both of whom have served as judges, agreed that we had a perfect right to do it.

Let us assume, however, we did not have any such right. What kind of an argument is it to say because we did it with reference to the Supreme Court of the United States that now the Congress ought to delegate its power-

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. If the Senator will let me finish the sentence then I will yield—to delegate its power to abolish the functions of offices to the executive branch of the Government, and give to Congress, not the perfect power of veto as some Senators have stated, for the bill does not do that, but rather merely provides that if one branch of the Congress approves a plan of reorganization then it becomes a law? It becomes a law if one branch of the Congress approves of it, although the other branch of the Congress disapproves it. Where is there any veto power in the Congress of the United States under those circumstances?

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. WAGNER. I do not know that what I am about to say presents an exact analogy, although I think in the particular case the restriction which Congress has imposed upon itself is quite as effective as the restriction proposed by the pending measure. I refer to the Interstate Commerce Act. Mr. WHEELER. Oh, no.

Mr. WAGNER. Let me make my point, and if I am mistaken the Senator will, of course, dispose of the argument. The making of freight rates is strictly a legislative function.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. Both the Legislature and the Executive, when they prescribe rates, perform a legislative function.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. But Congress decided long ago that that rate making was too intricate a problem for it to deal with in committee or upon the floor. So the Congress delegated the authority to make rates, a pure legislative function, to a commission.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.
Mr. WAGNER. And the Congress imposed upon itself the restriction that it would not change the finding of the Interstate Commerce Commission except by the concurrence of both Houses. After the Interstate Commerce Commission sets a rate and it is approved as having been made in the proper exercise of their functions within the standards prescribed, such act of the Commission is final, and the Congress itself has said so.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course. Mr. WAGNER. May I follow that argument up?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. WAGNER. And the Congress cannot amend the finding of the Commission unless both Houses determine by legislative vote that the Commission should have found some other rate.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. So even though one House says, "We are going to stand by the Commission; the rates of the Commission are correct," if the other House says "no," the rates fixed by the Commission remain in force.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly what would happen under

Mr. WHEELER. I have repeatedly pointed out, at the last session and the present session, a distinction. Does not the Senator distinguish between the delegation of a power to a legislative arm of the Government—and that is what the Interstate Commerce Commission is—and the delegation of a power to the executive branch? There is that distinction. That is why a number of quasi-judicial bodies are exempted from the bill. If the Senator will follow the decisions of the Supreme Court, he will find that they distinguish between the delegation of power to an arm of the legislative branch of the Government and the delegation of power to the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. Wait a moment. There is, it seems to me, a fundamental principle involved which is vastly important. In the one instance we are delegating power to a branch of our own, an agent of the Congress. Under the pending bill it is proposed to delegate it to the executive branch, to the President of the United States of America, whose duties are fixed by the Constitution, and it is proposed to delegate to him a right or power which belongs to the Congress of the United States. It is proposed to repose in the executive branch of the Government a power that belongs to the Congress. When the forefathers wrote the Constitution of the United States, why did they set up the legislative branch of the Government? They set it up because they wanted to have the legislative branch separate and distinct from the executive branch. There is no such distinction in Germany; there is no such distinction in Italy; there is no such distinction in Russia; and that is the system that is being advocated by some in the United States of America.

Mr. WAGNER. I may say to the Senator that we have done exactly that in the case of the Interstate Commerce Commission. In the first place, what we were dealing with was rates which are much more substantive than the creation or transfer of departments, for the fixing of rates affects the welfare and interests of all the people of the United States. In that action the President also was included, for when he signed the bill delegating that power he was performing a legislative function.

Mr. WHEELER. No. Mr. WAGNER. He was, because the legislation affected rates.

Mr. WHEELER. When the President signed his name he was performing an executive function; he was not performing a legislative function.

Mr. WAGNER. If the Senator will read the decisions, he will find that the making of rates is a legislative function.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course it is.
Mr. WAGNER. And to the extent the Executive participates in that function he is also performing a legislative function.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the Senator's pardon. I challenge him to find me any decision of any court to that effect.

Mr. WAGNER. I think I can find it. But, irrespective of that, in the case of rates which, as I say, involve much more substantive matter than is involved in the bill now pending, the Congress has said that if either House favored the particular rates fixed, Congress could not change the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. Mr. WAGNER. That is exactly what we are doing in this instance. We are saying that if one House of Congress approves a reorganization plan, the plan shall become effective, while if both Houses disapprove the plan it is wiped out. That is exactly what is done under the Interstate Commerce Act and under the Tariff Commission Act.

Mr. WHEELER. I have tried to explain to the Senator that there is a distinction which the courts have repeatedly

Mr. WAGNER. I have tried to show the Senator that there is not any distinction, so I think we are not persuading one another.

Mr. WHEELER. Unfortunately for the Senator from New York, the Supreme Court and every other court in this land that has passed upon the question has pointed out the difference that I have pointed out to this body.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Waiving the question as to whether the President's signature to an act of Congress is a legislative or executive act, which may not have anything to do with the matter under consideration-

Mr. WAGNER. I did not say that; the Senator misunder-

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not accuse the Senator of saying that; but the question of whether the signature of the Chief Executive to an act of Congress is a legislative act or an executive act may be open to debate. However, the Senator from Montana will not deny, I presume, that inasmuch as the power to regulate commerce set out in the Constitution includes rate making, which is a legislative act, and includes wages and hours on transportation systems, which is a legislative act, we have recognized the physical impossibility as well as the undesirability that Congress shall attempt to make rates, and therefore, we have set up an agency to per-form that function. Now let us assume that the transfer of bureaus from one department to the other is a legislative act; then if we have the power to set up a commission to make rates for us because we cannot do it wisely, could we not set up a commission as the agent of Congress to transfer and consolidate and rearrange all departments; and, if we can set up an independent agency of Congress to do that, can we not make the President the agent of Congress to do it, just as we have made him the agent of Congress for the purpose of entering into trade agreements with other nations, which is a legislative matter, inasmuch as Congress has the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations? We have set up or we could have set up an independent agency; but we made the President of the United States the agent of Congress to enter into these trade agreements between our country and others for the regulation of foreign commerce.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; and how many Senators would vote for that again?

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not talking about the desirability of it; but I am one who would.

Mr. WHEELER. I am not. Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Montana would not. We understand each other, then. I am talking, however, about the question of constitutionality, about the ability of Congress to set up an agency of its own to carry out a legislative function or a legislative mandate. My contention is that we may designate the President of the United States as the agent of Congress no less than we may set up an independent agency like the Interstate Commerce Commission, the Federal Trade Commission, or any of the other agencies that we have.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I venture an interruption at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. WHEELER. I do.

Mr. ADAMS. The Congress of the United States did not give to the Interstate Commerce Commission unqualified power to make rates. The Congress laid down certain rules and standards, and those rates can be made only within those rules and standards.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. Mr. WAGNER. I said the same thing.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

Mr. WHEELER. I yield to the Senator from Georgia. Mr. GEORGE. I rose merely to make the observation made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS].

The power delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission is not wholly legislative. The original jurisdiction to prohibit unjust rates is judicial. It is recognized as one of the judicial functions. The courts always had the power to say when a rate was discriminatory or when a rate was confiscatory, and in the protection of other and broader rights the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission rests in part upon the exercise of a judicial function; and, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS] has pointed out, the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Tariff Commission exercise no legislative power. They merely act as an agent of the legislative branch of the Government, under rules and regulations.

It will be recalled that when the Supreme Court finally sustained the validity of the so-called flexible provision of the Tariff Act in the Hampton case, it put its decision squarely on the ground that the Congress had not delegated legislative power to the Tariff Commission, but it had appointed the Tariff Commission its agent to exercise an administrative function under rules and regulations which theoretically at least were capable of precise and exact application. That is, of course, the state of our law.

There is no support for the contention that Congress may delegate legislative power. It may not do so. The single test of the validity of the act of the Congress, when that question is involved, is whether Congress has undertaken to delegate legislative power, or merely the power to apply a legislative formula that may at least theoretically be exactly applied.

As I read this bill-and I am asking now for information-no attempt is made to lay down rules and regulations under which the President shall proceed, beyond the general broad rule of effecting economies, and so forth, and, as I understand the bill, it does provide for the abolition of functions of government.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.
Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be glad to answer it if I can.

Mr. WHEELER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Under the power of the Constitution conferred upon Congress to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign countries, Congress, by legislative enactment, could legally have done everything that the Interstate Commerce Commission has done; could it not?

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; beyond all doubt. Mr. BARKLEY. Then, of course, it was a legislative matter. Then, to the extent to which Congress has surrendered the details of working out the final rules by which commerce shall be regulated, Congress necessarily has surrendered part of its legislative authority, assuming that it legally and constitutionally could have done so.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no; Congress has delegated none of its legislative power, and it is not within the power of Congress to delegate it.

Mr. BARKLEY. If Congress had done all the things that had been done under the Commission-

Mr. GEORGE. Presumably it could have. Mr. BARKLEY. Would not that have been legislation, all of it?

Mr. GEORGE. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Why not? Mr. GEORGE. The Commission acts as the administrative agent of the Congress in accomplishing the legislative

Mr. BARKLEY. Congress has jurisdiction to do everything it may authorize its agent to do.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, certainly; and the Congress may authorize its agent to perform a ministerial or administrative act, but it may not give to its agent the power to legislate.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course that draws a distinction as to whether fixing a rate on a railroad from Chicago to San Francisco is a mere ministerial act, or whether it is legislation, assuming that Congress legally and constitutionally could have fixed that rate in an act of its own.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly Congress could have done it, because we do have the affirmative power under the power to regulate commerce. But what I said in the first instance was that much of the power to regulate rates is to control the making of the rates. The validity of an act of the Interstate Commerce Commission depends upon whether it has acted within the delegated power; whether it has applied the formula prescribed by the Congress under which it is authorized to act. If so, its act becomes valid. But it is a confused statement to say that Congress may delegate legislative power. It may not do so. It must prescribe the formula which its agent may apply to reach the legislative end or purpose.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. Just a moment. I want to thank the Senator from Georgia, and say to him that he is entirely correct

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator yield to me just at that point?

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish my statement. The Senator from Georgia is entirely correct; and, if it will be recalled, the Supreme Court of the United States, in holding some of the New Deal laws unconstitutional, held them unconstitutional because there were not sufficient standards set up, and because of the fact that the Congress was attempting to delegate the power to legislate.

Mr. BYRNES. But the Senator from Montana will agree that the standards set forth in this bill are based on the identical standards of the 1932 act. The Supreme Court, in each of two cases in which the standards were attackedthe cases of Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. v. United States (14 Fed. Supp. 407) and Swayne & Hoyt, Ltd., v. United States (10 American Mar. cases 1790)—upheld the standard as sufficient. The theory of the House of Representatives, where this bill was drawn, was in accord with the statement of the Court as cited by the Senator from Georgia, based upon the Hampton case, which was cited with approval in the tobacco case, the decision being rendered in January of this year, in which the President was acting as the agent of the Congress, carrying out the declaration of the Congress in accordance with the standards; and the standards had been previously upheld in the two cases to which I refer-

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator that Attorney General Mitchell, in the case in which Congress enacted legislation during the Hoover administration, said that the restrictions imposed by the Congress were unconstitutional. If that legislation was unconstitutional, then certainly this is unconstitutional. That matter was called to my attention only today, and for that reason I have not yet read the Attorney General's decision; but the reason why we entered this argument was because of a revival of the Supreme Court issue. The reason the Supreme Court issue was injected was because some of those taking part in the debate wanted to show, perhaps, that some of us favored the Supreme Court, and we would not grant the same power to the President.

Mr. BYRNES. I do not say that.

Mr. WHEELER. No; I know the Senator from South Carolina would not say it, and he would not think it; and that is not the real reason. I have tried to explain to the Senate that this is not a question of not having confidence in the President of the United States. If that were the question, let me read the bill. Let me read the exemptions.

The Civil Service Commission is exempted. Why was it exempted? I suppose somebody would say it was exempted because those who were interested in the civil service did not trust the President of the United States!

The Coast Guard was exempted, I suppose, because some Senator or some Representative, or those who drafted this bill, and the Senator from South Carolina, did not trust the President of the United States!

The Engineer Corps of the United States Army was exempted, I suppose, because of the fact that the drafters of the bill in the House of Representatives did not trust the President of the United States.

The Mississippi River Commission was exempted because of the fact that the people living along the Mississippi River did not trust the President of the United States!

The Federal Communications Commission was exempted for the same reason!

The Federal Trade Commission, the General Accounting Office, the Interstate Commerce Commission, the National Labor Relations Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission, the Board of Tax Appeals, the United States Maritime Commission, the Veterans' Administration, the National Mediation Board, the National Railroad Adjustment Board, the Railroad Retirement Board, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System were exempted for the same reason; and I assume that the reason why it was provided in the bill that there shall not be a change in the name of any executive department was because we did not trust the President of the United States; and the reason why the next provision (d) was inserted, forbidding the continuance of any executive agency beyond the period authorized by law for its existence, was for the same reason, that we did not trust the President of the United States!

There is not in the slightest degree any question of not trusting the President of the United States. If the bill were based upon that principle, if that were the reason, let me say to you that I would trust the President of the United States. It is not a question of that kind with me. I do not think the President will do all that ought to be done in the way of reorganization. I do not believe very much will be done, or can be done, under this bill; but I submit that what we ought to do is to give the President the power. and say to him, "Go ahead and reorganize any of these bureaus, any of these branches, any of these divisions that you want to see reorganized; send the bill down to the Congress of the United States, and then we will discuss it for only 10 days, and we agree that either the House or the Senate shall vote on the matter within 10 days." Take out all the exemptions. Those who put in the exemptions are the ones who should be accused of not trusting the President of the United States.

I am saying, let him approve it and send it to Congress, and let the Congress do its duty under the Constitution.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a statement, in view of what the Senator from Georgia said, so that I may not be misunderstood?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. WAGNER. The statement I made was that the fixing of rates is purely a legislative function. Of course, when that is delegated to a commission of some kind, the delegation must always prescribe standards, so that, strictly speaking, when the commission acts it acts in an administrative capacity. The result of their action is legislation. The court has no power to fix rates. The judicial function is to determine whether the rates are reasonable or not; and that is all the Court can do.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct. I am glad to have the Senator explain it.

Mr. WAGNER. We meant the same thing.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes. There is no analogy between the Interstate Commerce Commission Act and this proposed legislation, because in the pending bill we say to the President, "You can abolish any function or office in any of the departments not exempted." We do not say that to the Interstate Commerce Commission, we do not say it to the Tariff Commission, and do not say it to any other body.

I wish to call attention again to the brief argument that was presented by Representative Hatton Sumners in the House of Representatives. He said:

There is a very definite similarity in relationship and in re-ponsibility between the submission to the Houses of Congress by sponsibility between the submission to the Houses of Congress by the President of proposed legislation and the submission by him of a proposed reorganization. Under the Constitution, if the President submits proposed legislation, either House of Congress is possessed of the power and charged with the duty to prevent its enactment if in its judgment the proposed legislation is contrary to the public interest. That arrangement is much older than our own Constitution. It began with the beginning of the British Parliament. That arrangement in the long history of Anglo-Saxon government has helped to preserve stability in government. This reorganization bill ignores the philosophy of that arrangement.

That is the point I am trying to impress upon the Members of the Senate, that the pending bill disregards the fundamental principles upon which this Government is based as a representative Government.

As I stated a while ago, I do not think the bill is so important; I do not think that the President will do too much under it. I want to see him do more than I expect he will be able to do under it. But I say that if a Republican President, and a conservative one at that, should be elected in 1940 as may very well happen, what would he do? He would say, "I want this power extended for 2 more years, or 3 more years, or 4 more years, because I want to carry out the reorganization of the departments which Mr. Roosevelt did not have power to do." What are you Democrats going to say? Are you going to say that you will not turn the power over to some conservative or reactionary Republican? You would not give it to him today. You would not give it to Harding; you would not give it to Hoover; you would not give it to Coolidge. Will you give it in 1940?

What are you going to do about it? You are going to say. "I will not do it because I do not like him, because he is a Republican, and I am not going to trust him because he may repeal all of the progressive legislation that was passed during the Roosevelt administration."

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana of what does the legislative power consist? What is the exercise of the legislative function?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not quite understand the question.

Mr. PEPPER. I mean by that, when the legislative power of the Government is vested in the Congress, how does the Senator define the legislative power? The Constitution vests the judicial power in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as the Congress shall from time to time establish.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.
Mr. PEPPER. We have a historical predicate upon which to form a definition of what constitutes the judicial power. What is the essence of the legislative power? Does it mean that the Congress shall initiate and define every detail of legislation to which it gives approval, or does it mean the legislation shall not be effective until it is submitted to the approval of the people's chosen representatives, with the privilege of debating it?

Mr. WHEELER. I agree; but that is not being done in this instance. It means, under our system of government, that the Congress of the United States shall affirmatively, in both Houses, enact and approve legislation. That is the fundamental principle upon which our Government is founded, and that is the thing for which people have been fighting in the Anglo-Saxon countries for hundreds of years. Now it is proposed that we reverse that and give the power back.

Mr. PEPPER. What is the thing for which the people have been fighting for hundreds of years? What is the essential fundamental and quality of the legislative power? If the Congress of the United States has an executive proposal laid before it, and the Congress has untrammeled power of debate over that proposal, and the Congress votes in the regular way upon whether or not it will approve the proposal, can the Senator say that, so long as that power is exercised by the Congress, there has been any abdication of the legislative power?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course not; and that is not in the proposed legislation.

Mr. PEPPER. It is.

Mrs. WHEELER. If the Senator makes that statement, then I cannot argue with him.

Mr. PEPPER. Let me see if I correctly understand the situation.

Mr. WHEELER. I am sure the Senator does not understand it, if he makes such a statement as he has just made.

Mr. PEPPER. I should be very glad to be enlightened, because I have one vote on the bill, which I should like to cast.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me show the Senator what would take place under the proposed legislation. The President submits his plan.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER. I think perhaps the Senator was out of the Chamber when I explained it a moment ago. Let us take a concrete example. The people of my State are vitally interested in irrigation and reclamation; they are vitally interested in forestry, and they are vitally interested in mining. A great many of the people of the Eastern States, who have an overwhelming vote in the Congress, from New York and Pennsylvania and New England and New Jersey, all the great States in the East, are not at all interested in reclamation. If the Senator will read the Record he will find that speeches are repeatedly made by representatives from Pennsylvania and New York to the effect that we should not appropriate money for irrigation and reclamation, that the reclamation law should be repealed.

Let us assume, for the sake of argument, that we had a President who was unfriendly to irrigation and reclamation. Of course, President Roosevelt is very friendly; so I am not saying he would do such a thing; but let us assume we had a President in the White House who was unfriendly, and who would send an order to the Congress that had for its object the abolition of the Reclamation Bureau or providing for a curtailment of its powers, so that it would be of no importance. The bill would get to the House of Representatives, and they could debate it for 2 days and then take a vote on it. There would be no general discussion of it; it would be passed, and they would say, "We are in favor of the President's plan to abolish the Irrigation and Reclamation Bureau." The matter comes to the Senate, and we say that we want the Reclamation Bureau, and there are so many Members of the Senate from the West and Middle West who are in favor of it that there is an overwhelming majority against that order which destroys the Reclamation Bureau. But, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate may have voted overwhelmingly, perhaps 100 percent, against this reorganization order, it becomes the law of the land. Is that a parliamentary method of procedure? Is that the Senator's conception of the things for which the people in the Anglo-Saxon countries and in the Scandinavian countries have been fighting for hundreds of years? Is that what they have sacrificed their blood for? Is that why they have gone out and fought for their ideologies?

Mr. PEPPER. The thing for which those people during all those generations have been fighting is an opportunity for the people to give or withhold their approval of proposed legislation and proposed governmental action. When the people's representatives express themselves and exercise that power, and when Congress refuses to reject a proposal, having the power to do so, it certainly has not been deprived of the right to exercise legislative power.

Mr. WHEELER. Congress does not have the power in this bill, as I have repeatedly stated. If both branches of the Congress were required to approve the order rather than one, I should say there was something to the argument.

Mr. PEPPER. To cite a typical case, if the Senator has an agent with whom he entrusts his business, and that agent is given authority to act, with the proviso that the agent's action shall not become effective until submitted to the principal and the principal has an opportunity for scrutiny of the action, and an opportunity to veto it, if he does not approve it, can it be said that the principal abdicates his authority? That is exactly what happens in this case.

Mr. WHEELER. Let us suppose it is a partnership, and there are two partners, and one approves and the other does not. What would the Senator say about the agent then?

Mr. PEPPER. I will answer the question.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me finish my question. Before legislation becomes effective under our Constitution, both branches must affirmatively approve it. It is not possible to legislate by negative vote under the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, there is nothing involved which has to do with the legislative power. The Senator may not approve of the particular method of exercising the power, but I ask the Senator, if the dictators of the world, before they could put into effect any of their executive fiats, had to submit them to a free legislative assembly, and offer the opportunity of free and untrammeled debate, and then they were permitted to put those things into effect if the assembly did not veto them or reject them or withhold approval from them, could the Senator say that the legislative function had been abdicated?

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, in the case of the dictatorships, in some countries there are things which call themselves parliaments, there are those they call members of parliament. Mr. Mussolini has what he calls a parliament; Mr. Hitler has one, and Mr. Stalin has one, and they call them "parliaments."

They submit matters to them, and the "parliaments" vote on them. But they vote as it is intended they should vote. I would suppose under the theory of the Senator he would say that they had parliamentary government.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator perhaps would say that those were just pseudo-parliamentary acts.

Mr. WHEELER. We would have a pseudo policy under this theory of legislation theory of legislation.

Mr. PEPPER. Let us take the British Parliament, if the Senator wishes to choose that. If the Prime Minister embarks upon a legislative course, the Parliament has the privilege of stopping that procedure, or reviewing it, or criticizing and vetoing it, before it goes into effect. Can the Senator say that that ancient Parliament has ceased to be the citadel of parliamentary procedure?

Mr. WHEELER. In the United States it takes action by both branches of the Congress before a law becomes effective. The Senator wants a law to become effective after one branch of the Congress says it will not stand for it.

Mr. PEPPER. No; neither I nor the bill say that.

Mr. WHEELER. Then there is no use of arguing with the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER Let me say to the Senator that I should like to present one point of view. The bill simply says that governmental reorganization is a very complicated matter; that it involves a great deal of detail; that it involves perhaps the executive function of analysis and criticism and experimentation, and the like; and we are going to authorize an agent of ours to put into effect a reorganization plan which is perfectly within the scope of the legislative authority. We can delegate any legislative power of this sort that we care to. Then we delegate to what we regard as a competent agency this portion of our legislative power. Even if we stopped there, that would still be no violation of our legislative authority or abdication of our legislative power. But we go even further than that, and we say, "However, this delegation of power cannot be consummated and effectuated until the proposed exercise of it is laid before the Congress for examination, debate, and judgment."

It makes no difference how we exercise our authority to legislate. If we choose to have a viva voce vote instead of a vote by roll call, it is just as much an exercise of legislative power. The sentiment of this body every day is exercised by a negation, because the Presiding Officer sits in his chair and says, "Without objection, the bill is passed," and the Senate can pass any bill it chooses by negative action if the question is properly put by the Chair.

That is all we are doing in the present case. Can the Senator from Montana say that because the Vice President says, "Without objection, the bill is passed," it is not legally passed? It may be the most important piece of legislation to come before this body. Yet the Senator says that because we do not go through the more routine procedure we have abdicated the legislative power.

When the President sends down a proposal, and it is submitted from the Vice President's chair, and he says, "Without objection, the proposal goes into effect," is that an abdication of the legislative power?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I do not want to continue an argument when the Senator takes the position that in parliamentary government under our Constitution laws can be passed by negation. I just cannot follow that philosophy at all. It is absolutely contrary to every teaching I have ever heard or read of, and consequently, if that is the philosophy of the Senator from Florida I cannot agree with him

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, the Senator has been a Member of the Senate for a long time. Since I have been on the floor of the Senate we have passed at least 500 laws

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. We pass them by affirmative action, because any Senator can rise and object when the Vice President makes the statement as to unanimous consent. A measure is passed by unanimous consent.

Mr. PEPPER. But by negation.

Mr. WHEELER. No. How can a Senator say it is passed by negation simply because it is done by unanimous consent?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. It seems to me the argument that has been made is based entirely upon a false premise. There is one general clause in the Constitution of the United States. It happens to be in the first section.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator from Colorado that to some Senators the Constitution does not mean anything any more.

Mr. ADAMS. There are a few of us with obsolete opinions. Will the Senator indulge me a moment? The Constitution

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives.

The validity of a reorganization plan, so far as it comes back to Congress for action under a concurrent resolution. is not dependent on the exercise of legislative power. It is an enactment of law which becomes effective upon a condition. In other words, the fact that the two Houses concur in the matter does not make it legislation. It could just as validly have been provided that it would become effective when the three city Commissioners of the city of Washington approved it. That is, either we have given to the President authority to make a reorganization to become effective upon a condition or it is not valid at all. And the Congress can fix any condition it pleases as to the going into effect of the law.

The same situation exists in connection with local option laws. A law is passed providing that when a certain thing takes place in the community then the law becomes effective there. We are not delegating legislative authority if we are merely delegating the authority to administer a law. That is all we can do. We cannot give to the President, we cannot give to anyone else, the authority to make laws. We can merely give him the authority to administer the law and put it into effect. The proposed reorganization law cannot be sustained upon any theory if in fact what the President does is in the nature of legislating. We could attach to the act, assuming it is valid, a condition upon which a plan would go into effect, but it would not be the action of either or both bodies of Congress.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I ask the question for my own information because it is one which rises in my mind. If legislative power is vested in Congress, we are in possession of that power under the Constitution. Can we delegate that power to any extent at all? If we can, can we then also say, "We delegate to the President all legislative power imposed in us by the Constitution? We will go home. Whatever action you take, whatever legislation you may see fit to make throughout the summer, shall be the law, provided we come back in the fall and either one of two Houses agrees." Does that question

Mr. WHEELER. If the philosophy of the Senator from Florida is correct, then the Senator would be correct in assuming that what we could do would be to say to the President of the United States, or to any executive officer of the Government, to Mr. Ickes or to Miss Perkins. "We authorize you to appropriate for your department whatever money you need or whatever you want to spend." And we could say to the President of the United States, "You can appropriate whatever money you want to appropriate for W. P. A., or P. W. A., or anything else, and then we will come back, and you submit to the Congress of the United States a report as to what you have done, and if one House of Congress says that it is all right and the other says it is not, then your action becomes the law and the appropriation is sustained."

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. BYRNES. I want to ask the Senator from Montana if he agrees with the Senator from Colorado that the Congress can authorize the President to sign an Executive order, and that we can say, "Your Executive order shall not be valid unless it receives the unanimous approval of the Republican Members of the United States Senate," or impose any other condition, as the Senator suggested just now. Does the Senator agree?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not agree with that.

Mr. BYRNES. That is what the Senator from Colorado said on the floor.

Mr. WHEELER. I did not hear what he said in respect

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator stated that the Supreme Court said in January that we could say substantially that a law should not become effective unless the tobacco growers in a referendum agreed upon it. But, of course, the Senator from Colorado was only using an illustration when he made reference to unanimous approval by Members of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. Why argue about the theory of the question? Why argue as to whether we have a right to do it? I do not think we have. I have taken up a great deal of time. I think the American people want to see the legislative branch of the Government of the United States maintained; they want to see us maintain our authority and our power. I believe they are tired and weary of having us delegate our power to the executive branch of the Government. If Senators do not think that they are weary and tired, then let them read the election returns of the last election. I think that is one of the best answers to the question.

Let me tell Senators that if they continue to delegate their power, and turn it over to the executive branch of the Government, when the next election comes around the boys who have delegated that power and said that they were incompetent to act will find that the voters will agree with them and leave them home; and, in my judgment, they probably should do so.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator will agree that Congress in 1903 established a new department, and, with respect to certain matters, delegated and surrendered and abdicated and gave up its power, and told the President of the United States that under the act then passed he could transfer all statistical and scientific bureaus from any department of the Government to the Department of Commerce and Labor. The Senator knows that the people did not become excited about it. Years afterward President Coolidge exercised his privileges under that law. It is the law today. The people have not become excited about it or evinced any opposition to it. The Senate has not done a thing to repeal it, has it?

Mr. WHEELER. I did not know that it was on the statute books. The Senator did not know that it was on the statute books until he looked it up the other day.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator is absolutely mistaken. Mr. WHEELER. Then I withdraw the remark.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from South Carolina referred to the act of 1903 a year ago in the debates.

Mr. WHEELER. I think I remember it.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator thinks he now remembers it. A moment ago he did not remember it, and was not even willing to admit that I might remember it.

Mr. WHEELER. What difference does it make?

Mr. BYRNES. It means only that the Congress then gave to the President the right to transfer bureaus and activities to the Departments of Commerce and Labor without even notifying the Congress by letter of his action. Today, because that law is still in existence, the President may transfer from any of the other departments any bureaus of a scientific or statistical nature. Neither the Senator from Montana nor the Senator from South Carolina would ever know of it. Yet when we talk about giving the President power to make a transfer, and to send his plan to the Congress, when we know that the plan does not become effective until we have an opportunity to act upon it, it is called an abdication, a surrender, and a forfeiture of all the rights of parliamentary government.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator has told us that two or three times.

Mr. BYRNES. I thought the Senator did not know it.
Mr. WHEELER. The last part of what the Senator said he told me yesterday, and he told the Senate today.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. WHEELER. Not for a speech. I am becoming weary, and I should like to conclude.

Mr. PEPPER. I assure the Senator that I shall not impose upon his generosity.

I desire to discover whether the Senator opposes the bill on the ground that what we propose to do is unconstitutional or on the ground that it is undesirable from a legislative point of view.

Mr. WHEELER. Both.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator think the Supreme Court would hold that we had abdicated the legislative power if we should detach from the bill entirely our right of veto subsequent to the President's proposal?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not know that I quite understand the Senator's question.

Mr. PEPPER. If the bill should merely delegate to the President the authority to reorganize the executive branch of the Government without any exceptions, would the Senator say that the Supreme Court would not sustain that law?

Mr. WHEELER. I think it does not make a particle of difference whether or not there are exceptions in it.

Mr. PEPPER. In the Senator's opinion, would the Supreme Court sustain such a law or invalidate it?

Mr. WHEELER. I am quite certain that the Supreme Court would not sustain an act of Congress in the language of the present bill.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator has that constitutional doubt. However, if the Senator should admit that the Supreme Court would sustain such a law, that would amount to a decision that we have not abdicated our legislative authority or duty; would it not?

Mr. WHEELER. The fact that the Supreme Court might hold that we had not violated our constitutional duty would not mean that we had not abdicated. It seems to me that is not the question at all. The question is whether or not Congress should delegate to the executive branch the powers which belong to Congress under the Constitution. When the Constitution was drafted, the framers said, "We will have an executive, a legislative, and a judicial branch."

We are now proposing to turn over to the executive branch of the Government the right to abolish functions of office. Once functions of office are abolished, the laws upon the statute books of the United States are repealed. I cannot understand how anyone can take any other view of the question

I should like to finish reading what the distinguished Representative from Texas [Mr. Sumners] stated. He said:

What answer can there be when this action on our part is examined other than that we are afraid to trust ourselves in reorganization matters with our ordinary constitutional powers and responsibilities? And the question seems pertinent that if we are afraid to trust ourselves with that responsibility and power with regard to reorganization, why should the public trust us with them with regard to legislation?

Of course, as I said at the outset of my statement, many persons might say that because President Taft sent some proposed legislation to Congress which the Congress rejected, therefore Congress was not capable of legislating. It might be said that because President Wilson sent proposed legislation to Congress, which we did not enact, therefore, we were not capable of legislating. The same thing might be said with respect to Presidents Coolidge, Harding, and all the rest of them. However, when we say that we are not competent to vote on reorganization legislation, are we not saying in the same breath that we are incompetent for the same reason to pass upon ordinary legislation which comes before the Congress?

The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] said that a group of labor organizations would swarm down upon us, urging us to preserve this particular agency. Bless my soul! When the Guffey coal bill was before the Congress of the United States we passed it. Why did we pass it? Because of the fact that labor organizations demanded it, because they swarmed down upon the Congress of the United States demanding that we pass that legislation. Was it because the operators swarmed down on us? Or did some Members believe in its merits?

Organizations swarm down upon us in connection with every single bit of legislation. Other groups swarm down on us, including labor, business, farmers, and others. If we have not the courage to stand up and resist that pressure we ought to abolish the Congress and go home because we are not competent to legislate. If we are incompetent in one respect because we are afraid of labor organizations or afraid of this power or afraid of that we are in exactly the same position with reference to all other legislation that comes before the Congress.

I wish to read one more paragraph. Representative Sum-

This thing which the House proposes to do to itself, to its power, and its responsibility is far more important than its relationship to the particular item of legislation. We know that fundamental changes in governments like ours are brought about by precedents and practice. When we put our feet into the road and begin to walk we are going somewhere, and where we arrive depends upon the direction we take. This bill unamended leads in the wrong direction. It is a bad precedent.

There is no question that in formulating this bill we of the House could either keep or surrender this constitutional power without interfering with the efficiency of the Executive in carrying out the purposes of the bill. Any assumption to the contrary must be based upon the notion that the House as an institution is unfit to be trusted with the exercise of its constitutional powers. We raise the question ourselves that if the House cannot be trusted with its constitutional powers with regard to reorganization, as we seem to believe, why should the House be trusted with regard to legislation?

I submit, Mr. President, that the reason why I am opposed to this legislation is not because of the effect of this particular piece of legislation. I say that we are traveling in the wrong direction, and we have been traveling in the wrong direction when we have been turning over the legislative power to the executive branch of the Government.

Some Senator said a moment ago that there was no objection in 1922 when we turned over certain legislative powers to Mr. Coolidge. It was said that there was no objection when we turned over such powers to Mr. Wilson, or to some other President. That was true. Why? Because of the fact that the people of the United States of America were not disturbed by world conditions. They did not see, as we see today, the trend of world affairs. They did not see a dictatorship in Italy which threatens the world. They did not see Hitler in Germany about to involve the world in war. They did not see a Stalin in Russia and they did not see the people of Japan under the iron heel of a dictatorship. They did not see the world on the brink of war. The whole trend of legislation throughout the world has changed.

Today men call themselves liberals who want to abolish constitutional parliamentary government step by step. They call themselves liberals when they seek to abolish parliamentary government. Liberals have fought and have always been designated as liberals, because they have been willing to sacrifice their lives for parliamentary government and representative government throughout the World.

So I submit that there is nothing liberal about the proposed legislation. It is reactionary. It is a step backward. It should not be passed by the Congress of the United States unless the Congress has a right affirmatively to say whether or not it wants the plans proposed by the Executive branch of the Government to become law.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky to take a recess at this time?

Mr. BARKLEY. Has the Senator from Montana concluded?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I have no desire to hold the Senate in session longer.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator.

FARM CREDIT LEGISLATION-CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a number of measures have been introduced dealing with the questions of farm credit and home owners' loan banks, which were created by legislation which came from the Committee on Banking and Currency. One of the bills was introduced by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY]. That bill has been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. Another of the measures, a joint resolution, was introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead]. That measure has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. A third bill has been introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK]. His bill has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Inasmuch as the Committee on Banking and Currency has always had jurisdiction of such proposed legislation, and has a regular subcommittee to consider it, I have taken up with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Clark] the question of re-referring their measures to the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is my understanding that it is agreeable to the authors of the measures that they be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, which has always had jurisdiction of such proposed legislation.

I will say to both Senators that in connection with such legislation there is a standing subcommittee of the Banking and Currency Committee, of which I am a member, and of which I think the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], the author of one of these bills, is also a member; and that we can guarantee to the authors of the measures prompt hearing and consideration if the measures are re-referred.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President, I desire to follow the usual procedure of the Senate whenever I can do so. We have a certain situation as the result of farm-credit measures that have been reported from the Banking and Currency Committees of the Senate and the House, and passed by the Congress, for the purpose of extending credit to farmers. From investigations I have made, I have come to the conclusion that the result of that legislation has been to bail out the banks at the expense of the farmers, and it has not brought about any improvement in farm credit. For that reason I have introduced a joint resolution to remedy farm-mortgage-foreclosure sales and the taking of deficiency judgments.

Sixty thousand farms were foreclosed on in the past 4 years. We are making a propertyless farm class. Because it is an agricultural question and a social question rather than a banking question, I asked that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. However, I do not want to be obstreperous in the matter. I have a great deal of respect for the majority leader and for the standing committees of the Senate, and I am willing to yield, and to have the joint resolution go to the Banking and Currency Committee, with the hope that we shall receive a more sympathetic hearing than we have had up to this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that in my opinion the Committee on Banking and Currency has always given thoughtful and sympathetic consideration to every farm problem. We reported, almost by unanimous vote at the last session of Congress, a bill reducing the interest rates provided for by law, which resulted in a charge upon the Treasury of the United States. We did that in a desire to help the farmers to meet their obligations. I think the record of the Banking and Currency Committee on farm credit matters has not been such as to justify any feeling that it would not give prompt and fair consideration to any bill dealing with this subject, and I do not understand the Senator from Minnesota to make any such insinuation as that.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not question the sympathy or the good will of the Banking and Currency Committee. I am talking about the results of legislation that has been passed here, judging from the reports I get from governmental sources, on the question of farm mortgages.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have not the numbers of the two measures; but I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be discharged from the consideration of the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SHIPSTEAD] and the bill introduced by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK], and that they be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I have before the Senate a bill-Senate bill 1278—on the amortization of past-due feed-and-seed loans. May I have that bill also included in the Senator's request?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; that is entirely agreeable. All of the measures ought to be considered at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pill and joint resolution referred to by the Senator from Kentucky and the bill referred to by the Senator from South Dakota will be-

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, what was the request about the seed-loan bill? We have always handled those matters in the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] asked that a bill which he had introduced, with respect to seed loans, be also included in my request.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from South Dakota requested that that be done in the case of his own bill?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.
Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President—
Mr. BARKLEY. Has the request I made been granted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request has not yet been acted upon. Without objection, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry will be discharged from their consideration of the two measures referred to by the Senator from Kentucky and the bill referred to by the Senator from South Dakota and they will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to ask the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] who is on the Agricultural Committee, whether a seed-loan bill has been reported this year.

Mr. HATCH. I think not.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has any such bill been introduced?

Mr. HATCH. Not to my knowledge. Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I do not see why the seedloan bill should be referred to the Banking and Currency Committee. That never has been done heretofore.

Mr. BARKLEY. The bill provides for loans on seed through certain agencies which are now in existence, as I understand.

Mr. GURNEY. No; the bill to which I refer asks for an amortization program on past due seed and feed loans.

Mr. GLASS. Such bills never have been referred to the Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I think the bill of the Senator from South Dakota is a different matter. Heretofore such legislation has come from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and the bill probably ought to remain there. I had no objection to its going to the Committee on Banking and Currency; but it would be taking away from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry a matter of which it heretofore has had jurisdiction. I thought the Senator's bill provided for some form of amortization through the Federal land banks and the other lending agencies set up by the Farm Credit Administration. If it does not do that-

Mr. GURNEY. It does refer to money that has previously been loaned by the Farm Credit Administration.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, as chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, may I clarify the situation? Those loan measures heretofore have been considered by the Committee on Banking and Currency in connection with the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true.

Mr. WAGNER. So I think the bill ought to go to that committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, because of the confusion on the floor it was impossible for me to learn what happened about the seed-loan bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency by unanimous consent.

Mr. HATCH. I made no objection at the time because the author of the bill requested that that be done. My recollection is, however, that each year the Agricultural Committee has considered seed-loan bills. As a member of that committee I wish to interpose an objection at this time to the bill's being referred to any other committee than the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I thought the bill had already been referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the action of the Senate referring Senate bill 1278 to the Committee on Banking and Currency be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that it has already gone to the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is referring only to the bill of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY]?

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Mexico to reconsider the action discharging the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry from the consideration of Senate bill 1278, the bill of the Senator from South Dakota, and its reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency? The Chair hears none, and the action is reconsidered.

Mr. HATCH. Now, I request that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WAGNER. I make no objection. Mr. BARKLEY. It is already there.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to request the Senator from New Mexico to look after the seed-loan bill and see that some action is taken on it.

Mr. HATCH. I may say to the Senator from Tennessee that the Agricultural Committee has always treated seed-loan bills with the utmost favor, and the program has been an entire success.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has. I know that the statement just made by the Senator from New Mexico is absolutely true.

At the request of Mr. BARKLEY, the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry was discharged from the further consideration of the following bill and joint resolution, and they were referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 1250. A bill providing for a moratorium on mortgages held by the Farm Credit Administration, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 65. Joint resolution relating to deficiency judgments against borrowers from Federal land banks, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BARKLEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

XECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lucas in the chair) laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of William O. Douglas, of Connecticut, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, vice Louis D. Brandeis, retired, and sundry other nominations (and also withdrawing a nomination), which nominating messages were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. McCARRAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported favorably the nomination of Robert P. Patterson, of New York, to be a judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, vice Martin T. Manton,

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reports will be placed on the Executive Calendar.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the nominations of postmasters be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations of postmasters are confirmed en bloc.

ROBERT P. PATTERSON

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, a favorable report has been made today on the nomination of Judge Robert P. Patterson to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. The nomination has been pending in the committee for some 7 weeks. I have consulted the leaders in the Senate and have consulted the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary and the chairman of the subcommittee to which the nomination was referred, and they are all agreeable to the immediate consideration of the nomination. This is really a promotion. Judge Patterson has made a brilliant record for a period of over 10 years in the Federal court of the southern district of New York. He is not of my political faith, but I took very great pleasure because of his unusual record in recommending his nomination, and because the circuit court of appeals has been without the services of one of the judges for some weeks, and it is probably the busiest circuit court of appeals in the United States, I ask that the nomination be immediately considered. It is unanimously reported by the committee.

unanimously reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have looked into the case, and I think a real emergency exists; so I should like to see action on the nomination today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Robert P. Patterson, of New York, to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. WAGNER. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the President will be notified.

The clerk will state the next nomination on the Executive Calendar.

IN THE ARMY

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations in the Army.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I ask that the Army nominations be confirmed en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Army nominations are confirmed en bloc.

That concludes the Executive Calendar.

RECESS

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, March 20, 1939

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, fount of all goodness and source of all power, we rejoice that the Eternal Mind was in the Incarnation. Into a harsh and benighted age this ideal type of Teacher came to infuse a holy conception of truth and brotherhood into the human life of this world. His age-old voice, yet new as the breath of the morning, still declares that the crushing afflictions, overwhelming as they are, in the balance of time are light and for the moment. His banner of the dawn will yet wave in triumph over the ruins of a vanishing night. Blessed Lord, may we trust in Thy strength and guidance. Endue us with clear thinking, cool judgment, and spiritual heroism; there is a humanity being brooded over by divine care. Heavenly Father, we turn our face to Thee while sin-seared minds are contriving unknown highways of death and destruction. O help us to work and pray, to live and die for the luminous truth of the world's Saviour, whose thought may we breathe, whose power may we exhale, and whose life may we live. In His adorable and holy name.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, March 16, 1939, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that on the following dates the President approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

On March 15, 1939:

H. R. 2868. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, and for other purposes.

On March 16, 1939:

H. R. 3743. An act making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1940, and for other purposes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed without amendment to a concurrent resolution of the House of the following title:

H. Con. Res. 12. Concurrent resolution authorizing the printing as a document of the congressional proceedings held in the House of Representatives on March 4, 1939, in commemoration of the one hundredth and fiftieth anniversary of the commencement of the First Congress of the United States under the Constitution.

FEDERAL HOUSING

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday while discussing the appropriation for the United States Housing Authority, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Schafer] asked me if I had heard from John L. Lewis. I replied to him in the negative. However, later in the afternoon, Mr. Anthony Wayne Smith, assistant counsel of the C. I. O., called me up and said they were opposed to the White amendment.

From the information I have received, if the White amendment remains in the bill it means the United States Government will have to cancel contracts with the local authorities amounting to almost $400,000,000 and will throw thousands of mechanics and laborers out of work.

I appeal to the Members when the Interior bill is reported back to the House to vote against the White amendment and save the jobs of thousands of workers throughout the United States. [Applause.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1939.

Hon. James H. FITZPATRICK,

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 16, 1933.

United States Capitol:

Urgently request you do everything which may lie within your power to obtain reconsideration by House of alterations in section of Interior Department appropriations bill governing expenditures by United States Housing Authority. Full amount provided in committee report should be restored by reinstating provisos permitting expenditures up to one and a half million on site to be repaid to United States Housing Authority. Unless this is done, appropriation is, in effect, reduced by million and half below committee report and appropriation to Authority is cut by one-third. New proviso limiting use of Federal funds to $3,500 per family must be eliminated if Housing Authority is to function. Sponsors of this limitation have shown themselves completely ignorant of the housing problems with which they profess to deal. Believe it imperative that these items be corrected before final passage. The C. I. O. and organized labor generally is heartily behind the United States Housing Authority and the act, and regrets all tampering with the appropriation.

Anythony Wayne Smith,

Assistant Counsel of C. I. O.,

Executive Secretary, C. I. O. Committee on Housing.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR, Washington, D. C., March 16, 1939.

Hon. James F. Fitzpatrick, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Congressman Fitzpatrick: I am writing to you with further reference to the White amendment to the appropriation bill, which limits the over-all cost of U. S. H. A. projects to $3,500per-family houses.

per-family houses.

In the telegram sent to you earlier I made reference to the low average construction costs attained by the U. S. H. A. It seems to me important for Members of Congress to realize that the average construction cost of dwelling units in the U. S. H. A. aided projects have been forced to a low level through rigid economies. The average dwelling unit net construction costs upon which main construction contracts have been approved average $2,830 per unit, or more than $1,000 lower than the average cost of housing built in the same localities by private enterprise.

or more than $1,000 lower than the average cost of housing built in the same localities by private enterprise.

It is equally important for Members of Congress to realize that the White amendment limits the total and final cost per family to $3,500. This over-all cost included not only construction but also land, nondwelling facilities, and equipment. The average estimated cost per dwelling unit for U. S. H. A. aided projects is $4,507, excluding slum clearance. This over-all cost also reflects the economies attained by the U. S. H. A., being $1,023 less than the average value of new housing insured by F. H. A. It is obvious in the light of these figures that the White amendment would eliminate practically all the 140 projects under construction, making it impossible to do slum clearance and build low-rent housing projects in almost every part of the United States.

It is also important to note that the over-all cost of $4,507 on the U. S. H. A. projects is an average cost and that on many projects this average cost will have to be exceeded. Even so, this cost does not include slum clearance, which under the act must be carried out as part of the program. The $3,500 imposed as a maximum over-all cost by the White amendment implies that good housing can be built under this figure, including not only land, nondwelling facilities, new construction, and equipment, but also including the cost of slum clearance. We are convinced that no good housing can be built within this limitation, and that the adoption of the White amendment would prevent the U. S. H. A. from completing the 140 projects it has already initiated and prevent the U. S. H. A. from doing additional slum clearance and from building additional decent housing in any substantial part of the country. The amendment would inevitably scrap the whole U. S. H. A. program, deprive the building mechanics and laborers of the opportunity this program offers to secure private employment at fair labor standards, and would wipe out the prospects of rehousing in decent homes the men, women, and children who now live in the slums and blighted areas of the Nation.

The American Federation of Labor has backed the U. S. H. A. also important to note that the over-all cost of $4,507 on the

The American Federation of Labor has backed the U. S. H. A. program from the beginning. The Houston convention of the American Federation of Labor, held in October 1938, unanimously approved the expansion of this program, which it held to be most vital to the Nation at this time. On behalf of the American Federation of Labor, I express my sincere hope that the friends of labor in the House of Representatives will support our view and defeat this destructive amendment.

Sincerely yours

Sincerely yours.

HARRY C. BATES

Chairman, Housing Committee, American Federation of Labor.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein communications I received from the A. F. of L. and the C. I. O.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LICENSING OF CIVILIAN MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill entitled "An act to make unlawful attempts to overthrow the Government of the United States: to require licensing of civilian military organizations; to make unlawful attempts to interfere with the discipline of the Army and Navy; to require registration and fingerprinting of aliens; to require deportation of certain aliens; to enlarge the jurisdiction of the United States circuit court of appeals in certain cases and for other purposes."

I offer this bill because I am confident that the great majority of loyal American citizens believe that legislation should be enacted now, at this session, to curb, prohibit, and punish some of those most flagrant, offensive, persistent, and organized subversive movements against our constitutional form of democratic government.

Many bills have been offered at this and previous sessions aimed at different phases of the subject. The bill which I present, and which is subdivided into five titles, includes the objectives of much of the legislation heretofore proposed. I have included in it only such provisions as I believe that every Member of Congress, irrespective of party, approves and can wholeheartedly support.

I recognize that many proposals of a controversial nature on this subject of un-American activities have been offered that would meet with opposition from one group or another. Such provisions I have eliminated with the idea that the bill here presented affords a fairly wide range of proposals for the beginning of needed legislation. I realize that if this bill becomes a law it will need revision and amendment, but feel confident that when the investigation of the Committee on un-American Activities has been completed we will have a clearer picture of the whole subject upon which to base comprehensive legislation.

In the meantime, the enactment of this legislation at this session of Congress will materially aid the Dies committee in carrying out the purposes of its investigation.

I claim no originality for the provisions of this bill. In fact, I have examined the provisions of numerous bills introduced by others in the House and in the Senate and have drawn freely from the language of such bills. All I have sought to do is to codify the many proposals contained in other bills, eliminating those which I regarded as too controversial, and have tried to incorporate only those provisions that would meet with universal approval as being needful legislation. I have undertaken to present a bill in support of which we could all meet on common ground. The bill contains, in a large measure, proposals submitted and bills offered by Mr. DEMPSEY, of New Mexico; Mr. TAY-LOR of Tennessee; Mr. Fish, of New York; Mr. Voorhis of California; Mr. May, of Kentucky; Mr. McCormack, of Massachusetts; Mr. RANDOLPH, of West Virginia; Mr. DICKSTEIN, of New York; Mr. Brown of Georgia; Mr. Starnes of Alabama; Mr. Hobbs, of Alabama; and many others; and some modest suggestions of my own.

There are millions of loyal American citizens who are being offended and alarmed daily by the persistent and overwhelming barrage of publications, pamphlets, and public utter-ances attacking our system of government, and by the known presence of paid agents of other governments fomenting disturbances in our midst; and these citizens are beginning to wonder why Congress does not enact some law or take some action to prohibit and to punish some of these more obvious attempts to undermine our constitutional form of government.

I am submitting this statement to the House in order to invite the attention of the Members to the provisions of this bill while it is being considered in committee, and I urge every Member to read the bill and, if you have any constructive criticism or amendment, to submit the same while the bill is under consideration by the committee, in order that unintentional hardships or injustices that may have been inadvertently included may be eliminated by committee amendment before the bill comes to the floor of the House.

I realize that there are those who will seek to sabotage any effort to suppress this wave of un-American and subversive activities, and the chief method of doing so is to call such bills "red baiting." This term always seems to have some magical effect on some people. Personally, I do not see anything against "red baiting." I myself am for "red baiting." The "reds" have been baiting loyal Americans and the American form of government constantly, and a little "red baiting" by good, patriotic, red-blooded American citizens with the same kind of poison bait that is being used to weaken our system of government meets with my full approbation. I am strong for the old philosophy of "fighting the devil with fire."

As I have stated before, I have no pride of opinion in the provisions of this bill, because they are to a large extent the work and the language of others, but I do hope that this appeal may bring forth constructive and helpful suggestions to perfect and strengthen the bill while it is being considered by the committee. Certainly I shall welcome any proposed change that would accomplish that purpose.

The bill is subdivided into five titles, and its provisions may be briefly analyzed as follows:

TITLE I

Section 1 makes it unlawful to advocate overthrow of the Government by force.

Section 2 makes it unlawful to publish or distribute literature advocating overthrow of the Government by force.

Section 3 makes it unlawful to defend assassination by word or writing of any officer of the Government.

Section 4 makes it unlawful to affiliate with any organization advocating overthrow of the Government by force.

TITLE II

Section 5. Makes it unlawful to organize or join civilian military

Section 5. Makes it unlawful to organize or join civilian military organization without a license from Secretary of War. Section 6. Secretary of War may investigate such organizations and require statement of purposes and objects under cath. Section 7. Definition of civilian military organization. Section 8. Exceptions.

Section 9. Makes it unlawful to advise member of Army or Navy to disobey orders.

Section 10. Gives power to seize literature advocating such. Section 11. Definition of Army.

TITLE III

Section 12. Person not to be naturalized who advocates any other form of government for the United States.

Section 13. To prohibit aliens from commuting to United States or employment.

Section 14. Deportation of criminal aliens.

Section 15. Registration of aliens. Section 16. How to register.

Section 16. How to register.
Section 17. Immigration service to require registration.
Section 18. Fingerprinting aliens.
Section 19. Forms for registration.
Section 20. First registration within 60 days.
Section 21. Commissioner of Immigration to keep records.

Section 22. To be deported for failure to register.

TITLE IV

Section 23. Unlawful to attempt or to conspire to commit viola-

Section 24. Punishment and deportation of any alien violating the act.

Section 25. Country refusing reentry of deported aliens to have quota suspended.

TITLE V

Sections 26 to 31. Provide for internment of certain aliens and enlarges jurisdiction of circuit court of appeals in certain cases.

I cordially invite constructive criticism for the improvement of the terms of the measure and the cooperation of all members in its enactment into law.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit two unanimous-consent requests.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state them.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio speech by Paul Scharrenberg on the subject of Federal aid to education.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman tell us again who made this address?

Mr. GEYER of California. Paul Scharrenberg, of the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. RICH. Is the gentleman willing to permit addresses made by anybody outside of Congress to go in the Congres-SIONAL RECORD as part of our record?

Mr. GEYER of California. I think the other side has been doing it, have they not?

Mr. RICH. The Democrats are responsible for this RECORD. If the publication now known as the Congressional RECORD is to be filled with speeches of everybody else in the country, it will cease to be a record of the proceedings of Congress

Mr. GEYER of California. Is the gentleman objecting? Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman think this speech ought to go in?

Mr. GEYER of California. I think it ought to go in, or I would not have asked that it go in.

Mr. RICH. Why does the gentleman think it ought to go in the RECORD?

Mr. GEYER of California. I think it ought to go in the RECORD because it is educational in value. I think it ought to go in the RECORD because the American Federation of Labor have a right to let the world know what they want.

Mr. RICH. Is the Congressional Record a publication for the American Federation of Labor, or is it a record of the proceedings of Congress?

Mr. GEYER of California. Answering the gentleman, I may say it is just as much a vehicle for matters such as I now ask to have inserted as it is a vehicle for the Inglewood Daily News to put things in against Towne Neilander which perhaps are not true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. TABER. I object.

SHINGLE QUOTA AND MARKETING OF IMPORTED LUMBER

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a bill to restore the 25-percent quota on importation of red-cedar shingles from Canada which became effective under the N. R. A. and was continued satisfactorily under the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada. However, it was abrogated under the recent new treaty to the great detriment of the people of my district and the Pacific Northwest and it ought to be reinstated in the interests of the workers and industries. We have asked President Roosevelt to give notice to Canada under paragraph (b), article X of the Canadian Trade Agreement for a revision of paragraph 1760, to bring this about and we have high hopes that the President will act favorably. If this is not done, we shall have to press for the enactment of this legislation, which is similar to that introduced in the Senate by the Senators of Washington and Oregon.

I am also introducing a bill to reenact the important and very essential lumber-marking proviso of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, which was enacted in the last Congress but also nullified under the last reciprocal-trade agreement negotiated with Canada. This would require imported forest products to be marked showing the country of origin, instead of being exempted from such marking provision.

The bills are as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5124) relating to the importation of shingles

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions contained in any foreign-trade agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into, whenever any organization or association representing the producers of more than 75 percent of the red-cedar shingles produced in the United States during the previous half-year period shall request the President to limit the importation of red-cedar shingles from Canada, and the President finds from available statistics that the total quantity of red-cedar shingles produced in the Dominion of Canada which is entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption in the United States, during any given half of any calendar year exceeds or will exceed 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports during the preceding half year, the President shall issue an order limiting for the 6 months immediately following the half of the calendar year in which said excess occurred the quantity of red-cedar shingles to be imported from Canada to 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments and imports of red-cedar shingles for such preceding half calendar year. The President shall issue a new order for each half of the calendar year thereafter with the same limitations as hereinbefore set forth. Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions contained

A bill (H. R. 5125) to amend the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, with respect to the marking of lumber and timber imported from foreign countries shingles."

Be it enacted, etc., That the proviso contained in subdivision (J) of section 304 (a) (3) of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided, That this subdivision (J) shall not apply to sawed lumber and timbers, telephone, trolley, electric-light, and telegraph poles of wood, and bundles of subtrales."

SEC. 2. The provisions of section 304 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended by this act, shall be effective after the thirtieth day following the date of enactment of this act, notwithstanding any provision to the contrary contained in any foreign-trade agreement heretofore or hereafter entered into under the authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended and supplemented.

STATEMENT OF THE UNITED STATES RED-CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY, INC., RELATING TO THE 1939 RECIPROCAL-TRADE AGREEMENT WITH CANADA

The United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry, Inc., with its principal offices at Seattle, Wash., desires to present the following for your consideration in connection with the reciprocal-trade agreement with Canada.

ment with Canada.

The 1936 agreement provides for the free importation of shingles from Canada, but the United States reserved the right to limit importations of red-cedar shingles to 25 percent of the domestic requirements. In accordance with this reservation, Congress provided in section 811 of the Revenue Act of 1936 for the imposition of the 25-percent limitation during the continuance of the 1936 agreement. The 1939 agreement provides (par. 1760 of schedule II) that shingles may be imported free, but reserves the right of the United States to impose a duty, not exceeding 25 cents per square, on red-cedar shingles imported in excess of 30 percent of the domestic consumption.

Even before ratification of the new agreement by the Canadian Parliament the threat of the impending change with regard to red-cedar shingles has produced dire results for our industry.

cedar shingles has produced dire results for our industry. Imports of shingles in 28 days of January 1939 amounted to 303,675 squares. This is an increase of 60.5 percent over the average of the three January imports covered by the 1936 agreement. The figures are as follows: January 1936, 153,566 squares; January 1937, 168,779 squares; January 1938, 229,505 squares; an average of 183,950 squares; January 1939, 303,675 squares.

The immediate effect, however, was felt in November 1938, following the public announcement of the new agreement. The market broke approximately 17 percent, or 40 to 55 cents per square, and the combination of break in price and cancelation of orders caused a large percentage of mills to be shut down, thereby throwing many hundreds of men out of work and causing a confused situation for the manufacturers.

The next effect of the proposed agreement was vastly increased activity among Canadian mills, many of which (those having a suf-LXXXIV-188 ficient log supply on hand), started running two shifts per day, 6 days per week, or 96 hours weekly, preparatory to dumping enormous quantities of red-cedar shingles on the American market in the spring of 1939. As logs became available other mills started up and the first result is the large increase in imports as indicated by the largue features. January figures.

January figures.

The final effect will be a drastic reduction of our wage scale or the virtual abandonment of the American market to the Canadians. Each year since 1933 has seen an increase in wages in the industry, the average wage in 1938 being 92.3 cents per hour. Since that year, 1933, the industry has become completely unionized and, therefore, individual bargaining is no longer available to the manufacturers in the United States, as it is to Canadian operators.

The United States wage average is approximately 35 cents per hour higher than the Canadian average, or in percentage our average is approximately 60 percent greater than the Canadian average. Another important factor in establishing Canadian control of the American market is the cost of the raw product—cedar logs. Our cost has been $18 per thousand feet, whereas the Canadian manufacturer has been paying from $12 to $16. The lower log price in Canada, caused by a wage scale much inferior to the American loggers' scale, gives the Canadian shingle manufactured shingles; taking the two items together—namely, labor cost and log cost—the Canadian mills enjoy a cost advantage of from 45 cents to 80 cents per square. cents per square.

cents per square.

The final element of cost which may be compared is that of transportation of the finished product. The cedar-bearing section of Canada and that of the United States is approximately the same distance from the domestic market, and therefore there is parity in rail rates. The Canadians, however, enjoy an advantage in water shipments. According to law we must use American bottoms at established rates, whereas the Canadian mills are free to use the ships of any nation and may drive bargains where possible.

From the foregoing it is evident:

1. The new agreement has created a competitive situation which

1. The new agreement has created a competitive situation which has broken the market and caused a serious curtailment of domestic production.

2. It has caused the import of an abnormal quantity of red-cedar shingles as compared with imports under the 1936 agreement.

3. It promotes labor disputes because the new condition makes necessary a substantial reduction in wages and an increase in hours

CONCLUSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES RED-CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY

CONCLUSIONS OF THE UNITED STATES RED-CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY
That action be taken under paragraph (b), article X of the Canadian trade agreement, and a proposal be made to revise paragraph 1760 to provide for the right to limit the total quantity of red-cedar shingles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during any given half of any calendar year, to a quantity not exceeding 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports of such shingles during the preceding half year, and for the right to impose an ad valorem duty of 25 percent on all red-cedar shingles imported into the United States in excess of the 25 percent quota aforesaid.

We believe the foregoing restriction would be fair to the red-excess of the 25 percent quota aforesaid.

We believe the foregoing restriction would be fair to the redcedar shingle industry in the United States and in Canada and to the domestic market. Twenty-five percent of the American market gives to Canada the same proportion of our shingle market it enjoyed during the years when manufacturing costs were on a parity. An ad valorem customs duty of 25 percent will amount to sufficient to reasonably equalize costs, thereby giving the domestic market red-cedar shingles produced under competitive conditions and in amounts in accordance with the demand.

We are attaching hereto a summary of facts in support of the

We are attaching hereto a summary of facts in support of the proposed change together with charts on the wage situation in the United States and in Canada.

UNITED STATES RED CEDAR SHINGLE INDUSTRY, INC., By DAVID M. WILLIAMS, Secretary-Manager.

MEMORANDUM-PROPOSED CHANGE IN RED-CEDAR SHINGLE PROVISION OF CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

OF CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

The President to give notice to Canada under paragraph (b), article X of the Canadian trade agreement, signed November 17, 1938, of a proposal to revise paragraph 1760, as follows:

Provide for a reservation of the right to limit the total quantity of red-cedar shingles which may be entered, or withdrawn from warehouse, for consumption during any given half of any calendar year, to a quantity not exceeding 25 percent of the combined total of the shipments of red-cedar shingles by producers in the United States and the imports of such shingles during the preceding half year, and for the right to impose an ad valorem duty of 25 percent on all red-cedar shingles imported into the United States in excess of 25-percent quota aforesaid. cess of 25-percent quota aforesaid.

SUPPORTING FACTS FOR PROPOSAL TO REVISE CANADIAN TRADE AGREEMENT

- The mill price of shingles dropped approximately 50 cents per square immediately following announcement of the Canadian trade agreement.
- 2. Canadian red-cedar shingle mills which have logs available have been running two 8-hour shifts per day, 6 days per week, or 96 hours weekly since January 1, 1939, preparatory to dumping enormous quantities of red-cedar shingles on the American market in the spring. Other Canadian mills plan to run double shifts as soon as they can get a sufficient supply of logs in the spring.

- 3. Imports in January 1939 were 60.5 percent greater than the average of the 3 identical months under the old agreement: January 1936, 153,566 squares; January 1937, 168,779 squares; January 1938, 229,505 squares; average, 183,950 squares; January 1939, 303,675 squares.
- 4. The wage differential between American and Canadian mills is
- and Canadian mills is more than 30 cents per hour (see charts attached hereto).

 5. The price of raw materials—cedar logs—in the United States is $18 per thousand feet, or $1.50 per square of manufactured shingles, compared to $12 to $16 per thousand feet, or $1 to $1.35 per square of manufactured shingles in Canada.
- 6. The two items—labor and logs—constitute the Canadians of from 45 to 80 cents per square. -constitute a cost advantage to
- 7. American mills have adequate machinery and labor to supply the entire American market. If there had been no imports of shingles during the past 3 years, the total amount of wages received by American workingmen in the industry would have been increased 42.6 percent in 1936, 36.6 percent in 1937, 34.4 percent in 1938.

- 8. If American mills had supplied the entire United States market, the entire industry would have been employed 83 additional days in 1936, 71 additional days in 1937, 64 additional days in 1938.

 9. Under the 1936 trade agreement, 25 percent of the American market gave the Canadians the same proportion of our shingle consumption they enjoyed during many years of wage parity, as found by the Tariff Commission in their 1934 report on the red-cedar shingle industry.

 10. An ad valorem duty of 25 percent would amount to from
- shingle industry.

 10. An ad valorem duty of 25 percent would amount to from 60 to 70 cents per square. This would enable the American producer to maintain present hours and wage scale and compete with Canadian shingles or imports over a 25-percent quota—yet Canadian shingles could always be imported.

Mr. SMITH of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I just made and to include therein the two bills to which I have referred, which are very short, also a statement from the United States Red Cedar Shingle Industry, Inc.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SMITH]?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing a bill which provides for the payment of $1,338,160.92 to the State of Ohio. A copy of this bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the State of Ohio, the sum of $1,338,-160.92, being the amount of payments with respect to old-age assistance under title I of the Social Security Act for the month of October 1938 not paid to such State on account of the refusal of the Social Security Board to certify such amount for payment to such State.

My reason for introducing this bill is that this amount is actually owing to the State of Ohio from the Federal Government. The facts are about as follows: For some few months before October 1938 there was considerable confusion and misunderstanding between the Governor of the State of Ohio and the Social Security Board. The Board claimed that the Governor was not administering the old-age pensions properly in Ohio and the Governor maintained the contrary. As a result of this conflict the Social Security Board refused to come forward with its installment for the month of October 1938. The amount of that installment was $1,274,438.97 designated as assistance and $63,721.95 designated as a grant. Together these make the total of $1,338,160.92.

When the Social Security Board refused to come forward with its payment which would match the payment to be made by the State of Ohio it became evident that the beneficiaries of the old-age pension law in Ohio might not receive their October installment. The Governor of Ohio so manipulated the situation as to effect a transfer of State funds in Ohio with the result that Ohio paid both its own share and the share of the Federal Government. The oldage pensioners were not denied their October installment.

Whatever the trouble was that existed between these two agencies was later satisfactorily adjusted because the November installment was paid and every installment from that time has come forward from the Federal Social Security Board without interruption.

In other words the State of Ohio paid $1,338,160.92 that should have been paid by the Federal Government. This bill asks that the State be reimbursed as it should be. There can be no question about the validity and the honesty of the claim of the State of Ohio.

Members of Congress and the Senators from Ohio in collaboration with the attorney general of Ohio and the Governor of Ohio have been negotiating with the Social Security Board in an effort to secure the payment of this sum. Negotiations have not been concluded and are still pending. This bill is introduced so as to protect the interests of the State in case this adjustment is not finally and promptly concluded. If developments indicate that our only chance for adjustment is through legislation then we will be well on our way with such legislation for this bill will have been referred to the proper committee and we will be that much further toward a final conclusion. Personally I hope that this matter may be adjusted. I confidently believe it can. It is a just claim and I feel the Government should come forward with a payment of this amount of money for the State has paid the Government's share and naturally expects to be reimbursed.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record by including therein a letter which I recently addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury relative to subsidized German imports, together with his reply thereto, and also a ruling just issued by the Treasury Department imposing countervailing tariff duties on such imports in accordance with the accompanying opinion of the Attorney General.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway]?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein certain correspondence between the Attorney General and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Thomas]?

There was no objection.

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein a statement from the Guaranty Survey on the subject "Will Government Investment Promote Business Recovery?" This is a very fine analysis of existing conditions, and I believe it will benefit every Member of the House to read and analyze this statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Leland M. Ford]?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a statement by whom?

Mr. LELAND M. FORD. It is a statement by the Guaranty Survey of New York City.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. Leland M. Ford]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter received from one of my constituents.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford]?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEHRMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record, and to include therein a joint resolution passed by the Wisconsin Legislature pertaining to the Great Lakes waterways.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Gehrmann]?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record, and to include therein an excerpt from the Associated Press and from the International News Service regarding our foreign affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER]?

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolles]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOLLES. Mr. Speaker, I intend to make some remarks today on the pitiful plight of the dairy farmer in my district. We are versatile in the producing and marketing of milk. These are real farmers, keenly alive to all the most modern in farm practice. They have great milk plants, silos, barns, stables—all sanitary herds free from tuberculosis and Bang's disease. In most of the five counties fluid milk is sold in the Chicago market, where 35 indictments have been returned against milk dealers and others on charges of conspiracy in the distribution of milk. What we want to know is when these persons are going to be brought to trial? I cannot answer but I hope the Attorney General of the United States will take cognizance of this at once.

In this connection let me say that last week the retail price to the consumer in the city of Milwaukee was cut from 12 to 10 cents a quart. How was that brought about? Not by any philanthropy by the milk monopolies but by cutting the price paid the producer from $2.71 a hundred to $2.10 a hundred. It will be noticed that the distributor's profit remains the same while the consumer's benefit is taken out of the pocketbook of the dairy farmer.

In the last 4 days I have received near a thousand reports from farmers in my district. They hope I can do something for them. I would like to but I seem to be in a helpless minority to impress upon the Agricultural Department any necessity of attention to the dairy which produces 20 percent of the agricultural value of the farm production.

I want Members of Congress to read some of these letters. I hope they will give greater understanding of the dairy farmer's situation. The spread between the price to milk producer and the consumer is far too great. Why should people in Washington pay 14 cents a quart for milk when it can be bought from the dairyman for from 2 to 3 cents a quart? Answer that. Somebody is being robbed at a profit.

Here is the story of Charles Morris, Sr., a good businessman of Sharon, Wis. Every Member of this House should read this letter. It gives a better picture of our circumstances in the First District of Wisconsin than I could paint. Think of the comic tragedy of spending a million dollars for Arctic reindeer when there are cows needing consideration—wealth-producing cows. Mr. Morris writes me:

I have two good farms, one in Rock County, 160 acres, and one in Walworth, 140 acres, very good farms, good buildings, and cash rent for both $6 per acre, fairly good tenants, but they just cannot make them pay out. I am at present back on taxes also interest and no possible way to meet or overcome our present financial worries unless Congress finds a credit plan to help the farmers out. No buying, no chance to borrow money from the banks only on very short terms, and short terms are no good to the farmers. Of course, Stephen, you know that an act of God or from Congress must be coming forth at once or the poor farmers are gone. I am telling you of myself, but I am speaking for all farmers and small-business men. We are done, I tell you, providing Congress don't move, the grain rotted in the field before they threshed it, therefore the seed will not grow this spring and the farmer has no credit and no money to pay for seed. Now, then, what can they do? A great number of farmers right here in this community took out Federal loans in 1933, whereby as you know they gave away all their securities. Therefore, they have nothing to offer for credit and they are stifled, broke, up against a stone wall. Owing to untoward circumstances which have arisen a few years back we are in dire want and pecuniary embarrassment. Being unable to meet our honest debts, what can be done? I want your suggestions, also every man in the House of Representatives. You boys must be able to work out some kind of a constructive program whereby we can have some buying power.

We have a small business here at Sharon but no buying power.

We have a small business here at Sharon but no buying power. Can't buy any stock to go ahead with, therefore we are at a standstill. What are we going to do, or what is Congress going to do? If people cannot pay taxes things are more serious than we think, my dear Stephen. As I have told you, I am talking for several other farmers and businessmen. Very soon interest is due, also taxes. These men are all over 65 years of age and May I they expect, myself included, to lay down and let the Federal land bank foreclose, pitch the property to hell and get an old-age pension. They mean business, Stephen. What do you think?

W. B. Sherman, of the Lake View Bee and Honey Farm, Elkhorn, says:

May I say I cannot believe many of the Members of Congress or the Senate realize how little income the farmers are receiving. I have a good farm and my milk check runs from $50 to $100 permonth. I pay a hired man $40, house rent, garden, and about 150 pounds of pork, besides expenses of feed, repairs, insurance, taxes $170, threshing, silo filling and shredding bills, and how much do you imagine my wife and I get for our labor? We are receiving now about $1 a hundred or 2 cents a quart for milk. The Milwaukee Journal published a report last fall showing earnings of the large milk trusts of five to ten million dollars. If Roosevelt wants to help business, would it not be wise to start at the bottom?

Then comes a plea from Joseph E. Vodas, in one of Rock County's excellent farm sections-Milton, Wis.:

County's excellent farm sections—Milton, Wis.:

Mr. Bolles, as a Member of Congress, I wish to appeal to you if it would be in your power to help give us farmers a break. It is getting so that we farmers will not be able to exist with these low prices we are getting for our milk, etc., but what we must buy is still high, especially farm machinery or repairs for same. It really is no joke—the farmer won't be able to buy a new pair of overalls. All they got left is to keep up repairing the old ones and they won't stand that long any more either. What then? I believe there are plenty of people on relief without forcing the farmers on relief, which our Government will do if they don't do something about farm prices very soon. Taxes are going up right along. Now the farmers are getting very desperate and they will not stand for it long. All the Government is doing is investigating. Some of us farmers have been farming from 20 to 50 years and never had a Government investigator to come to our farm and ask any questions, etc., regarding how we are getting along. We farmers often wonder where they are investigating. The trouble is the farmers don't give any tips or commission. We farmers believe the Government has used this alibi long enough. It is about time they used some action. We are to be proud of our Government, but how can we when we receive such poor credit for our hard work?

JUST A ROCK COUNTY FARMER.

JUST A ROCK COUNTY FARMER.

And here is another letter, one of several hundred of like tenor and import, from Emmett Wright, of my own county:

DEAR MR. BOLLES: For God's sake, see what can be done to get farm machinery down in price where it belongs or else get produce prices up to where they belong. One or the other is out of line, and we farmers believe it's farm products. We can't subsist and pay high prices and get so little for ours much longer. Something has to be done, and done quick. We don't kick on taxes or interest, but we must get our share of prices for milk and farm produce. Us farmers don't kick enough. If you want to do something worth while, look into this and act. This is the consensus of all the farmers out this way.

Now, what, I ask, is Congress to do with these questions? The question cannot be answered by laughing it off. Are we going to save these farmers of the type of Michael Kerkman, of Racine County, or let them to the relief rolls-

Do you know if the Government will bring to trial those that were indicted in the Chicago milk business? Something must be done. We received a 10 cents per 100 pounds cut in January, which left us $1.50 per 100 pounds less 12 cents per 100 pounds for trucking to plant, or $1.38 net. What will we receive in the flush period if that is all they will pay us now? In 1938 I produced 10,000 pounds more milk than in 1937 and received $360 lees money. I also know of other farmers that found the same results. With taxes rising and farm income declining we can't make both ends meet and we will farm income declining, we can't make both ends meet and we will all soon be on relief.

And I close with another type of letter, from John Brandt, of Brodhead, Wis., in the cheese belt:

I am a farmer and have been farming for myself for 40 years, and I am considered a good farmer and I live on my farm. Now, this is the problem that I want solved: My age is 64—not able to farm, cannot hire, the farm will not produce enough to pay a man a living wage, say nothing about my wife and myself. Then comes taxes, insurance, fences, house, and barn and other upkeep. This is the road to destruction. I am on this road with lots of company. If I could get a pension, say, $1 per day, I could take one family off relief and let the young man and wife do the work on this farm and I could live in town. But in this locality the young people live in town and the old, crippled farmer must do the work.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a radio address delivered by the Governor of South Dakota.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and following the legislative program of the day and any special orders heretofore entered I may be permitted to address the House for 25 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. THILL. Mr. Speaker, events in Europe during the past week indicate that the game of bluff and counter bluff which the diplomats have been playing is now at an end. Present indications are that Hitler's 7-league boots will lead to another European conflagration. America must make up her mind today whether she will stay neutral or not. I, as one Representative in Congress, declare that I will never vote to embroil the United States in the coming European

The ominous war clouds which are gathering in Europe should be a warning to us to prepare our internal economy and our war mechanism for defense alone. An adequate standing army, an efficient navy, and a competent air force are needed for protection. In addition to that, a reserve officers' corps of good proportions should be maintained.

The United States must be more than careful to avoid any entangling alliances with any European powers. [Ap-

NATIONAL DEFENSE

Mr. MAY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3791) to provide more effectively for the national defense by carrying out the recommendations of the President in his message of January 12, 1939, to the Congress.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, Ralph Waldo Emerson said: Beware when the great God lets loose a thinker on the earth, Seventy-nine years ago the 19th of March the great God let loose a thinker in the humble home of Judge Silas Bryan at Salem, Ill. Thirty-six years after he was born William Jennings Bryan was nominated by the Democratic Party for President of the United States over the opposition of a Democratic administration.

By the profoundness of his thought, his passion for the common man, his devotion to private and public righteousness, his courageous advocacy of that which he believed to be right, William Jennings Bryan held the leadership of the political party with which he affiliated for almost two decades. Three times his party nominated him for the Presidency, when, under another leader elevated to leadership through Bryan's influence, the Democratic victory came to the Democratic Party. William Jennings Bryan was called to the high post of Secretary of State, where his devotion to the ideals of peace endeared him to the civilized world.

I had the honor of entertaining Mr. Bryan in my home in 1908. Yesterday I had the privilege of standing at the foot of the bronze statue of this Great Commoner overlooking the Potomac River in this Capital City of the Nation. Arm uplifted in characteristic gesture, yet not as the great orator, not as the profound statesman, not as the leader of a great political party, but rather as the advocate of the ideals of the Prince of Peace. William Jennings Bryan will live in the affection of his countrymen and in the admiration of the world.

Bryan's contributions to the welfare of mankind and to the realization of the ideals of democracy in the United States are so varied in form and multiplied in number that one cannot in the brief time permitted me so much as enumerate them. But outstanding in the achievements of democracy which he accomplished or to which he contributed much are the equitable principles of the income tax, the establishment of a Department of Labor in the Presidential Cabinet, the lifting of the womanhood of America from classification with the insane, the alien, and the convict by granting her the self-expression and protection of the ballot and the enduring wedge of democracy in the United States Senate by providing for the election of Senators by the vote of the people.

With his deply rooted religious convictions it was but natural that the attempt of an atheistic science to substitute a molecule for a Maker should stir his nature to its very depths and lead him to devote his declining years to making clear the harmony between the works of God and the word of God. In the earnestness of this great purpose he overtaxed the superb physical powers with which he was endowed and which he used so unsparingly in his battles for the right as he visioned it. Thirteen years ago the great heart ceased, the eloquent lips closed, and the virile intellect lost its channels of expression. On this memorial of his birth he still lives in the institutions of his country, the love of the American people, and the respect of the world. Many in this House on this commemoration of the birthday of William Jennings Bryan can say with countless thousands who knew and loved him-

I cannot say, and I will not say
That he is dead; he is just away;
With a cheery smile and a wave of the hand
He has wandered into an unknown land And left us dreaming how strangely fair It needs must be, since he lingers there; Think of him just the same, I say; He is not dead, he is just away.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. McGehee, may be granted an indefinite leave of absence as he has been called out of town on account of a death in his family.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to be allowed 15 days to do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks within 15 calendar days. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, as I understand, when a Member obtains permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD that permission lasts 30 days. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Thirty days or 30 calendar days? The SPEAKER. Thirty days.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Then, Mr. Speaker, I withdraw that part of my request relating to the 15 days.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his own remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address delivered by me at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier on March 17.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUTHERFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer on Social Security.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in the New York Times of this morning appears a news item stating that 75,000 telegrams have been sent to the President as follows:

Appalled at Franco's brutal reprisals in conquered territory and outraged by Chamberlain's callous betrayal of Spanish Republic, American people urge you publicly denounce rebel regime as forcibly as you did Nazi outrages last November. In name of democracy we urge continued firm stand against recognition of Franco.

I simply wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that this is nothing but propaganda. I have in my hand a communication sent out within the past several days to various persons urging them to send telegrams to the President and enclosing therein the form of the telegram, which is exactly the same as those sent to the President. It is nothing but an organized drive, in other words, organized propaganda of the most contemptible kind. It simply shows how far some people and organizations will go to manufacture a false public opinion. So far as the city of Washington is concerned, that drive was under the leadership of the Washington Friends of Spanish Democracy. On Friday last I was informed that this drive was going to occur. I was given a copy of the telegram that would be sent to the President. On the communication sent out by this organization, if it is a bona fide one, which is doubtful, was a memorandum which reads as follows:

This is a sample of the 2,500 telegrams we are sending President Roosevelt as Washington's quota of the national 100,000-wire campaign. The telegrams cost only 10 cents each. They must reach the President by Sunday night, March 19. This is a rush order, but imperative. Can you make yourself responsible for at least 10 signatures and 10 dimes and get the signatures into this office immediately? The telegrams will be sent from here.

A few days later and on Friday or Saturday last another communication was sent out on a post card, as follows:

Have you collected your share of the signatures on the wire campaign to President Roosevelt? You received the sample wire yesterday urging him to speak out against Franco reprisals and to continue to deny recognition to the rebels. Our office will open all day Saturday and Sunday to receive the signatures that you have collected. Phone them into us immediately and bring the dimes when you can. You still have time. Washington's quota of 2,500 must be fulfilled.

WASHINGTON FRIENDS OF SPANISH DEMOCRACY, 1410 H Street NW.

Such efforts should be exposed. Such efforts are interesting to show the lengths that some movements will go to create an artificial public opinion, or to try and manufacture group pressure, and in this case directed toward the President of the United States.

I refer to this pressure campaign so that its methods, and by whom employed, and the purposes sought will be known to my colleagues in the House. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATESON PUBLIC DEBT (H. DOC. NO. 213)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting herewith a letter dated March 17, 1939, from the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the limitation placed upon the total amount of the public debt obligations which may be issued and outstanding at any one time under authority of the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended. You will note from this letter that the Secretary of the Treasury feels that there will be no necessity for increasing the present limitation of $45,000,000,000 on the total public debt which may be outstanding at any one time, but does feel very strongly that it will be necessary to increase the present limitation of $30,000,000,000 face amount of bonds which may be outstanding at any one time.

I recommend that the Congress take such action as may be necessary to give the Treasury the authority which will enable it to carry out its financing operations during the next fiscal year as may be for the best interest of the Government in line with market conditions at the time of such financing.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, March 20, 1939.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Chair will state that in order that we may get along with the program the Chair will not recognize other Members making requests for time after this request.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, you can see by the request of the President that we are not going to increase the limit on the national debt beyond $45,000,000,000, but the administration wants the privilege of increasing the sale of Government bonds.

If the President of the United States and the Congress wanted to do what is for the best interest of this great Nation of ours, they would economize in their expenditures, though they would not have to sell a great many more bonds and therefore would not have to ask for permission in the very near future to increase our national debt from $45,-000,000,000 to some point way beyond that amount, a travesty to American future generations. If you will read the Treasury's statement each day you will see that we are in a perilous condition and the sooner we act in an economical manner the better the country will be. We are going to have some requests here today for expenditure of funds. Such expenditures should not be made by the Federal Government and I want the Members of Congress to take recognition of that fact and act accordingly. Will you do it? [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Appropriations has concluded hearings on the second deficiency bill and there are some items in it of great urgency. I have discussed with the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], the Speaker, and the acting majority leader the question of when we may get it taken up on the floor. We cannot report the bill today, but we could have it ready for Wednesday; and therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday be in order on tomorrow.

In this connection I may say that the Committee on Banking and Currency has the call, and I have consulted the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL], and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Wolcott] is present. The gentleman from Alabama has no objection. If this consent is granted, we should like to call up the second deficiency bill on Wednesday and dispose of it, which would give the right-of-way, then, on Thursday and Friday to the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The request assumes, of course, we will finish the Interior Department bill before the Department of Agriculture appropriation bill is taken up.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have a clearer understanding of what the Banking and Currency Committee is going to bring up. As I understand, they do not have any bill that they can call up.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Perhaps they do not. I could not get in touch personally with the gentleman from Alabama, but he sent me a message on the telephone stating he had no objection to making the business in order on Wednesday in order on Tuesday. I do not know what the gentleman has to bring up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If they do not claim the right to use Calendar Wednesday, are we going any further in the call of committees?

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. I cannot answer the gentleman about that.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I think we ought to have some information concerning that matter.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to me?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. TABER. The next committee on call would be the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and the next one the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, followed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. I mention this, thinking it might help to find out what might be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may state that at this stage of the session it is usual to call at least one committee on Calendar Wednesday, and it may be agreeable to the other committees to waive the call on Wednesday so that we may go ahead with the appropriations bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I would suggest that if the Banking and Currency Committee does not particularly want to claim the day we could set the day aside entirely.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, if that is agreeable, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday next be dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the majority leader insists that the Calendar Wednesday rule be observed. The agricultural bill is ready, and has been ready for some time. We can take up the bill on Calendar Wednesday or on Thursday or the following Monday.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I understood it would be agreeable if we could get the deficiency bill out of the way by Thursday so that the agricultural bill could be considered on Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday next be dispensed with.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it the understanding that Tuesday will be taken up with other business?

The SPEAKER. If the agricultural bill is ready on Tuesday, the Chair knows of no reason why it should not be continued until later in the week.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Then I would have to object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. JONES of Texas. The gentleman from Missouri states he does not want to start on Tuesday and then stop the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. It would be perfectly agreeable to me to dispense with Calendar Wednesday if we could start with agriculture on Thursday.

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. That was my understanding, and I was not trying to interfere with that plan.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, of course, is somewhat embarrassed in answering the question. In the absence of the majority leader, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Bulwinkle] is acting temporarily as majority leader. The Chair sees no objection to the request proposed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM].

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Cannon] does not object to dispensing with Calendar Wednesday, provided his bill will not be called tomorrow.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WOODRUM] under the circumstances? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is Consent Calendar day, and the Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

AMENDING SOIL CONSERVATION ACT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 3800) to amend section 8 (e) of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Alltoment Act, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, in deference to one of the Members who wanted to be present to present an amendment, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

AGRARIAN CLAIMS COMMISSION, UNITED STATES AND MEXICO

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 114:

Authorizing appropriation for expenses of a representative of the United States and of his assistants, and for one-half of the joint expenses of this Government and the Government of Mexico, in giving effect to the agreement of November 9-12, 1938, between the two Governments providing for the settlement of American claims for damages resulting from expropriations of agrarian properties since August 30, 1927.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY, Mr. BEAM, and Mr. KRAMER objected and the resolution was stricken from the calendar. ADDITIONAL APPROPRIATION, FEDERAL PARTICIPATION, NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

The Clerk called House Joint Resolution 141, to authorize the appropriation of an additional sum of $1,046,000 for Federal participation in the New York World's Fair, 1939.

Mr. KRAMER, Mr. RICH, Mr. GORE, and Mr. WOLCOTT objected and the joint resolution was stricken from the calendar.

PRIVATE CHARTER OPERATION

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2382) to amend section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended, and to amend section 706 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. This seems to be a very important bill. I have tried to understand the bill and do not, perhaps, because of my limited knowledge of the Merchant Marine Act. I do not understand what the legislation provides for. Will the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BLAND] explain briefly?

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, when the United States Marine Commission was appointed there were four lines, perhaps five, that were then Government owned and were being operated by operating agents. Section 704 was amended. The first provided they should not be continued in operation longer than 1 year after the passage of the bill. The bill was amended in 1937 to continue the time and also give a preference to operators. The Maritime Commission has advertised three of those lines for sale. Bids have been received from one concern, the United States Lines, and the Maritime Commission takes the position that it has no authority to negotiate with the present owners, which will be necessary according to our view, in order to recognize the preference that has been accorded not only in the act of 1937 but also since 1920. The proposed bill simply gives the Maritime Commission authority to negotiate. Only one bid has been received, and we feel that it is in the interest of the public that the Commission should have the right to negotiate, but it is not mandatory in any respect that the Commission shall accept the bid or after negotiation give preference to the present operators; in other words, in negotiating with the present bidders or the present operators or anybody else in the interest of carrying out the provisions of the law it is not mandatory that they shall accept the bid of any one person.

In other words, we want to vest the Maritime Commission with sufficient authority, because there is only one bid, and because of preferences that have been accorded, to consider all of the different interests, and then determine with respect to its decision as the best interest of the country demands, and we feel this is more in keeping with the settlements that have been made with the ocean-mail contract than it would be to accept the bid of one bidder, with complete control of the entire shipping under the American flag between the ports affected from north of Cape Hatteras to the Maine-Canada boundary.

Then, as I understand it, unless this bill Mr. WOLCOTT. is passed the Maritime Commission is bound to accept this lone bid.

Mr. BLAND. No; I do not say it is bound to accept, but, according to their views, they would have to reject the present bid and could not negotiate with anybody else. say as the law is now written it compels competitive bidding.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course, it is to be presumed that in negotiations they would not accept an amount less than the bid which they received.

Mr. BLAND. I do not know about that.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This merely allows a little more latitude? Mr. BLAND. Yes; it gives them more latitude in the disposition of the bid. It is an emergency measure by reason of the fact that they now claim they have no right to Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, is this the bill for which a rule was requested from the Committee on Rules?

Mr. BLAND. Yes; it is the bill. The rule is pending, but that was not pressed because we hoped to have a Calendar Wednesday before that time.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that the Committee on Rules was to hear the gentleman from Virginia and others interested in the legislation, and that a meeting of the committee was called for that purpose, and that at the request of the gentleman the hearing was postponed. I never knew just why the hearing before the Committee on Rules was postponed.

Mr. BLAND. Because we hoped to get the bill up on Calendar Wednesday. I had the assurance of the majority leader that we would be reached on the next Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. MAPES. It was not because of any request from the Maritime Commission or suggestion from the Commission that there were some things in connection with the legislation that needed to be straightened out?

Mr. BLAND. No. No request from the Maritime Commission to that effect.

Mr. MAPES. The minority leader has suggested this question: Is this the bill with respect to which there has been some talk that the gentleman might secure recognition to move to suspend the rules and pass the bill?

Mr. BLAND. This is the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936, as amended (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 1194; 49 Stat. 2008, as amended April 1, 1937, ch. 64, 50 Stat. 57), is amended by striking out "and all operation of the Commission's vessels by private operators under such operating agreements shall be discontinued within 1 year after the passage of this act: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent private operators, under such operating agreements, commencing voyages prior to said expiration date and completing them thereafter: Provided further, That nothing contained herein shall be construed as limiting or affecting the power of sale under provisions of section 705 of this act," and inserting in lieu thereof: "Provided, That the Commission shall first negotiate for the charter of said lines with the present operators, respectively, giving them preference in the awarding of the charter."

The first sentence in section 706 (a) of the Merchant Marine Act of 1936 (U. S. C., title 46, sec. 1196; 48 Stat. 2009), is amended by inserting at the end thereof before the period, a comma and the following: "except as otherwise provided in section 704 of this act, as amended."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:
"That section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 1194), is amended to

"That section 70 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended (U. S. C., 1934) ed., Supp. IV, title 46, sec. 1194), is amended to read as follows:

"Sac. 704. All tessels transferred to or otherwise acquired by the Commission in any manner may be chartered or sold by the Commission in any manner may be chartered or sold by the Commission in any manner may be chartered or sold by the Commission in any manner may be chartered or sold by the Commission of this act. Pending such charter or sale the Commission of this act. Pending the case of any line being operated by the Commission on February 1, 1939, preference in the operation, sale, or charter thereof shall be given to the agent operating such line for the account of the Commission on such date. Before advertising any such line for sale or charter, and notwithstanding any advertisement prior to February 1, 1939, for such sale or charter, the Commission shall negotiate with the agent who on such date was operating such line for the account of the Commission for sale or charter of such line to such person. The Commission, pursuant to such negotiation, may enter into an agreement or agreements for such sale or charter upon such terms and conditions as will give preference to the operator who was operating such line on February 1, 1939, insofar as it may be possible to do so consistent with the purposes and policy of the schame of this act. Togg in the first the read of the schame of the read as follows:
"'SEC. 704. All vessels transferred to or otherwise acquired by the act, as amended—

"(a) The Commission shall award the charter to the bidder proposing to pay the highest monthly charter hire unless the Commission shall reject such bid for the reasons set forth in sub-

Commission shall reject such bid for the reasons set forth in subsection (b) of this section.

"'(b) The Commission may reject the highest or most advantageous or any other bid, if, in the Commission's discretion, the charter hire offered is deemed too low, or the Commission determines that the bidder lacks sufficient capital, credit, or experience to operate successfully the line; but the reason or reasons for rejection of any bid, upon request of the bidder, shall be stated to such bidder in writing.

"'(c) If the highest bid is rejected, the Commission may award the charter to the next highest bidder, or may reject all bids and readvertise the line: Provided, however, That the Commission may operate the line until conditions appear to be more favorable for a reoffering of the line for private charter.'"

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to amend sections 704, 705, 706, and 707 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent at this point to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include excerpts from certain statutes.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as it was originally passed, provided that all vessels transferred to or otherwise acquired by the Commission in any manner may be chartered or sold by the Commission pursuant to the further provisions of that act. The section read further:

All vessels transferred to the Commission by this act and now being operated by private operators on lines in foreign commerce of the United States may be temporarily operated by the Commission for its account by private operators until such time and upon such operating agreements as the Commission may deem advantageous, but the Commission shall arrange as soon as practicable to offer all such lines of vessels for charter as hereinafter provided, and all operation of the Commission's vessels by private operators under such operating agreements shall be discontinued within 1 year after the passage 'if this act.

Nothing in section 704 provided preference to the then operators of Government-owned lines. In 1937 this section was amended, and the amendment provides for preference to the operators.

The 1937 amendment provided that the Commission shall arrange as soon as practicable to offer all such lines of vessels for charter as hereinafter provided, and added affirmatively: "Preference to be given to present operators."

The above law has never been repealed.

The intent and purpose of the Congress was (a) to deal fairly with the operators; (b) to protect the outer ports from monopolies and operation by one or more lines with headquarters in distant ports, where the interests of those operators might be in the ports of their headquarters and not general; (c) to encourage patronage of American-flag ships by diversity of operations; and (d) to build up business through the outer ports.

PREFERENCE PROVIDED IN OTHER SECTIONS OF THE ACT

The preference sections above recited are not the only provisions of the 1936 act looking to preference. While the preference to present operators did not expressly appear in section 704 until the 1937 amendment, yet section 809 of the 1936 act is in the same form now as when the law was enacted in 1936. It reads as follows:

SEC. 809. Contracts under this act shall be entered into so as to equitably serve, insofar as possible, the foreign trade requirements of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports of the United States. In awarding contracts under this act, preference shall be given to persons who are citizens of the United States and who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested. marily interested.

It will be observed that the language comprehends contracts of charter as well as sale, contracts of Governmentowned and operated lines as well as others, and requires that preference shall be given to persons who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested.

Moreover, this section requires equitable distribution among ports in order to protect outer ports.

Section 402 of the act of 1928 required, in the certification of ocean-mail routes and in the establishment of such services, that such services should be distributed so as equitably to serve the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coast ports.

Section 7 of the act of 1920 gave the same preference which is provided in section 809 of the act of 1936. It reads as Provided, That preference in the sale or assignment of vessels for operation on such steamship lines shall be given to persons who are citizens of the United States who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested in such lines if the Board is satisfied of the ability of such persons to maintain the service desired and proposed to be maintained, or to persons who are citizens of the United States who may then be maintaining a service from the port of the United States to or in the general direction of the world-market port to which the Board has determined that such service should be established.

HOW PREFERENCE TO BE RECOGNIZED—MANIFESTLY NEGOTIATION IS REQUIRED

The Commission very recently has held that legally it cannot undertake private negotiations with present owners of Government-operated lines either before or after bids, and that the only way in which the preference can be allowed is in the case where the present operator and the outsider submit equally or nearly equal bids. To pursue this course is to deny to present operators the preference given (a) under section 704, as amended, and (b) under section 809, where the Commission is specifically required—

In awarding contracts under this act, preference shall be given to persons who are citizens of the United States and who have the support, financial and otherwise, of the domestic communities primarily interested.

Any construction of the law which makes it mandatory to accept the highest bid without regard to the preference granted by law violates the preference accorded by the law and defeats the express language of the law.

It is contended that by section 707 (a) the Commission is required to accept the highest bid unless the bid is rejected for the reasons set forth in subsection (b), which is when the bid is too low or the bidder lacks sufficient capital, credit, or experience to operate successfully the line.

If the highest bid is rejected, the Commission, by subsection (c) of section 707, may award the charter to the next highest bidder, or may reject all bids and readvertise the line.

The Commission concludes that it has no power of negotiation; and to remove all doubt, the O'Leary bill permits those negotiations which may be found to be necessary to give effect to the existing law.

INVITATION TO BID UNCERTAIN

There were obviously three prospective bidders in the market. They were the United States Lines, the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co., and the Southgate Nelson Corporation. The existing subsidy awards to the United States Lines and the services operated by them from and to other more highly developed ports such as New York and London, gave them an advantage. They could afford to take chances which less favored bidders would find impossible. No one else without their advantage could take such a chance.

In the invitation to bid under the heading "Information and instructions," under the subtitle "(3) Substitution of vessels," it is provided that the Commission may substitute for any of the vessels awarded or chartered, or vessels owned by the operator substituted therefor, presently existing or newly constructed cargo vessels satisfactory to the operator, and upon such substitution all the provisions of the charterparty agreement, including provisions with respect to the payment of an operating-differential subsidy, should be applicable thereto, subject to the provisions of law then in effect; provided, however, that such adjustments of the basic charter hire may then be made (1) as may be necessary to conform to the provisions of law then in effect, and (2) as the Commission may deem fair and equitable. In the event of the failure of the operator to agree to pay such charter hire for any vessel so substituted by the Commission, the charter-party agreement shall terminate forthwith and the operator shall forfeit all rights thereunder and also pay to the Commission as liquidated damages a sum equal to 121/2 percent of the aggregate amount of any subsidies previously

The uncertainty of these terms gave an advantage to the line which would obtain a monopoly. It is certain that all of the ships to be operated are so old that their useful and economic life in a few years will completely end. The Maritime Commission is building ships, and of those now being built and soon to be launched some will be required for substitution. The Commission, at the time of the substitution, will know the provisions of law then in effect. The invitation shows that they do not know now what the law will be then. Bidders should know what they are bidding on, and this contemplates terms and conditions as well as physical and tangible property. The terms of substitution were uncertain. Obviously the bidders could not know them. Therefore the bidders were required by the invitation to guess the best they could and then were obligated to terms to be imposed in the future. They were required to bind themselves to obligations later to be determined, and obligate themselves if they could not accept those terms to a penal provision of 12½ percent of the aggregate amount of any operating differential subsidy previously paid.

An operator who was already operating extensive and favored services, who was already receiving subsidies, and whose bid would give him complete control of all American-flag services from Cape Hatteras north to the boundaries between Maine and Canada, manifestly could afford to take a gambler's chance. He was the only operator who could take such a chance.

No one else did take that chance, and the persons entitled by law to preferential consideration found themselves denied the preference given them by law.

In hearings before the Senate and House committees great stress is laid by the Commission upon the equitable principle of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. With that abstract principle we agree, but when the law gives a preference to a particular person, and that law has not been repealed, it is binding.

The O'Leary bill provides a means of giving to all a fair chance and equal opportunity. It provides a means of carrying into effect existing law. Surely a commission that has negotiated contracts involving many millions may negotiate these contracts. Certainly the only bidder who responded to this invitation to bid should not complain of negotiations. It was by negotiation that that bidder received its present services first under the old Shipping Board and then under the Maritime Commission, that it then disposed of its interests in the lines now constituting the Good Neighbor Fleet. and that it secured a termination of the European services for the Baltimore Mail Line and finally secured the transfer of that line to intercoastal service. That bidder would appear to be estopped from denying the right of negotiation to others. All that the O'Leary bill does is to accord to operators who have been carrying on against terrific odds an opportunity to deal on equal terms with existing subsidized lines.

The O'Leary bill provides equality of justice and opportunity to all.

SALE BY NEGOTIATION PREFERABLE

Great importance is attached to the so-called fundamental principle of disposing of Government property by public auction or by competitive bids. It is manifest that there are occasions when in justice to all this cannot be done, and when recourse must be had to negotiations. It is not often the case that insolvent railroads are sold by public auction or by sealed bids. Negotiations by officers of the court with interested parties are usual. In its enforcement of its own liens on vessels, the Maritime Commission found that such procedure was required to be followed. This was because long experience had shown that such procedure was necessary for the protection of all interests, and such procedure had become the law of the land. The same essential procedure is preferable in the case of the disposition of these services.

It is true that the Government owns the ships, but there is more at issue than mere sale or charter of ships. There are involved elements such as these: First, the right of all the ports affected to equitable service; second, the right of the Nation to have all of the ports of the Nation developed in the interest of trade promotion and development of facilities for the purposes of trade and national defense; third, the preference provided by law for the present operators, and repeatedly prescribed by law for citizens of ports in the area affected; fourth, the good will of these operators built up through the most trying years in the Nation's history; fifth, the business affiliations, connections, and agencies established at home and abroad by all who desire these lines, and the improvement or impairment of foreign-trade services that may result from the final disposition of the lines; sixth, the local support of the ports interested and that disposition which will serve primarily the interests of the American merchant marine and secondarily the local interests; seventh, the geographical areas reached through each of the ports, the transportation connections, and economic possibilities of these areas, their part in a comprehensive scheme of national defense, and the best means of promoting the interests of those areas and economically serving them; and eighth, whether it is better to have a few big shipping companies serving many localities, or to have a larger number of more or less local companies serving their respective localities, contributing their time, efforts, means, money, and energies in promoting foreign trade, and by their collective efforts more effectually serving the Nation than a few monopolies in the shipping business.

There are many more factors that should enter into the final decision. These factors transcend all rivalries between lines or the continued existence of different services. They are of first importance and enter into the establishment and maintenance of services. These are questions that cannot be answered by competitive bidding or by public auction as the sole means of reaching these ultimate and superior objectives

The argument made in this case that the Maritime Commission can always protect the outer ports carries little weight if the agencies for effectuating that protection are first destroyed. That is a question worthy of consideration by the Commission. The question of the best manner and means of accomplishing this end is not one to be answered always by competitive bidding.

All that the O'Leary bill does, in the limited number of instances cited in the bill, is to allow negotiations. After negotiation the decision is with the Maritime Commission to act as, in its opinion, under the law, the best interest of the country demands.

The proponents of this legislation feel that they can trust the Commission. The great work done by the Commission should assure the American people and the opponents to this measure that the Maritime Commission may be trusted. Of course the Commission may trust itself.

NEGOTIATION AUTHORIZED IN MERCHANT MARINE ACT, 1936, FOR SOME CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

In the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, provision is made under other circumstances for negotiation of construction contracts. See section 502 (b), wherein it is provided that—

In any case where the Commission finds that the construction differential exceeds $33\frac{1}{3}$ percent of such cost—

Construction cost of the vessel paid by the Commission, excluding the cost of national-defense features as provided in said section—and the lowest bid of a responsible domestic shipbuilder is unreasonable, excessive, or collusive, the Commission may negotiate and contract with the view to construction in a domestic shippard that is not unreasonable or excessive in cost or collusive in character. Where the Commission finds that the construction differential exceeds 50 percent of such cost, the Commission may negotiate and contract on behalf of the applicant to build such vessel in a domestic shippard at a cost which will reduce the construction differential to 50 percent or less.

Section 502 (f), which permits allocations to different yards to provide necessary facilities for national defense, in addition, says:

In the allocation of construction work to such yards as herein provided, the Commission may, after first obtaining competitive bids for such work in compliance with the provisions of this act, negotiate with the bidders and with other shipbuilders concerning the terms and conditions of any contract for such work and is authorized to enter into such contract at a price deemed by the Commission to be fair and reasonable.

Again, in section 502 (f), provision is made for the allocation of construction work if the Commission shall find that the existing shipyards, including the navy yards, do not provide adequate facilities to meet necessary requirements for purposes of national defense and national emergency, with special regard to providing facilities for the national defense at strategic points.

It is provided that the Commission, after taking into consideration the benefits accruing from standardized construction, the conditions of unemployment, and the needs and reasonable requirements of all shipyards, may, with the approval of the President, allocate construction work to such yards and in such manner as it may determine to be fair, just, and reasonable to all sections of the country, subject to the provisions of said subsection. The act then provides:

In the allocation of construction work to such yards as herein provided, the Commission may, after first obtaining competitive bids for such work in compliance with the provisions of this act, negotiate with the bidders and with other shipbuilders concerning the terms and conditions of any contract for such work, and is authorized to enter into such contract at a price deemed by the Commission to be fair and reasonable.

We find that Charles Edison, Assistant Secretary of the Navy, recently told Senator Barbour of New Jersey that he was considering carefully a proposal that in building for the Navy shipbuilding contracts might be awarded on an allocation or assignment basis rather than on the basis of competitive bidding.

A detailed plan to that effect was submitted recently by John Green, president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, for the reason that it was believed that the plan would provide employment in such a way that the labor supply would be stable and adequate for the entire period of construction.

Assistant Secretary Edison advised Senator Barbour, according to newspaper reports, that in spite of the benefits that might be derived under the method proposed, it does run counter to the usual and accepted procedure in awarding public contracts in this country. He said, however, that if proper safeguards could be devised, such a method might be entirely in the public interests of efficiency and economy.

There is no such sanctity attached to competitive bids that other methods of procedure may not be followed where those methods are in the interest of efficiency or economy, good business, prevention of monopoly, sanctity of obligation, implied or express, observance of affirmative provisions of law under which persons have acted, or otherwise desirable.

The Commission which has served with such distinction in settling claims involving millions may be safely trusted with these negotiations. That same Commission adjusted many matters involving millions with the only bidder who responded to the invitation for bids involved in this legislation. It can safely be trusted to conduct the negotiations provided in this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'Brien], a member of the committee, may have permission to extend his remarks in the Record at this point and include certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I have given careful study and consideration to the O'Leary bill, H. R. 2382, and to the background of the proposition involved therein. To me the bill appears to be entirely fair and equitable and in keeping with precedents of the past and the declared policy of Congress that we have and maintain an adequate and well-balanced merchant marine.

The question before us has reduced itself to the proposition of whether we are going to scuttle and scrap two or three small but efficient American shipping organizations, which have been operating Government-owned ships for many years, and turn these vessels and these businesses over to a single large combine. The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, after exhaustive hearings, has unanimously declared itself against such a proposition and has gone on record in favor of maintaining these smaller organizations as a part of the American merchant marine wherever consistent with the best interests of the Government.

This action has been taken for two major reasons: First, it is merely carrying out the consistently declared policy of Congress; and, secondly, failure to enact this legislation would mean the destruction of these small but efficient shipping units and the placing of these businesses in the hands of a larger single combine, the United States Lines, which itself has a notorious record for dipping deeply into the coffers of the Federal Treasury at the expense of the American tax-naver

With reference to the first reason, namely, that this bill is merely carrying out the consistently declared policy of Congress, I refer back to the various shipping acts in which Congress has repeatedly stated that in the charter or sale of the Government-owned lines that preference should be given to the present operators thereof. Section 704 of the Merchant Marine Act, as amended, carries specific language to that effect. Unfortunately, however, Congress has never defined the term "preference," and hence the Maritime Commission, as well as the operators of these lines, have never had a clear and definite declaration of what Congress intended by granting this preference. The O'Leary bill does, to a large extent, define that preference.

Of particular significance with reference to this point, I desire to refer to a letter directed to the President of the United States on December 3, 1930, by a special committee appointed by him to investigate and recommend what disposition should be made of the American Diamond Lines and the America-France Line, taking into consideration that the then operators of the services had been outbid in competitive bidding for these services. This special committee consisted of Ira A. Campbell, H. D. Dalton, Edward N. Hurley, George S. Jackson, and Clarence M. Woolley. These gentlemen recommended that these services be sold to their then operators, namely, the American Diamond Lines, to the Black Diamond Steamship Corporation, and the America-France Line to the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co., despite the higher bid for these services placed by the United States Lines, the only other bidder.

Certain phases of this report are extremely pertinent and are very timely to the present situation here presented. I quote from certain passages of this report:

Our conclusions that the public interest would best be served by the sale of the American Diamond Lines to the Black Diamond Steamship Corporation and the America-France Line to the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co. are based upon the following considerations, namely:

1. The Shipping Board has followed the sound policy in consonance with the views of the framers of the legislation, which has made possible the upbuilding of our merchant marine, of placing the various Government services in the hands of different operators. This has resulted in the creation of new shipping concerns, many of them in ports other than New York. The United States has needed and still needs to develop as many substantial and capable organizations and executives in the shipping business as possible. It has been the recognition of this need and the confidence that they would be developed that has brought to constructive shipping legislation the support of Members of Congress, regardless of party lines, and of commercial and agricultural interests throughout the United States. The same policy should be followed wherever soundly applicable in the sales of the Government at the America Hannes Line which

With specific reference to the America-France Line, which is operated by the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co., one of the lines under consideration in the O'Leary bill, the report continues:

The Cosmopolitan Shipping Co. has a good organization in the United States, with its principal office in New York and agencies in other cities, from which comes the largest part of its business. It has an unusually fine and active organization in France, with agents in every important commercial center from which it draws its foreign business.

The officers and agents of the company have devoted their efforts largely to the development of this particular service, extending over a period of 14 years. The company has built up a goodwill in the trade. This is evidenced not only by the way it has developed and held its business, but also by the very excellent letters of endorsements which have been presented to us.

So far as we can ascertain, no criticism has ever been made of the efficiency of the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co.'s management. The Shipping Board has recognized its efficiency by rating the company at its highest classification as an operator. If it had not been efficient, undoubtedly the Board would have changed the management long ago, for it could have turned it over to the United States Lines, which was operating to Cherbourg, or to other operators.

It seems to me that the forceful logic of the Campbell report applies to the present situation. If it was to the best interests of the Government and in keeping with sound public policy to continue the operation of the America-France Line in the hands of the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co. then, and out of the hands of the United States Lines, the highest bidder, it is certainly more so today, for reasons I will show as we look into the past record of the United States Lines.

As to the second reason why the O'Leary bill should be passed, I return to my point that failure to enact this legislation will mean the loss of these small but admittedly efficient shipping units and undoubtedly the placing of these lines under the domination of the United States Lines, resulting in a monopoly for the United States Lines of Government-aided services in the North Atlantic and covering the United Kingdom, French, and German ports. Certainly this is not to be tolerated by the Congress. Better, indeed, is it that we foster and protect for our American merchant marine, as was said in the Campbell report, as many substantial and capable organizations as possible.

I have taken occasion to familiarize myself to some extent with the background of the Southgate Nelson Corporation and the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co., the companies involved under this bill, and I find that these two organizations are doing a splendid job in advancing the interests of the American merchant marine; that their cost to the Government does not at all compare unfavorably with the cost of the many other privately owned lines receiving Government subsidies. As is said in the Kennedy report made on November 10, 1937, giving an economic survey of the American merchant marine at page 34:

From the foregoing it is clear that, although the Government lines are maintained at a net loss, their record compares not unfavorably with that of certain of the subsidized lines.

As far as I have been able to learn, the record of the Southgate Nelson Corporation and the Cosmopolitan Shipping Co. has been open and honest. The record of the United States Lines who are now trying to take over these services and to monopolize Government subsidies is not nearly so wholesome. You are all familiar with the Black investigation. You are all familiar, I am sure, with the Leviathan case. In a stinging letter dated April 14, 1934, addressed to the advisory committee one of the present members of the Maritime Commission, Thomas M. Woodward, scored the International Mercantile Marine and the United States Lines for the attempted bargain they were trying to drive at the expense of the United States in regard to the Leviathan case. An enlargement of the facts may be advisable here.

Can we then be at all sure that these same drains on the Federal Treasury will not be continued? And what position would we be in to stop them if we permitted a monopoly to be set up? Where else could we turn in case of failure of this monopoly or how could we avoid succumbing to its demands? This is something to ponder over. Sufficient thought will bring us to the true thought behind the O'Leary bill.

TEMPORARY DETAIL OF UNITED STATES EMPLOYEES TO GOVERN-MENTS OF AMERICAN REPUBLICS AND THE PHILLIPPINES

The Clerk called the next bill on the Consent Calendar, H. R. 3134, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees possessing special qualifications to governments of American republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes," approved May 25, 1938.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have this bill explained. What has it to do with employing additional American technicians in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. MAY. The purpose of the bill is this: In connection with certain trade agreements and commercial transactions between our outlying possessions and between the South American republics we have been detailing employees to the various governments from this Government. The only thing this bill provides is that when funds have been allocated to the Department of the Interior, for instance, to send some mining man down to Brazil—

Mr. STEFAN. Well, what will these specialists do in the Philippine Islands? In view of the fact that we are leaving the Philippines in 1946, what are they doing there now?

Mr. MAY. I do not know if they have one there, but, if so, it is undoubtedly in connection with the sugar transactions with the Philippines Islands. The only thing is to enable them to pay back to the particular department from their government.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as fol-

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the temporary detail of United States employees, possessing special qualifications, to governments of American republics and the Philippines, and for other purposes", approved May 25, 1938, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"That the President of the United States be, and hereby is, authorized, whenever he finds that the public interest renders such a course advisable, upon agreement with the government of any other American republic or the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands, or the Government of Liberia, if such government is desirous of obtaining the services of a person having special scientific or other technical or professional qualifications, other than those persons covered by the act of May 19, 1926 (44 Stat. 565), as amended by the act of May 14, 1935 (49 Stat. 218), to detail for temporary service of not exceeding 1 year under such government any such person in the employ of the Government of the United States: Provided, That the President may, in extraordinary circumstances, extend the period of such detail for one or more additional periods of not to exceed 6 months each: extraordinary circumstances, extend the period of such detail for one or more additional periods of not to exceed 6 months each: And provided further, That while so detailed, such person shall be considered for the purpose of preserving his rights and privileges as such, an officer or employee of the Government of the United States and of the department or agency from which detailed and shall continue to receive therefrom compensation, and he shall receive additional compensation from the department or agency from which detailed not to exceed 50 percent of the compensation he was receiving as an officer or employee of the United States at the time of detail, and shall receive from the United States reimbursement for travel expenses to and from the place of detail and the time of detail, and shall receive from the United States reim-bursement for travel expenses to and from the place of detail and monthly allowances determined by the President to be adequate for quarters and subsistence during the period of such detail. The additional compensation, travel expenses, and other allowances authorized by this act to be paid to any such officer or employee shall be paid from any appropriations available for the payment of compensation and travel expenses of the officers and employees of the department or agency from which he is detailed: Provided, however, That if any of the governments to which details are authorized by this act shall express the desire to reimburse this Government in whole or in part for the expenses of such details, the President is authorized, when he deems it in the public interest, to President is authorized, when he deems it in the public interest, to accept such reimbursement and the amounts so received may be credited to (a) appropriations current at the time the expenses of details are to be or have been paid, (b) appropriations current at the time such amounts are received, or (c) in part as provided under (a) and in part as provided under (b) hereof; and such amounts shall be available for the purposes of the appropriations to which credited: Provided further, That if any of the governments to which details are authorized by this act shall express the desire to provide advances of funds to be used by this Government, in whole or in part for the expenses of such details, the President is authorized, when he deems it in the public interest, to accept such advances of funds, and the amounts so received may be established as trust funds, to be available for the purpose and under lished as trust funds, and the amounts so received may be established as trust funds, to be available for the purpose and under the provision of this act until the termination of the detail, any unexpended balance of the trust fund to be returned to the foreign government making the advance."

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Wolcott: On page 2, line 13, after the words "Government of the United States", insert "whose services can be spared."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VESSELS FOR THE COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 138, to authorize the construction of certain vessels for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, 2 weeks ago when the calendar was called I enunciated what was to be the policy of the three Members appointed by the minority to supervise this calendar.

I sincerely regret that we have had to apply that policy to this bill, because I think the bill is meritorious. In keeping with the policy we have established I shall have to ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

There was no objection.

MAILING OF REVOLVERS TO OFFICERS OF COAST GUARD

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3231, to authorize the mailing of pistols, revolvers, and other firearms capable of being concealed on the person, to officers of the Coast Guard. There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of the act entitled "An act declaring pistols, revolvers, and other firearms capable of being concealed on the person nonmailable and providing penalty, approved February 8, 1927 (44 Stat. 1059; U. S. C., title 18, sec. 361), is hereby amended by inserting the words "Coast Guard," after the word "Navy," in the first proviso thereof.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time. was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIVE EMPLOYEES IN GOVERNMENT SERVICE ABROAD

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 1523, to authorize the payment of burial expenses and expenses in connection with last illness and death of native employees who die while serving in offices abroad of executive departments of the United States Government.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from New York [Mr. BLOOM] inform the House how much this will cost us?

Mr. BLOOM. It will not cost very much. It applies only to native employees in the Foreign Service. I believe it will not amount to more than $1,000 a year.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. How many native employees do we have in our Foreign Service?

Mr. BLOOM. I do not have those figures with me.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, this is a new departure involving expenditure of money for a new purpose. I think I shall have to ask that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. BLOOM. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, this money comes out of the present appropriation; this does not call for an additional appropriation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The phrase in the bill "last illness" might mean the physician's bill.

Mr. BLOOM. No. This is only for the death of the em-

Mr. BLOOM. Illness and death are combined, but a limitation of not to exceed $100 in any one case is embodied in

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may go over without prejudice at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

BRIDGE ACROSS MAHONING RIVER, YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1661, granting the consent of Congress to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mahoning River at or near Marshall Street, Youngstown.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the city of Youngstown, Ohio, to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge, and approaches thereto, across the Mahoning River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near Marshall Street, Youngstown, Mahoning County, Ohio, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges and other structures over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

Sec. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

BRIDGES IN CADDO PARISH, LA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2192, to extend the time for commencing and completing bridges across Cross Bayou, Twelve Mile Bayou, and Caddo Lake, in Caddo Parish, La.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Brooks] inform us of the necessity for extending the time for the completion of these bridges?

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman from Vermont that as soon as the original bill was passed last year the highway commission began to get the rightsof-way cleared up. They were delayed. They are now prepared to go ahead, however, and let the bids on these particular bridges and begin their construction. The time runs out on August 1, I believe, and the bridges cannot be completed by that time. That is the reason for the request for the extension of time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of bridges across Cross Bayou at Shreveport, La.; across Twelve Mile Bayou, approximately 3 miles north of Shreveport, La.; and across Caddo Lake at or near Mooringsport, La., authorized to be built by the Louisiana High Commission and/or the Parish of Caddo, La., for the purpose of operating free highway bridges and approaches thereto, approved August 19, 1937, in Public Act 318 of the Seventy-fifth Congress entitled "An act to authorize the construction of bridges in Caddo Parish, La."; is hereby further extended 2 years from this date, provided that the agencies above mentioned may construct the bridges herein authorized. ized.

SEC. 2. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all of section 1, after the comma, following the word "Louisiana", in line 9, page 1, and in lieu thereof insert "by an act of Congress approved August 19, 1937, are hereby extended, with respect to each bridge, 1 and 3 years, respectively, from August 19, 1939."

Also, in line 3, page 1, change the word "time" to "times."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS ALLEGHENY RIVER, WESTMORELAND COUNT, PA.

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2635, granting the consent of Congress to Westmoreland County in the State of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway intercounty bridge and approaches across the Allegheny River, connecting Valley Camp in Westmoreland County and East Deer Township in Allegheny County, to connect State Highway Routes No. 28 and 56.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted., etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to Westmoreland County in the State of Pennsylvania to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Allegheny River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, connecting Valley Camp in Westmoreland County and East Deer Township in Allegheny County, to connect State Highway Routes No. 28, which runs from East Pittsburgh to Tarentum, East Deer Township, Allegheny County, and No. 56 (Freeport Road), Lower Burrell Township, Westmoreland County, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

AMENDMENT TO ACT RELATING TO NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN WOMEN BORN IN HAWAII

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 159, to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii," approved July 2, 1932.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii," approved July 2, 1932, is amended to read as follows: That for the purposes of subdivision (b) of section 3 of the act entitled "An act relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women," approved September 22, 1922, as amended, a woman born in Hawaii prior to June 14, 1900, shall be considered to have been a citizen of the United States at birth.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMITTING ADMISSION OF CERTAIN ALIEN WIVES OF UNITED STATES CITIZENS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 160, to permit alien wives of American citizens who were married prior to the approval of the Immigration Act of 1924 to enter the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That part (4) of subdivision (c) of section 13 of the Immigration Act of 1924, as amended by an act of June 13, 1930, is hereby amended so as to read as follows: "or (4) is the alien wife of an American citizen who was married prior to the approval of the Immigration Act of 1924, approved May 26, 1924."

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OTTAWA RIVER AT OR NEAR TOLEDO, OHIO The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3225, authorizing the Department of Highways of the State of Ohio to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Ottawa River at or near the city of Toledo, State of Ohio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that section 2 of this bill seeks to authorize the State of Ohio to condemn private property needed for the construction of this bridge. I assume the only lands involved are the lands upon which the approaches are to be built. I think it is rather presumptive on the part of the Congress of the United States to seek to authorize a sovereign State to exercise a prerogative which is given to it under its own constitution.

There are two questions with respect to these bridges which should be given consideration. They both involve need for legislation authorizing the construction of bridges. I presume the Congress of the United States gets its jurisdiction over the erection of bridges due to the fact that it retains control of the navigable streams. We seek in many bills to determine the manner in which bonds may be retired.

It seems to me a rather long way from determining whether a bridge will be an obstacle to navigation to determine how the bonds to construct that bridge will be paid. Likewise, it seems to me farfetched, and as I said presumptive on our part to seek to authorize a sovereign State to condemn property for the construction of approaches to a bridge under our general jurisdiction over streams.

I wonder if any member of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee will explain to the House the justification for the provision in this bill under which we seek to give authority to the State to condemn for the construction of these approaches? I am not going to object to the bill, but it seems to me if the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is going to continue to presume we have authority to authorize the States to condemn, there should be some basis for it and some discussion must have been had in the committee which would be interesting to the House.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massa-

Mr. HOLMES. I will try to explain. Usually these bridge bills are drafted on what is known as the regular bridge laws. In order to construct this bridge it is necessary for the State to get the consent of the Congress.

It will be noticed that section 1 provides-

That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the Postal Service, and provide for military and other purposes, the department of highways of the State of Ohio be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Ottawa River.

That is the language of the bill under consideration at the present time. It also goes further and gives them the authority or right to condemn. We appreciate that the State has this authority now.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why do we seek, then, to presume we have authority to give to it, if the State already has the

Mr. HOLMES. As the gentleman raises the point, it is a question whether or not it is necessary for the Congress to

Mr. WOLCOTT. Why do we presume to give them the authority, if it is not necessary? I can appreciate an occasion where a man wants to build an industrial plant along a navigable stream, or a man wants to build a home along a navigable stream, or a man wants to build a summer cottage on one of our inland lakes which is navigable. Does not the gentleman think it is rather presumptive on the part of the Congress of the United States to tell him the type of building he shall build along a navigable stream or on any of the hundreds of lakes or on any of the connecting waters? If the gentleman does think so, is it not just as presumptive to tell the State of Ohio or any other State what construction they may place upon the banks of any navigable stream on land over which the United States Government has no control?

Mr. HOLMES. I think the gentleman has brought up illustrations that are entirely foreign to the question of an approach to a bridge which will facilitate traffic and will be used for postal, military, and other services.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It surely cannot be for the reason that the approach is a part of the Federal highway system, because the Federal Highway Act expressly provides that the States shall acquire the right-of-way before they may participate under the Federal Highway Act.

Mr. HOLMES. This authorizes them by congressional act to condemn property in connection with approaches to the bridge.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is the point. By what authority do we seek to give the State of Ohio the authority to do something which under its own constitution it already has the right to do?

Mr. HOLMES. Under the general laws on which these bridge bills are drawn and recommended to the House.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I see the gentleman's point. I wish the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce would give some consideration to this broad question whether we have the constitutional right or any other right to regulate the manner in which land will be acquired for the approaches to these bridges, and also the other question as to what authority we have to tell a State how it shall retire an indebtedness attending the construction of a bridge.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Cali-

Mr. HINSHAW. It is my memory that there was a slight complication because of the fact that this bridge took a little nick out of the State of Michigan and another out of the State of Indiana. It is a peculiar location. I may be incorrect as to the exact facts.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Of course, the Federal Government would have no authority to give to the State of Ohio the right to condemn the property of another sovereign State, so we get right back where we started.

Mr. HOLMES. If the gentleman will yield, I should like to make the correction that this one is entirely within the

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WARREN). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the Department of Highways of the State of Ohio other purposes, the Department of Highways of the State of Ohio be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Ottawa River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the city of Toledo, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

There is hereby conferred upon the Department of Highways of the State of Ohio all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

MUSKINGUM RIVER CANAL

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 3375, to authorize M. H. Gildow to construct a free, movable, pontoon footbridge across Muskingum River Canal at or near Beverly, Ohio.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

EXPORTATION OF TOBACCO SEED

The Clerk called the bill H. R. 2378, to prohibit the exportation of tobacco seed and plants, except for experimental purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to have somebody explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, this bill prohibits the exportation of tobacco seed from a certain area in the South, the area known as the flue-cured tobacco area. It has become a business racket to take these seeds to all parts of the world, and plant them, and produce a substitute for our tobacco which is exported to these countries. These foreign growers have to send back every 2 years to get American seed. This is a measure to protect our export business. If the gentle-man from Connecticut will read the report filed with this bill, he will readily see the importance of this legislation.

LXXXIV-189

It is, in my opinion, one of the most important measures proposed at this term of Congress.

Mr. MILLER. This is for the benefit of the tobacco grower?

Mr. KERR. Yes. Tobacco growers of this country. There is legislation of this kind in other countries which prohibits the exportation of their tobacco seeds for commercial purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful to export any tobacco seed and/or live tobacco plants from the United States or any Territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof, to any foreign country, port, or place, unless such exportation and/or transportation is in puror place, unless such exportation and/or transportation is in pursuance of a written permit granted by the Secretary of Agriculture. Such permit shall be granted by the Secretary only upon application therefor and after proof satisfactory to him that such seed or plants are to be used for experimental purposes only.

Sec. 2. Any persons violating any of the provisions of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1940

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 4852, with Mr. Buck in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose there was pending an amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] on page 118, line 12.

Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire recognition? Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I do desire recognition, but I would like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 118, line 12, strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$500,000."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, in offering this amendment to cut out $3,000,000 for roads and trails in the national parks I do so for the reason that we have appropriated millions of dollars in the past 5 or 6 years for this particular purpose. The New Deal has spent millions under W. P. A. and P. W. A. for the same purpose. We have built more roads and more trails in the national parks than in any other 20 years of the history of this Government. We have increased those roads to the extent that the parks are well taken care of. Now to come here and ask you to appropriate $3,500,000 to continue this work is not justified. Only the Park Commission knows what the money is to be expended for. Members of the Park Commission before our committee refused to tell us what this money was to be expended for. I think we, as Members of Congress, have a right to know what it is to be expended for, and each and every Member should know where it is to be spent before the money is appropriated. When that question was brought up at the hearing they appeared before the committee and I asked for the information, they said they would submit it to us. I understand they gave the clerk of the committee a list of the projects on which this money would be expended. Not a Member of this House, when the bill came to the floor, knew what this money was being spent for until after the Clerk gave a list of the projects to us here in the House. They offered to give it to me, provided I would not say anything about it. I said, "If I have to have it under those conditions, I do not want to know what it is."

I think I am giving you the absolute truth—that there was not a member of the subcommittee who knew what the expenditure of these funds was for at the time we reported the bill out. You understand, a list of the items had been given to the subcommittee since we have been here. I object to the National Park Commission, and I object to any branch of the Federal Government trying to spend money when the Members of Congress do not know prior to the time the money is granted by the Appropriations Committee what it is to be spent for. The Members of Congress should know where this money is to be spent. They refused to give me that information in the hearings. You have given too much money to Government officials to spend without knowing what it was for. If you are going to permit a bureau of this Government to request money and then to allocate it according to their idea of what is wise and proper, you should vote down my amendment. If you want to show the National Park Service or any other branch of the Government that the Members of Congress should know what they are spending the money for, then you should vote for my amendment.

You should vote for my amendment for another reason. I think you should vote for the amendment for the reason we have spent more money in the national parks in the last 5 years than we have in any other 20 years. A greater amount of money was expended through Executive order than has been expended by direct appropriations of Congress. The Park Commission is now rendering adequate service to the people of this country from the standpoint of roads and trails. You must realize that the more we spend to build new roads the more we will have to spend to keep up those roads. I think we have gone a little too far and a little too fast not only in our Park Service but in other lines of improvement of conditions in this country.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. Yes. I yield for a question.

Mr. WARREN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that when we passed the Federal-aid road bill last year we very substantially and materially reduced the authorizations not only as to the amount of aid that went to the States, but all the way down the line on this bill.

Mr. RICH. We may have reduced that.

Mr. WARREN. We reduced this particular item.

Mr. RICH. But I say to the gentleman and to others on his side that they should not increase these appropriations without very substantial reason being shown why they should be increased.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will be adopted. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. SCRUGHAM. Mr. Chairman, my district has but little direct interest in this item of the bill. However, I cite this fact in justification of the proposed expenditure, during the past year 16,233,688 people visited the national parks. If we assume an average Federal gasoline tax paid by each of these people of only 20 cents, the amount would practically equal the total of this item. It must be remembered further in this connection that the Government received something like $1,180,745 from automobile tourists paid in as fees from automobiles entering the parks. Further we should bear in mind that this item affords a substantial amount of relief through employment. The money will chiefly be spent and the work done in Alaska, Arizona, California, Maine, Oregon, Tennessee, Utah, Virginia, Washington, Wyoming—those are the major projects—and in a number of minor projects of which I have two or three pages listed, but with which I will not burden the Record.

The amount carried for roads and trails in last year's bill was $5,991,120. This year the item is for $3,500,000, which constitutes a reduction of almost $2,500,000.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this amount is not excessive. It is appropriated in response to a demand from the people who patronize the parks, and in this connection remember that more than 16,000,000 visit our parks every year. I ask that the amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rich) there were—ayes 68, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in voting on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White] limiting the over-all cost of the United States housing projects—

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman is out of order in that he is not speaking to the amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman will have an opportunity later on to talk about this subject. We are very desirous of finishing the bill today.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we will let the gentleman proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, in voting on the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White], an amendment limiting the over-all cost of United States Housing Administration projects to $3,500, it is well for us to pause for a moment and realize what we are doing.

To those who are opposed to slum clearance and low-cost housing projects, who are opposed to a modern, progressive, humane, and practical consideration of the serious problems which generally exist throughout the United States, to those who close their eyes and ears to the demands and necessities for this great program which our country undertook years after other enlightened democracies did, what I or others may say is of little moment. To those of the opposite political party who feel that some political advantage might be obtained—although I cannot see it—what might be said against the White amendment might be of little moment.

Those, however, who are interested in this great program should realize what the White amendment does. For all practical purposes it so limits the operation of this great, humane program as to make it ineffective. At the present time there are about 140 projects under construction in at least 100 cities. This amendment, if enacted into law, would make it impossible to do slum clearance and low-cost construction work in most parts of the country.

The amendment limits the over-all cost of United States Housing Authority projects to $3,500 per dwelling unit.

The existing limitation is $1,000 per room and $4,000 per dwelling unit in cities under 500,000, and $1,250 per room and $5,000 per dwelling in cities over 500,000 population.

This limitation applies to dwelling facilities.

This limitation does not include cost of land, street or sidewalk construction, if any; it includes what a builder calls ordinary construction costs of a building. It does not include any furniture that is installed in an apartment.

The United States Housing Authority has kept within the limitation that now exists by law, but the present limitation is not an over-all limitation. The over-all cost of new housing, which includes land, nondwelling facilities, construction costs, and equipment, has been $4,507. The White amendment would allow only $3,500.

It must be borne in mind that this would also include the costs of slum clearance—demolition—which the present limitation does not include.

In the case of cities of less than 500,000 population, the White amendment is a reduction of much more than $500. In the case of cities of over 500,000 it is greater than $1,500.

The White amendment applies to all cities without regard to population, and the different problems that such a condition creates. This amendment will place this humane program in a strait jacket from which it cannot extricate itself. Not only will its adoption prevent the United States Housing Authority from completing the 140 projects under construction, but it will result in this program being ineffective in the future. The program will be paralyzed. As Mr. Straus told me on Saturday last:

In other words, this $3,500 limitation has the effect of placing a limitation upon the cost of slum clearance, land, nondwelling facilities, demolition, and new construction $500 lower in smaller places, and $1,500 lower in larger places, than the statutory limit placed in the act in 1937 upon the cost of dwelling facilities alone excluding land demolition, and nondwelling facilities. It therefore does not reduce the present statutory limits upon costs by only $500 and $1,500 respectively. In effect, as shown by table II, it reduces these limitations, as they affect over-all costs, by from $1,500 to $2,500. With this limitation no slum clearance projects at all could be undertaken, and new housing projects could be undertaken in only a few very small communities with unusually low levels of wages and prices. It is safe to say that under the proposed amendment no projects could be built in any city in the United States with the population of more than 25,000 people.

For these reasons the proposed amendment is equivalent to a suspension of the United States Housing Authority program.

When the amendment was voted upon in the Committee of the Whole, among those present at that time only one Republican voted against the amendment. Undoubtedly many voted for it under the impression that it reduced the present limitation by $500. Such an impression is incorrect. It reduces the present limitation directly and indirectly in cities of less than 500,000 in excess of $1,250, and in cities over 500,000 in excess of $2,200.

The service of this program is without regard to the political considerations or leanings of the people of the different cities. That is as it should be. Money has been allocated to cities whose people vote Republican as well as Democratic. Under existing law local housing authorities select the sites and operate and manage the projects. They are locally administered. This amendment in fact injures the cities by preventing the Federal Government in carrying out its loaning of the funds necessary and permissible under existing law. It will be the cities interested in such projects who will actually suffer. I hope this question, when we get into the House, will not be voted on from a partisan angle, although the fact that in the Committee of the Whole every Republican present but one voted for this amendment would justify the inference that at that time at least the policy of the Republican Party in the House is in opposition to the slum-clearance and low-cost housing program.

A vote for the White amendment is a vote against the slumclearance program and the great humane results that will flow from its continuance. A vote against the amendment is a vote for the continuance of this humane program.

I hope when we enter into the House that this destructive amendment of a great humane program will be defeated. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order for 5 minutes on the same subject.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not in this instance, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania just stated, we want to finish this bill today. We hope, therefore, there will be no further requests to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I repeat and emphasize here is one piece of legislation that will not stand the light of day. I repeat the United States Housing Act is one of the worst political rackets that ever was perpetrated upon the poor people anywhere in the world. Not only does it not benefit the poorest section of our population, but it foists upon them the most savage injustice.

Think of it-the very poorest people-W. P. A. workers, widows washing for a living, the aged poor, those with the most meager incomes, are driven by this communistic beast out on to the streets and then are compelled to pay taxes to maintain the rent of those people who are already able to pay their rent, and to pay high salaries to the politicians running the project.

Eighty-five percent of all taxes always, no matter upon whom levied, are paid by these groups—the poor people. Why? For the same reason that white sheep give more wool than black sheep-because there are more white sheep. Consequently, it is these groups who pay the bulk of the taxes that supply the capital for the projects and the annual Federal contributions used to liquidate said capital invested and the interest thereon.

Therefore, it is the grossest deception that these are low-rent houses. They are the highest rent houses in the United States and this highest rent is charged through taxation to the very poorest people in the land.

The United States Housing Authority, the local authorities, and the State housing authorities are deliberately making the people believe that the rental charges liquidate the capital invested and pays the interest. The rent does not go for those purposes at all. Actually, in the end, the rent charged for these houses pays no part of the capital invested or the interest. The rent charged actually is only about sufficient to maintain the upkeep of the project and to pay deserving politicians for running it.

The people in Ohio, and I suppose in the other States also, are being deceived into believing that there is a local housing authority that has control of the housing projects. The only thing any city has to do with one of these projects is that the mayor of the largest city in the housing district, the county commissioners, the probate judge, and the common pleas judge appoint the five members on the so-called Metropolitan Housing Authority. Reappointments are made only every 5 years. Just the moment these appointments are made, the Metropolitan Housing Authority is responsible to nobody in the world but the United States Housing Authority. The housing area has its own mayor, its own city solicitor, its own council over which the local people have no more control than they have over the operation of the United States Navy.

I have gone all through this and know exactly whereof I

The time has just about come when the poor people of this country need somebody to rescue them from this cold-blooded bureaucracy that is devouring them.

We have had just about enough of this hypocritical sobbing for the poor. I am sure just as quickly as the public learns the truth about this United States Housing Act, it will disappear from our statute books as quick as a snowball in Hades. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways: For continuing the construction and maintenance, under the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 8, 1938 (52 Stat. 635), of the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways, including not exceeding $3,100 for the purchase, maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-driven passenger-carrying vehicles, to be immediately available and remain available until expended, $4,000,000, of which amount not to exceed $50,000 shall be available for personal services in the District of Columbia: Provided, That $1,200,000 and any other sums received from other sources for said Natchez Trace Parkway shall be allotted and expended ratably between the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee according to mileage of said parkway in each respective State and said allotments shall be used for no other purpose: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior shall make a detailed statement of expenditures from this appropriation to the Senate and House Committees on Appropriations at the beginning of the next regular session of Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Ress of Kansas: On page 118, line 17, strike out the remainder of page 118 and all of page 119, down to and including line 11.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, this is a motion to strike from this bill an item of $4,000,000. We have heard a lot on the floor of this House about economy, cutting expenses, and balancing the Budget-but here is a bill that contains more things we do not really need at this time than almost any bill that has been presented. It provides for a grand total expenditure of $165,583,093.23. The committee in charge takes considerable credit for reducing the amount $6,000,000 under Budget estimates. But, do not forget this, we are spending $14,855,991.87 more under the present measure than we spent last year under a similar bill.

I realize a number of these items are necessary to carry on the affairs of our Government. But a good many of them are items of extravagance. If the membership of this House really want to economize, they can pare it down to the bare items of necessity and save the taxpayers a lot of money.

Here are some items of extravagance included in this bill: Last year we appropriated $783,000 for the operation and maintenance of public buildings outside the District of Columbia. This measure increases that amount by $205,000.

Here is an obscure little item providing three-quarters of a million dollars for the maintenance, repair, and operation of automobiles for Indian Field Service employees, and the transportation of Indian school pupils. The hearings do not disclose the number of children receiving such transportation, but there are only 200,000 Indians-men, women, and children-in the whole country.

But here is the particular section of the bill to which I want to direct your attention, and which I shall ask to have stricken from the measure. It provides for the expenditure of $4,000,000 for the Blue Ridge-Natchez Trace Parkways. The sponsors call it a parkway so it would seem to attach itself to our national-park system. It is conceded that it does not now connect national parks. It does not connect with any transcontinental highway. I agree with the Member who stated that it is only a subterfuge to get the Federal Government to construct and maintain this road.

If and when it is completed, it will be just a scenic highway which will have cost the Government something over $60,000,000 for the particular benefit of the "leisure class" and a few tourists. Let me remark right here that the sponsors of this project started it by getting the administration to dip into relief funds to the tune of a million and a half dollars.

Last year the committee approved an expenditure of $2,000,000 for these parkways, but the House saw fit to override the committee and raised it to $7,000,000. As the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma observed at that time, it was right there that the camel got his nose under the tent.

Ordinarily, Federal funds for highway construction are matched with funds from local communities or States. Here you are asking the Government to foot all the bills for the building and maintenance of a local highway, where there is neither necessity nor demand, except from the peo-ple in that particular vicinity. We are told that these States have given the right-of-way, which is nothing more or less than mountain scenery, as their contribution toward this

In passing, you will also observe a comparatively small item of $50,000 to be spent for "personal services of certain officials" in Washington, D. C. The only explanation given for this item is from Mr. Demaray, of the National Park Service, who said the $50,000 is for clerical personnel to keep proper records of this additional $4,000,000 we are spending.

The report states there are 22.5 miles of the Natchez-Trace Parkway and 130 miles of the Blue Ridge Parkway under construction. So, apparently it would cost $300 per mile just for the Washington bookkeepers on this project. Rather high-priced bookkeeping, it seems to me.

While there is such a real need for farm-to-market roads in this country, I just do not see how Members of this Congress can justify their vote for this extravagant expenditure of additional millions just to build a local, scenic highway which begins in the mountains and ends in the mountains.

Last year when the sponsors of this project secured an additional $5,000,000 they made it seem more altruistic by suggesting that the parkway be constructed in the memory of Andrew Jackson, who traversed part of it with his troops on his way to New Orleans. Poor Andrew Jackson would turn over in his grave if he knew that more than 120 years later, after we had already plunged our country into a forty-four billion dollar debt, as an excuse for going into debt a few million more we did it in his name.

This is a fair example of a "pork barrel" bill. It contains provisions for the expenditure of stupendous sums in the great Northwest. We are spending millions for the Grand Coulee Dam, ostensibly for navigation but which will actually bring a vast acreage into cultivation to compete with our present crop surpluses. The bill also provides for an outright expenditure of millions for the construction of expensive apartment houses in the slum sections of our cities.

When the roll is called on the parkway section of this measure, to which I am objecting at this time, the Members from the Pacific States will join with the Members from our great cities in supporting this particular provision, because they will expect and receive the same cooperation from the Members of the States who are receiving these special benefits.

The newspapers in my part of the country have lauded a great Senator from Mississippi, who belongs to the majority party, who said: "The time has come when we must practice economy." When this appropriation bill gets to the Senate, containing the provision for this extravagant expenditure within his own State, do you think he will practice economy at that time? I hardly think so.

I hope you will support my amendment to strike this unnecessary item of $4,000,000 for the Blue Ridge-Natchez Trace Parkways from this bill. I also hope we can eliminate other unnecessary items. I am serious when I tell you if you vote this appropriation bill without eliminating the unnecessary pork barrel provisions, you not only inflict an additional, unnecessary hardship upon the people of this country in a crucial time but you create a feeling throughout the country that Congress has no regard for the taxpayers, who just cannot pay the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees] by which he proposes to strike out the appropriation for the Blue Ridge Parkway and the Natchez Trace.

The gentleman from Kansas misunderstands the situation. In the first place, one of these parkways is 19 percent finished and the other one is 49 percent finished. He tells you they do not connect with any transcontinental highways. I am surprised that he should make such a mistake in his argument on the floor of this House.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I said they did not directly connect with transcontinental highways; that is, did not attach themselves to any transcontinental highways.

Mr. RANKIN. Both of these parkways cross several transcontinental highways. How much more completely could they connect with them than to cross them?

I want to speak particularly with reference to the Natchez Trace, which has been under consideration for some time. This appropriation has already been cut a million dollars or more and certainly should not be further reduced. A great deal of the right-of-way has been acquired and the construction of this great parkway has been started.

The gentleman from Kansas spoke rather sarcastically about this being the road over which Andrew Jackson marched on his way to New Orleans. That is true; it is not only the road over which Andrew Jackson marched but this parkway is dedicated to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, the best friends the white people of these United States ever had, at a time when friends were needed.

In the War of 1812, when we were in a desperate situation, when Winchester had been defeated in the North, when Washington had been invaded, when this Capitol and the White House had been burned by a ruthless enemy, when the Tories of New England had met in convention at Hartford and passed a resolution of secession from the Union, old Andrew Jackson marched down through that country and enlisted the aid of these Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, who not only threw their territory open to him but also joined his forces and marched with him to victory.

Chief Pushmataha, who sleeps out here in the Congressional Cemetery, raised a regiment of Choctaws and Chickasaws who went with Jackson and fought in the Battle of New Orleans where they won a victory that thrilled the world.

As Sergeant S. Prentiss once said, they taught the newly fledged American eagle to match his talons with the lion's strength and raised America for the first time to the dignity of a world power.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. For a question.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does the gentleman think that Andrew Jackson would approve the expenditure of $4,000,000 here and now for this highway, 120 years afterward, when the country is $44,000,000,000 in the red?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes; if he heard the debate against it, I think he would vote for it. [Laughter and applause.]

We might have been worse than "in the red" if the British had won that war. It is a shame that we have waited 120 years to honor those brave defenders of our country.

I want to pay my tribute, not only to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, but to Pushmataha, chief of the Choctaws, who was of Chickasaw descent. He was a great Indian, a great patriot, a great American.

Tecumseh, the great Shawnee chief, came down there and tried to line up the Choctaws and Chickasaws on the side of the British. They had a great meeting, and he laid before them the reason why they should join the English. If they had done so, Andrew Jackson never could have got to New Orleans, and the chances are that the western half of this continent would have been lost.

Pushmataha replied that what Tecumseh said might be true, but that had not been their experience, living in friendship with the people of the United States. He said the whites were their neighbors. They had taken care of their sick. They had taught their women to work and paid them for it and had built cotton gins and bought their material. "When we have been sick," he said, "they have come and administered to us."

He stated further that Tecumseh could do as he pleased, but that they proposed to cast their lot with the Americans. And he did; and in my opinion he contributed more to the success of the American armies than any other man, except Andrew Jackson himself.

This great national parkway is not only a monument to the valor of Andrew Jackson but it is also a monument to the patriotism and loyalty of those Indians whom the United States later rewarded by taking their land away from them and driving them beyond the Mississippi River.

I can hear the old Indian's piteous lament, expressing the fate of the Choctaws and Chickasaws when he said:

I will go to my tent and lie down in despair,
I will paint me with black and will sever my hair,
I will sit on the shore where the hurricane blows
And reveal to the God of the Tempest my woes.
I will weep for a season on bitterness fed,

For my kindred are gone to the hills of the dead. They died not of hunger nor ling'ring decay, But the steel of the white man has swept them away!

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. What does the gentleman think Thomas Jefferson would say about this great orgy of spending?

Mr. RANKIN. If he could hear the debate on this item he would certainly vote for it. [Applause.]

It may be of interest to the Members of the House to know that the debate which took place between Tecumseh and Pushmataha was one of the ablest contests of its kind ever staged on this continent.

Tecumseh was a brave and an able man. He thoroughly believed that the white man would destroy the Indians unless they were successfully resisted. At this meeting he related how the white man had beguiled the Indians along the Atlantic coast to part with their lands for a few trifling beads and a little firewater, leaving them beggars, vagabonds, peons, and strangers in their own land, to be scorned and despised by their paleface neighbors. He told how the Shawnees and other northern tribes were being stripped of their patrimony. He laid down the principle that the Great Spirit had given the Western Hemisphere to all red people in common and that no particular tribe had anything more than the right of possession to any lands and, therefore, asserted any relinquishment of title by one tribe to be null and void, because many of the owners had not joined in the transfer.

These wrongs he declared had been made possible by the ingenuity of the whites in attacking only one tribe at a time, but if all Indians would join and combine their forces in one attack at one time, the white man could be driven back over the mountains whence he came; that the golden opportunity was now at hand to join hands with the British and forever scourge from their revered hunting grounds the hated paleface. He closed his eloquent address with a stirring appeal to the patriotism of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, asking if they would await complete subjugation or would they now join hands and fight beside the Shawnees and other tribes rather than submit.

Evidently Tecumseh's purpose had been fully accomplished. His magnetic words seemed to arouse every vindictive sentiment within the souls of the Choctaw and Chickasaw warriors; their savage enthusiam had been stirred to white heat when Pushmataha calmly strode before the council fire and began his reply. What a pity that no accurate account of this debate between these two giant primitive orators was at that time preserved. Lincecum, Pickett, Randall, and other historians have left us brief excerpts; Cushman undertakes to give Pushmataha's speech in full; but his recital does not even do faint justice to the original and in no measure conforms to the Choctaw's account of it. For many years it was handed down from generation to generation by tradition to the Choctaws and Chickasaws, but it can be easily understood how that method might fail to preserve all the virile force and eloquence of this wonderful address. I will undertake to give it to you in part as nearly as possible, as related by the Honorable Charlie Carter, a former Member of this House, who was a descendent of a Chickasaw chief and who got it first hand from old Indians of the Chickasaw tushkahoma ho chukma hashche yumma. Anumpa Omiske, tushkal tilofasih ish huko.

PUSHMATAHA'S REPLY TO TECUMSEH

tilofasih ish huko.

(Attention, my good red warriors. Hear ye my brief remarks.)

The great Shawnee orator has portrayed in vivid picture the wrongs inflicted on his and other tribes by the ravages of the paleface. The candor and fervor of his eloquent appeal breathe the conviction of truth and sincerity, and, as kindred tribes, naturally we sympathize with the misfortunes of his people. I do not come before you in any disputation either for or against these charges. It is not my purpose to contradict any of these allegations against the white man, but neither am I here to indulge in any indiscreet denunciation of him which might bring down upon my people unnecessary difficulty and embarrassment.

The distinguished Shawnee sums up his eloquent appeal to us with this direct question:

with this direct question:

"Will you sit idly by, supinely awaiting complete and abject submission, or will you die fighting beside your brethren, the Shawnees, rather than submit to such ignominy?"

These are plain words, and it is well they have been spoken, for they bring the issue squarely before us. Mistake not, this language means var. And war with whom, pray? War with some band of marauders who have committed these depredations against band of marauders who have committed these depredations against the Shawnees? War with some alien host, seeking the destruction of the Choctaws and Chickasaws? Nay, my fellow tribesmen. None of these are the enemy we will be called on to meet. If we take up arms against the Americans, we must of necessity meet in deadly combat our daily neighbors and associates in this part in deadly combat our daily neighbors and associates in this part of the country near our homes.

If Tecumseh's words be true, and we doubt them not, then the Shawnees' experience with the whites has not been the same as that of the Choctaws. These white Americans buy our skins, our corn, our cotton, our surplus game, our baskets, and other wares, and they give us in fair exchange their cloth, their guns, their tools, implements, and other things which the Choctaws need but do not make. It is true we have befriended them, but who will deny that these acts of friendship have been abundantly recipbut do not make. It is true we have befriended them, but who will deny that these acts of friendship have been abundantly reciprocated? They have given us cotton gins, which simplify the spinning and sale of our cotton; they have encouraged and helped us in the production of our crops; they have taken many of our wives into their homes to teach them useful things, and pay them for their work while learning; they are teaching our children to read and write from their books. You all remember well the dreadful epidemic visited upon us last winter. During its darkest hours these neighbors whom we are now urged to attack responded generously to our needs. They doctored our sick; they clothed our nours these neignbors whom we are now urged to attack responded generously to our needs. They doctored our sick; they clothed our suffering; they fed our hungry; and where is the Choctaw or Chickasaw delegation who has ever gone to St. Stephens with a worthy cause and been sent away empty handed? So in marked contrast with the experience of the Shawnees, it will be seen that the whites and Indians in this section are living on friendly and mutually beneficial terms.

Forget not, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, that we are bound in peace to the Great White Father at Washington by a sarred treaty mutually beneficial terms.

Forget not, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, that we are bound in peace to the Great White Father at Washington by a sacred treaty and the Great Spirit will punish those who break their word. The Great White Father has never violated that treaty and the Choctaws have never yet been driven to the necessity of taking up the tomahawk against him or his children. Therefore the question before us tonight is not the avenging of any wrongs perpetrated against us by the whites, for the Choctaws and Chickasaws have no such cause, either real or imaginary, but rather it is a question of carrying on that record of fidelity and justice for which our forefathers ever proudly stood, and doing that which is best calculated to promote the welfare of our own people. Yea, my fellow tribesmen, we are a just people. We do not take up the warpath without a just cause and honest purpose. Have we that just cause against our white neighbors, who have taken nothing from us except by fair bargain and exchange? Is this a just recompense for their assistance to us in our agricultural and other pursuits? Is this to be their gracious reward for teaching our children from their books? Shall this be considered the Choctaws' compensation for feeding our hungry, clothing our needy, and administering to our sick? Have we, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, descended to the low estate of ruthlessly breaking the faith of a sacred treaty? Shall our forefathers look back from the happy hunting grounds only to see their unbroken record for justice, gratitude, and fidelity thus rudely repudiated and abruptly abandoned by an unworthy offspring?

We Choctaws and Chickasaws are a peaceful people, making

We Choctaws and Chickasaws are a peaceful people, making our subsistence by honest toil; but mistake not, my Shawnee brethren, we are not afraid of war. Neither are we strangers to war, as those who have undertaken to encreach upon our rights our subsistence by honest toil; but mistake not, my Shawnee brethren, we are not afraid of war. Neither are we strangers to war, as those who have undertaken to encroach upon our rights in the past may abundantly testify. We are thoroughly familiar with war in all its details, and we know full well all its horrible consequences. It is unnecessary for me to remind you, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, veteran braves of many fierce conflicts in the past, that war is an awful thing. If we go into this war against the Americans, we must be prepared to accept its inevitable results. Not only will it foretoken deadly conflict with neighbors and death to warriors, but it will mean suffering for our women, hunger and starvation for our children, grief for our loved ones, and devastation of our beloved homes. Notwithstanding these difficulties, if the cause be just we should not hesitate to defend our rights to the last man, but before that fatal step is irrevocably taken, it is well that we fully understand and seriously consider the full portent and consequences of the act.

Hear me, O Choctaws and Chickasaws, for I speak truly for your welfare. It is not the province of your chiefs to settle these important questions. As a people it is your prerogative to have either peace or war, and as one of your chiefs it is mine simply to counsel and advise. Therefore, let me admonish you that this critical period is no time to cast aside your wits and let blind impulse sway; be not driven like dumb brutes by the frenzied harangue of this wonderful Shawnee orator; let your good judgment rule, and ponder seriously before breaking bonds that have served you well and ere you change conditions which have brought peace and happiness to your wives, your sisters, and your chifdren. I would not undertake to dictate the course of one single Choctaw warrior. Permit me to speak for the moment, not as your chief but as a Choctaw warrior weighing this question beside you. As such I shall exercise my calm, deliberate judgment in behalf of those mos tomahawks on this side of the council fire with me.

Mr. Carter tells us that at this point the air resounded with the clash of tomahawks cast on the side of Pushmataha; only a few warriors seemed still undecided.

Tecumseh, seeing the purpose of his mission thwarted, and thinking that Pushmataha could not understand his language, spoke to his warriors in his native tongue, saying:

Pushmataha is a coward and the Chickasaw and Choctaw braves

But Pushmataha had traveled a great deal and knew a smattering of many Indian languages. He understood Tecumseh and realized the force of his insult. He turned to him and said:

Halt, Tecumseh! Listen to me. You have come here, as you have often gone elsewhere, with a purpose to involve peaceful people in unnecessary trouble with their neighbors. Our people have had no undue friction with the whites. Why? Because we have had no leaders stirring up strife to serve their selfish, personal amount of the company had no leaders stirring up strife to serve their selfish, personal ambitions. You heard me say that our people are a peaceful people. They make their way, not by ravages upon their neighbors but by honest toil. In that regard they have nothing in common with you. I know your history well. You are a disturber. You have ever been a troublemaker. When you have found yourself unable to pick a quarrel with the white man, you have stirred up strife between different tribes of your own race. Not only that, you are a monarch and unyielding tyrant within your own domain; every Shawnee man, woman, and child must bow in humble submission to your imperious will.

The Choctawa and Chickasaws have no monarchs. Their chief-to your imperious will.

The Choctaws and Chickasaws have no monarchs. Their chieftains do not undertake the mastery of their people, but rather are they the people's servants, elected to serve the will of the majority. The majority has spoken on this question, and it has spoken against your contention. Their decision has therefore become the law of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, and Pushmataha will see that the will of the majority, so recently expressed, is rigidly carried out to the letter. If, after this decision, any Choctaw should be so foolish as to follow your imprudent advice and enlist to fight against the Americans, thereby abandoning his own people and turning against the decision of his own council, Pushmataha will see that proper punishment is meted out to him, which is death. You have made your choice; you have elected to fight with the British. The Americans have been our friends, and we shall stand by them. We will furnish you safe conduct to the boundaries of this Nation as properly befits the dignity of your office. Farewell, Tecumseh. You will see Pushmataha no more until we meet on the fateful warpath.

Thus ended the conference; thus parted two of the greatest and bravest Indians their race has ever produced.

It is most interesting to read their words in the light of subsequent events.

As I said. Pushmataha joined the Americans and went with General Jackson to New Orleans where he fought for the United States. Tecumseh went his way and died fighting with the British.

In after years, when he thought his people were being mistreated. Pushmataha came to Washington to protest to the President. While here he took sick and died. Before his death he made the request that when he was dead they would "fire big guns" over him-which they did.

He was buried with full military honors under a large purple beech tree in the old Congressional Cemetery at the end of East Capitol Street where he fittingly sleeps among the Nation's great of his day and generation.

There is nothing we can do for him and his brave followers now, but we can honor their memory, along with that of Andrew Jackson, by the construction of this great national parkway, and by so doing manifest our gratitude for their patriotic services in helping to defend the integrity, as well as perpetuate the honor and glory, of these United States.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. I am familiar with the origin of the Natchez Trace, and I may say Andrew Jackson's name was not connected with it in any shape or form.

Mr. RANKIN. The gentleman has heard of the Battle of New Orleans, has he not?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The fact is that the Natchez Trace runs through the district of the gentleman from Mississippi, that is all.

Mr. RANKIN. Of course it does. Does the gentleman expect me to move away just for that reason?

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi always makes a very eloquent plea when he wants us to spend money, but he does not always confine himself to the facts or the issues. The other day, when we were talking about an amendment and some on the left were opposing an appropriation, the gentleman made this remark-Record, page

I will tell you what is behind all this-you need not camouflage Trust, that paid a lot of campaign expenses last year. That is what is behind it.

The gentleman was taunting us with the charge that the Power Trust, which seems to be his private bogeyman, contributed toward the campaign expenses of Republicans who were elected last year, and who now oppose the grant of additional fabulous sums to the T. V. A., the gentleman's pet baby, into which so many dollars contributed by northern taxpayers have gone-dollars spent in the gentleman's country. Oh, it is a wonderful thing to be charitable with other people's money, to be generous—yes, lavish—with it when it does not cost you anything.

I now ask the gentleman to place in the RECORD some time within the next week some evidence that the Power Trust paid any expenses last year or the year before or the year before that toward the election of any Republican Congressman. This is a fair request, because the gentleman meant the House and the galleries to understand that those on the left-the Republicans-had been elected with the aid of money contributed by the Power Trust. I challenge that statement, and I repeat that the gentleman place in the RECORD proof of his charge made on the floor of this House.

So today on this amendment, instead of talking about the question at issue, the gentleman delivered an oration about the Indians. He eulogized the Indians and Andrew Jackson. What relevancy has the valor of the Indians, long dead and gone, or the virtues of Andrew Jackson, to the discussion of the question now before us? What has that to do with whether or not we should now make this appropriation or vote for or against the amendment? The fact of the matter, if what has been said on the floor of the House and by the administration is true and in accord with the facts, is that we are in a desperate financial and economic situation. The people need shelter, they need clothing, and they need food; yet when we on our side try to economize so some of the money we have or the money we may be able to borrow can be devoted to the purchase of food, clothing, shelter, you come along with appropriations like these. When our people ask for bread and meat and potatoes you want to give them ice cream and cake and hors d'oeuvres, or even less substantial things.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I decline to yield,

We have only so much money. There is not enough to go around to pay for all the things we want. Why should we not spend what we have for the necessities of life, the things we must have, and let these other things, no matter how good they may be, which yet are not necessaries, which are not essential to our welfare, go until we are back once more on a sound financial basis? When people need homes, when they need money for the very existence of life, as we have been told so frequently they do need money, why spend millions to build superhighways through parks? If the housewife needs a new washing machine, why buy her flowers? Undoubtedly she would appreciate the flowers, but she needs the washing machine.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi. Mr. RANKIN. I want to put the gentleman on a real trail. While the gentleman is waiting for me to dig up the Republican campaign expenses I wish he would look into the question of why the Republican Legislature of Michigan outlawed rural electrification the other day, or virtually did so?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Why they did?

Mr. RANKIN. Yes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I can only attend to my own duties down here. As the gentleman knows, we had a Democratic Governor out there who left us some million dollars in debt and then came down here to run the Department of Justice.

Mr. RANKIN. Why did that Republican administration shut the door of hope in the faces of the farmers of Michigan and destroy what we had done to secure rural electrification for them? That is a fair sample of what the Republican Party stands for.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Our legislature is opening wide the door which will lead our people back to a sound business administration. Once more we are getting back on the road toward recovery. Our farmers are far more interested in legislation which will enable them to pay their taxes, meet their debts, retain their homes, avoid mortgage foreclosures, than they are in electric lights.

If Democratic Governor Frank Murphy had been reelected and continued on the course which he was following, if the gentleman from Mississippi had his way and the Federal Government appropriated sufficient funds, it may be possible that we would have had electric lines throughout rural Michigan so that all farmers would have been able to obtain electricity had they been able to pay for it.

But it is more than probable, it is far more likely that if Murphy, with his little New Deal, had continued in control in Michigan, and if the Federal Government, this New Deal administration here in Washington, continued to follow the course which it had outlined, the farmers would have had no homes, no barns, no farms on which the electricity generated under the gentleman's plan might be used. An electric light, power for farm machinery, would be small consolation if there was no home left for the farmer in which to put his light bulbs, no barn in which to house the machinery which might be operated by electricity.

It is the solid things of life, the essential things of life, that the people of Michigan place first. It is the homes of the Michigan farmers, their ability to maintain themselves and to meet their taxes, that are of the first importance to us

For our own selves we are glad that the President took Murphy out of Michigan. We feel sorry that he has inflicted him upon the Nation as a whole. Now that he and his methods have been kicked out of the State, Michigan is on the road back to prosperity; and if, at the coming election in Michigan, the people get out and show their faith in the Republican Party by voting a Republican ticket next April, we will, by the time the next general election rolls around, have Michigan well on the road toward a balanced budget, toward that prosperity which it has always enjoyed under Republican Governors.

Then, under sound business management and methods, farmers will enjoy not only the necessities of life, those things which enable them to live, but, because of the savings made in the State government by a Republican administration, they will have money left to purchase recreation, to buy electricity for their homes and their farm operations. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope very much the Blue Ridge Parkway, in which I am so vitally interested, will not get mixed up in this political discussion. Of course, we are greatly and vitally interested in the completion of this parkway, which, in my opinion, will be the greatest scenic highway in the world. I have not time now to undertake to tell the House the history of this movement, but I can say to my Republican friends that under Secretary Works, a great Secretary of the Interior, we established two national parks east of the Rocky Mountains, one known as the Great Smoky Mountains National Park and the other the Shenandcah Park. The States of North Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia purchased the lands for the parks and turned them over to the United States. The States not being able to furnish all the funds, the John D. Rockefeller Foundation, realizing the splendid value of these parks, contributed another $5,000,000, with which we completed the purchases.

This parkway has been established to join these two great national parks. It is a going concern. The gentleman from Michigan talks about food and clothing. Mr. Chairman, the work that is today being given to the people in these back mountain stretches who have been isolated for so many years is being given to them through employment on this great scenic highway, the appropriation for which it is now sought to strike entirely from this bill.

We have already spent more than $8,000,000 on the Blue Ridge Parkway and we have allocated several million dollars more which is being spent under contracts already made. More than 735,000 people visited the Great Smoky National Park alone last year. This park offers advantages of health and recreation and I want to plead with my friends here today to yote down the proposed amendment.

This is not a local matter and it is not for any individual Congressman. It runs through my district and through the district of Mr. Doughton and the district of Major Bulwin-kle, as well as through some Virginia districts. However, it is no more local than were the Grand Canyon of the Colorado or the Great Yosemite National Park. It will belong to the people and will give those who live in the congested areas of the East opportunities for healthful recreation and outdoor life.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEAVER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think in view of the fact you overrode the committee to the tune of $5,000,000 at the time this question came up, you can well afford, for the benefit of the country at large, to pass up this appropriation of $4,000,000 at this time?

Mr. WEAVER. I may say to my friend, we did not do

Mr. REES of Kansas. I am thinking about the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. WEAVER. We asked the House for the appropriation. It was presented on its merits by Mr. Doughton, myself, and the entire North Carolina delegation, and also the Virginia delegation, and the House gave us the money which has been allocated and is now being spent, and unless we now have the rest of the money the work will simply be slowed up.

Let me say to my friend that if he will just come down there once and see what we are doing, and if my friend from Pennsylvania, Mr. Rich, will also come down there sometime and see what we have to offer the American people, I am sure they will never offer another amendment to destroy this great and valuable enterprise.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield a little further?

Mr. WEAVER. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. With respect to this great and fine monument the gentleman has just described, does the gentleman think the ordinary or average taxpayer, the fellow way back home, who is going to have to foot the bill, can begin to appreciate it and how can he expect to get any benefit from this fine monument the gentleman has described, and I appreciate the fact it is a very fine monument.

Mr. WEAVER. As someone has said, the tax that will just come in from oil and gas consumed in going over that road will help to pay its cost.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Is that the excuse the gentleman is offering—the oil and gas money will pay this bill?

Mr. WEAVER. No; I am offering it to the people because it is a great, outstanding enterprise for the American people, and for its value to the generations that shall come after us. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment which strikes out the entire paragraph relative to the roads connecting these parkways is to prevent them from getting any appropriation whatever in this appropriation bill. Last year about $7,000,000 was appropriated for the purpose of carrying on this construction. This year the committee cut it down to $4,000,000.

Now, this project is an established project. It is under way, and it is going to be completed. It is simply a question of how fast we want to complete it, and while I am interested in cutting down expenditures wherever possible, I believe that in reducing the amount $3,000,000 under what they received last year, we have made a very substantial cut.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does not the gentleman from California, who has these great parks in his own district, really believe though that in view of the fact we handed this crowd $5,000,000 extra money the last time, he could well help the country a little by withholding $4,000,000 now?

Mr. CARTER. I believe they should be given a reasonable amount to continue this work.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. In answer to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees] that the House increased this appropriation last year $5,000,000, it is only fair to advise the gentleman and also the Members of this body that the appropriation was not increased one dime over the Budget estimate.

What happened was that a supplemental estimate for an additional amount was sent up from the Budget Bureau last year and this additional sum, amounting to $2,000,000, was included in the second deficiency bill in accordance with the supplemental Budget estimate. The mere fact that in the beginning I opposed this legislation certainly is not applicable now. This great project is now not only started, but well on its way to completion. Congress has spoken and we, of course, cannot stop this project now.

Mr. REES of Kansas. But the gentleman well remembers that on the floor of the House he did tell this House—

Mr. CARTER. I decline to yield further at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I think we must go on with this construction work, and I believe in view of all the facts and circumstances cutting the amount down to $4,000,000 is as far as we should go this year. This is a project that is under construction and it would be folly to abandon it. This amendment striking out the paragraph should be defeated.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman would suspend for a moment, so that I may submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. RICH. I yield, if it is not to be taken out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be taken out of the gentleman's

Mr. RICH. Then I cannot yield.

Mr. Chairman, when we had a Budget estimate increased last year, if you knew the pressure that was put upon the Budget officer by the men who are interested in this project, including Senators and Members of the House, you could appreciate why the Budget Bureau could not resist such pressure. The Budget officer had to yield or get out.

Greater pressure has been brought on this project, the building of these two highways, 800 feet wide, than any projects that I know of. Think of 800-foot highways traversing through this valley. The fact is that today they have money for these projects for many months to come. If we want to economize in governmental expenditures, we should certainly do it at this point, but I forecast one thing: While the committee cuts this down $1,000,000, I tell the Members of the House now that when it goes over to the Senate they will see the $1,000,000 restored, and there will be no cut in this bill.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman will remember that when this measure was under consideration before the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson] referred to the sponsors of this amendment as the camel getting its head under the tent; and does the gentleman remember when the matter came up for consideration, that at that time he said he was not so much in sympathy with this appropriation of $5,000,000?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas knows the facts with reference to the Blue Ridge and the Natchez Trace Parkway, and it has been disclosed here that Andrew Jackson did not know anything about such a parkway as we are to have, and I am wondering who is getting mixed up in his history, whether it is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Rankin], who is interested in having this parkway constructed through his State.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I love the gentleman from Mississippi. The only trouble with him is that he cannot keep the Government out of business. He wants the Government in business all of the time and in every way.

Mr. RANKIN. And let me say this to the gentleman from Pennsylvania: He said just now that when the bill got over to the Senate they would put this cut back. If you strike this out, they certainly will, and they will put the whole thing back.

Mr. RICH. They will put back the amount stricken out; and not only that, but they will put back every item that was stricken out by this Committee; and when we come to conference, see if that does not happen. They are not going to be for economy and this House is not going to be for economy; not until the people of this country get a new Congress that will vote for economy in government will we get it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Oh, certainly, the senior Senator from Mississippi will not be for putting this cut back, surely.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. Yes; to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, Andrew Jackson's name has been brought into this discussion. I happen to be reading his life at the present time, and I have discovered that he said that he was one man who did not believe a national debt is a national blessing.

Mr. RICH. That ought to be news to some Members on the Democratic side, and I am glad the gentleman stated that to them, because they have been extolling Andrew Jackson of late, and they should do as he stated.

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. Oh, just a moment, until I give them a little of this history. They loved Thomas Jefferson for a time, but they went away from him because he said so much about economy in government. They could not follow Jefferson any longer, so that they have taken up Andrew Jackson, and now I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Dondero] to once more repeat that statement so that Members on the Democratic side of the House will know that he was for economy.

Mr. DONDERO. He said that he was one man that did not believe that a national debt is a national blessing.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. RICH. I am glad now that the gentleman from Mississippi should extol the things that Andrew Jackson stood for. Now let the gentleman from Mississippi follow Andrew Jackson in all things.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for me to make a unanimous-consent request? Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object to that.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I want 1 minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 16 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma that all debate upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 16 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Mr. Chairman, I would not undertake to rise at this moment except for the fact that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] was in error in one of his statements. I think that he made the error unintentionally. but he ought not to say that the roadway is built 800 feet wide, for it is not.

Mr. RICH. I said parkway.

Mr. BULWINKLE. Oh, the gentleman said roadway; that it was 800 feet wide.

Mr. RICH. I meant the parkway.

Mr. BULWINKLE. And the reason that I am addressing the House is that what the gentleman said was a mistake. This parkway is 49 percent completed. I know the gentleman from Pennsylvania does not agree with this amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

He knows, as well as the rest of us, the history of this project. Dr. Temple, who was formerly a Member of this House from Pennsylvania, who was a member of this committee, which established the Shenandoah and the Smoky Mountains Parks, when in North Carolina, told me that what he hoped to see eventually was a great scenic highway connecting these parks. Forty-nine percent completed, and then throw that away? Surely the gentleman does not mean that. Surely the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] does not mean to do that.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BULWINKLE. Not right now.

I have never, in all my experience in the House, at any time voted for or made a speech in favor of increasing an appropriation over the Budget estimate, both under Republican and Democratic administrations. In the 18 years I have been a Member of this House, not once have I appeared before the Committee on Appropriations asking for an appropriation. But I say to you, my fellow Members, that this is a just and fair appropriation, the first great project in two great States. All we ask of you is to go down there and see this parkway that you have built for the people of the United States, and I say you will be proud of the work that has been done.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is not this parkway 800 feet wide?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The right-of-way, only in places.

Mr. RICH. And is this not beautified with shrubbery?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Now, just a minute. Let me answer one question at a time. The right-of-way is 800 feet wide in some places. In some others it is not. As to the beautification; yes. How? By native shrubs and by native trees being planted along there. If you could, if you would, sometime go there and look this roadway over, you will be

Mr. RICH. I will say to the gentleman that if you build a parkway 800 feet wide and beautify it, it ought to be a finelooking roadway.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that where the parkway is 800 feet wide that is furnished by local interests?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And the parkway does not cost the Government anything?

Mr. BULWINKLE. The State furnishes it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. And is it not true that the actual width of the highway connecting these parks is the same as the width of the actual roads at the entrance of the parks west of the Mississippi River?

Mr. BULWINKLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. RICH. Is it not a fact that we have two highways now down through Virginia not far distant from this parkway, which will make three highways between Shenandoah Park and the Smoky Mountain National Park?

Mr. BULWINKLE. There is no road in the world that is practically on the top of the mountains.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BULWINKLE. I yield.

Mr. KELLER. Is it not true that if you go down that parkway you will see more Pernsylvania licenses than you do Virginia licenses? [Laughter.]

Mr. BULWINKLE. From Pennsylvania, as well as every State in the Union.

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. Lord] for 3 minutes.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of agitation over this highway and considerable praise for the Choctaw Indians. I would like to get back to the highway. There has been some question over the width of it. The right-of-way of the parkway is to be 800 feet wide, except where it crosses Government land, and there they cut it down to 200 feet. When completed I suppose this will reach from Washington to the Gulf of Mexico. It was first to connect the parks. The parks were some four or five hundred miles apart. We have a road here much more than 1,000 miles in length. It is to be constructed entirely at the cost of the Federal Government. It is to be maintained by the Federal Government. For whom? For those who want to tour through that section. I do not blame these gentle-men who want this highway, but it is a big bill to pay in times when we do not have the money. I had the pleasure of driving over a portion of that road this summer, down through the Blue Ridge Mountains, where our friend has told us about these wonderful Choctaw Indians, but in place of living there, they have driven every living person, be they whites or Choctaw, out of the mountains. They drove them down into the valleys and they will not even let them live up there as they have in the past. I have talked with some of these people, and they are mourning still because they cannot stay in the mountains where they have lived during all their lives.

In the Seventy-fourth Congress we appropriated $25,000,-000 to build farm-to-market roads for our farm population. What happened in our last Congress? That was cut down to $15,000,000 by the Chief Executive; yet we increase the amount of money to build these scenic highways that are of little, if any, value to the farmers of this Nation. I want to build highways, but let us build them where they will do some good. Let us build them where they will help our farmers. I was talking with a farmer from the West recently, and he said that what we need to help housing is roads to our back farms. We have plenty of farm homes where the farmers have left because in the muddy season they cannot get out to market. We should be building highways to help them to stay on the farms instead of building scenic highways all down through this mountain region.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I have a prejudice for all the projects that have been started by relief money. Both the Natchez-Trace and the Skyline Drive got their first support of the President from relief money. Neither was started by appropriation by Congress.

There are two other things I want to recall that have not been mentioned about these two parkways today: First, it is the first 100-percent Federal-aid road constructed in the United States. It is a violation of the old agreement on Federal-aid highways built in the States, that they should be built on a 50-50 basis. This is the first violation of that policy; this is the first 100 percent federally constructed highway in the United States. I have nothing against the Smoky Mountain Park. I have been there. I have been in the Shenandoah Park, too. If you want a scenic drive you will go over the Skyline Drive, but you will not take that route to go to the Smoky Mountains 500 miles away.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. LAMBERTSON. No; I have not time or I would yield. The other thing that is pernicious about these authorizations that came about in a left-handed way is that they can build approaches to these parkways indefinite in length and number to connect other highways, a thing that is perfectly ridiculous. Think of it, it is a scheme whereby they can build highways to connect other highways with the Skyline Drive. That is all contained in this plan; and there is no limit on the length these approaches may be.

As I said a while ago, it is the first violation of the 50-50 policy of Federal-aid highways.

Mr. Chairman, this scenic highway is not a road that anybody will take when driving between the two parks.

This sets a precedent. It opens up the proposition of building parkways clear across the United States between national parks. It gives them the same authority, practically.

I know this item is going to pass because there are not sufficient Members here who will vote against it. This highway proposition had its first victory on this floor a couple of years ago when the Central Valley, Calif., project was under consideration, a project where the Government is going to spend hundreds of millions of dollars to finish in California the tunnel across the Divide in Colorado, the one involving the Gila project in Arizona, another one for the St. Louis Jefferson Memorial, and the Coulee Dam. These, coupled with the Skyline Drive and the Natchez-Trace, constitute one grand and dignified pork barrel, and there are not enough Members here who have sufficient fighting interest in economy for saving the taxpayers' dollars to beat this gigantic pork barrel. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska IMr.

STEFAN] is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the most of this item has been covered, and I do not like to take much of th; time of the Committee except to say that the people in my State, especially in my district, are for economy in road building and are very much interested in farm-to-market roads. I feel in this item we are breaking a precedent. I feel we should proceed with caution and that roads built by Federal aid should be built in accordance with the regular established plan and in an orderly way. I feel that people of other States should not be discriminated against, as they are in this instance, because here is an 800-foot parkway hundreds of miles long, being constructed by the Federal Government entirely out of Federal funds, with no participation by the States whatever; a highway to be maintained forever at the expense of the Federal Government by taxpayers of my State and other States. So far as my people are concerned, they are opposed to this method and manner of building roads because it breaks the orderly procedure of building Federal-aid highways. We in Nebraska must match road funds dollar for dollar. Why should these few States get a preference?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does the gentleman think this is the proper way for Government expenditures to be made, in that the money is not spent in a manner which increases production; namely, the opening of farm-to-market roads over which the farmer could get more goods to market and get back to his farm?

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. The farmers are interested in farm-to-market roads. We need these farm roads. It is my feeling that when highways are built they should be built in an orderly and regular manner. that when Federal-aid highways are built they should be built after the program which Congress has laid down. my State, Nebraska, is required to match dollar for dollar the money spent by the Federal Government in the construction of highways, I feel that the precedent should not be broken in this instance, and the people in Nebraska should not be discriminated against in favor of one or two States in the South

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEFAN. I yield. Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from Nebraska is well informed and takes a great deal of interest in the farmers and their problems. I know he will put in the RECORD the number of thousands of miles of farm-to-market roads that have been built under this administration. As a matter of fact, it runs into the thousands of miles, as the gentleman knows. He has the facts. Will he not put in the RECORD the number of thousands of miles of farm-to-market roads that have been built for the benefit of the farmers throughout the entire United States?

Mr. STEFAN. I may say to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, for whom I have the very greatest respect, that we in Nebraska are thankful for the few miles of farm-tomarket roads built in our State. The figures have been in the RECORD time and again and are available to the gentleman. But we have no such gigantic projects paid fully by the Government.

Mr. SABATH. I will supply the figures myself, then.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. STEFAN. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true that at Federal expense the entrances to the parks west of the Mississippi River have been constructed, altogether to the extent of several hundreds of miles, and that the construction of these entrances began before the starting of the Shenandoah Park or the Great Smoky Park?

Mr. STEFAN. But that is very small in extent compared to what is being spent here in the Southeast. Those are actual connections to national parks. This item is a gigantic highway in itself.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I beg the gentleman's pardon. Is it not true that altogether about 900 miles of entrance roads have been constructed into those parks?

Mr. STEFAN. I wish the gentleman would let me proceed. After all, this is my time.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I am perfectly willing that the gentleman should proceed, but I want him to get the facts.

Mr. STEFAN. I am willing to admit that something has been done in the matter of building entrances to the western parks, but not to nearly the extent it is being done in the case of this huge parkway.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It amounts to just about the same mileage, I may say to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman is usually well informed on roads. He has helped me in my work on farm-to-market

Mr. RANKIN. If the gentleman will yield, when the bill comes before the House I will aid the gentleman in increasing the item carried for the farm-to-market roads. Mr. STEFAN. The gentleman has always helped out in the matter of farm-to-market roads and I thank him for his help.

Mr. RANKIN. That is involved in this item.
Mr. STEFAN. Farm-to-market roads are practical.
Mr. RANKIN. Farmers live along this road.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY].

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing this matter of the parks-to-parks highway from so many differ-ent angles that it is very easy to be under a misapprehension. Everyone must know that not one dollar taken off of this appropriation will go to farm-to-market roads. It is in no way prejudicial to farm-to-market road development. This is a parkway development and it is giving to the crowded East just what the great West has, a playground for the people here, to which they are entitled. No one can say how damaging on human character is the effect of crowding teeming millions of human beings into our great cities of this eastern section, but all agree that giving our citizenship the privilege of spending a day or two close to Nature, as these parkways, pays real dividends in human character and happiness.

I am frank to say that I would be willing to see this parkway extended across Pennsylvania and New York, on up across New England, to the Canadian border. It is not a utility road. Every State that it traverses is required to donate 150 acres of land for every mile that the road crosses. This land is used entirely for scenic and recreational purposes.

We people of the West know too well that the folks in the East, those who are underprivileged, are entitled to go out occasionally and enjoy the best that Nature has to give them. That is the purpose of this project. In the northern part, through Virginia and North Carolina, it is 40 percent completed. To say now that we will cut off the appropriation would be the height of folly, just as the other day, when we acted unwisely and rapidly on an amendment concerning the Federal Housing Authority. After we have acted we discover it was not a wise thing to stop a project that has been under way for 3 years, and which the people want, not as a partisan group but in order to build a better citizenship. To adopt this amendment, in my opinion, would be highly inconsistent with the patriotic motives that I am sure actuate all of us.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman suggested it would be a great thing for the Eastern States. As a member of the committee, did anybody from any eastern city appear before the committee and ask for the $5,000,000?

Mr. LEAVY. I cannot say, offhand. It depends on what you call East.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Did anybody from the East request this appropriation?

Mr. LEAVY. It was assumed that we were going to make it because of its merit.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEAVY. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Does not the gentleman think it would be a blessing and a benefit to the people of New York to make trips over our country and see the wonders and the advantages of our country instead of spending money going to Europe? Rather than spend money going over in these palatial boats that they use, would it not be of greater benefit to them to make a few trips through the South and West and familiarize themselves with the beauty of our own country?

Mr. LEAVY. I am certain any American who knows his America is a better American citizen by reason of that knowledge. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Rees].

The question as taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rees of Kansas) there were—ayes 7, noes 118.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 15 of the bill for the purpose of offering the following amendment:

On page 15, following the amendment offered by me and adopted by the Committee of the Whole, strike out the period after the word "house" and insert a semicolon and the words:

Provided further, however, That the foregoing limitation shall not apply upon construction under contracts entered into prior to the date of the enactment of this act.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. White]?

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman, would not the effect of the amendment be to limit for all time in the future, after this fiscal year, the cost of a housing unit to $3,500?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. The effect of the amendment would have nothing to do with that. This amendment would take care of the thing that several of the gentlemen have talked about today—namely, exempt existing contracts from its effect.

Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr. HOOK objected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Historic sites and buildings: For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the preservation of historic American sites, buildings, objects, and antiquities of national significance, and for other purposes," approved August 21, 1935 (49 Stat. 666), including personal services in the District of Columbia, $24,000: Provided, That hereafter the authority of the Secretary of the Interior contained in such act, to acquire by gift on behalf of the United States any historic site, building, object, and antiquity of national significance, shall not be effective until an appropriation has been made for the operation and maintenance thereof subsequently to such proposed acquisition.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a point of order against the proviso, commencing with the word "Provided," line 17, page 119, down to the end of the paragraph, in that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. According to the report, it expressly changes the language of the act.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma

[Mr. Johnson] desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would offer the same amendment as I offered about 10 pages back, in regard to historic sites and the St. Louis memorial, but I know it would not pass, although it should pass.

Mr. Chairman, we have 104 Federal employees of the Park Service now in St. Louis. The money from which they are being paid is about exhausted and apparently the President of the United States is not going to give them any additional relief money. The gentleman from Missouri has insisted during the last week or so in two or three speeches that he will never ask a dollar from the Treasury of the United States for the St. Louis memorial.

Now, here is the ridiculous situation in which we find ourselves. There is proposed here a historic site to be preserved, although we are creating an additional historic site in St. Louis, and we have 104 Federal employees there. The money to pay them is about gone, and this has amounted to two and a quarter million dollars. The Government has spent six and three-quarter million dollars for real estate. About the only purpose of the memorial anyway was to sell the real estate. Now, why not give this thing a decent burial instead of permitting it to live on like it is?

Let St. Louis know, let the Government know, and let the Park Service know that this thing is going to be ended in a decent and dignified manner. We should not allow any of this $24,000 to go to pay the salaries of these 104 employees, but there is no use in offering an amendment to that effect.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LAMBERTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does not the gentleman believe they are making preparation for giving this proposition a decent burial and that is the reason we have this casket up here in the House now? We are going to carry it out before the session is ended.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. The mayor evidently has lost his influence with the President. His real-estate firm has been barred from the realty board of St. Louis.

The source that put the proposition over with the President is not in the best of repute. The project cannot succeed because Congress will never appropriate for it. The sponsors do not dare ask for money. They did not even dare, after 4 years of legal existence, to ask the Budget for a dollar. They plan as long as this President is in office to get money year by year from relief funds to keep this proposition alive.

Across the river are two packing houses. An elevated railroad has to be taken down and a tunnel dug for it under the city, according to Mr. Ickes, before this memorial can be constructed. A lot of obstacles have to be overcome. Why not give this project a decent burial instead of letting it linger like this? [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.] The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and general expenses, public buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia: For administration, protection, maintenance, and improvement of public buildings, monuments, memorials, and grounds in the District of Columbia under the jurisdiction of the National Park Service, including the National Archives Building; per diem employees at rates of pay approved by the Director, not exceeding current rates for similar services in the District of Columbia, and such employees in emergencies may be entered on duty subject to confirmation by the Secretary of the Interior; rent of buildings; demolition of buildings; expenses incident to moving various executive departments and establishments in connection with the assignment, allocation, transfer, and survey of building space; traveling expenses and carfare; leather and rubber articles and gas masks for the protection of public property and employees; furnishings and equipment; arms and ammunition for the guard force; not exceeding $37,400 for purchase, repair, and cleaning of uniforms for guards and elevator conductors; and the purchase, maintenance, repair, exchange, storage, and operation of four motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles; $7,950,962, of which amount, not to exceed $500,000, shall be available for major repairs and improvements to public buildings, monuments, memorials, and grounds in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 121, line 4, strike out "$7,950,962" and insert "$6,950,962."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, we are diligently trying to cut down this appropriation bill, but it seems as if we are getting nowhere fast. We called your attention to the fact that we want to cut down $1,000,000 on the rentals we are paying here in the District of Columbia. Let me call your attention to the fact that in the hearings on the first deficiency appropriation bill we gave a list of the buildings in the District in which space was rented by the Government, the number of people employed by the new agencies, the number of square feet occupied, and the annual rental. The totals are as follows:

Persons employed in the various New Deal organizations that have been set up and are now occupying rented buildings number 22,711. The number of square feet occupied is 3,664,716. The annual rental is $3,432,711.41. Think of it! We are paying $3,400,000 and more for rentals in the District of Columbia mostly for New Deal agencies. Let me call your attention to the fact that this rental amounts to over $150 a year per employee.

I wish to direct your attention to some of the buildings that are being rented. For instance, let us consider the Standard Oil Building, at 261 Constitution Avenue. We rent 37,195 square feet in that building, at a cost of $68,810 per year. This is almost $2 a square foot. Then there is the Tower Building, at Fourteenth and K Streets NW., occupied by the National Bituminous Coal Commission. We rent 7,714 square feet and pay a rental of $14,193 a year. This is an exorbitant rent.

In the District National Bank Building, for the Accounts and Deposits, where 20 people are employed, a rental of $22,745 per year is paid for 1,830 square feet. This is a most exorbitant rental.

At the Tower Building, at Fourteenth and K, the Committee on Enrollment and Disbarment occupies 14,022 square feet, at a rental of $23,838 a year.

At 1331 to 1341 U Street NW. the Internal Revenue Bureau occupies 76,045 square feet and pays a rental of $103,038.72.

I dare say if a Member of Congress had a business of his own or was looking after a business for someone else he could go out in the District of Columbia and rent space in buildings at a cost of less than one-half what we are paying for space in some of these office buildings. Let me call your attention to 1001 Vermont Avenue, where the Federal Housing Administration occupies 100,414 square feet, for which we are paying an annual rental of $155,000. This is an exorbitant rental.

Mr. KELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. KELLER. I should like to know how the gentleman arrives at that conclusion?

Mr. RICH. I take it from the figures given by the Interior Department. When the first deficiency bill was under consideration, the Department of the Interior was requested to submit a list of buildings, together with the number of square feet occupied by them and the price paid for the space. If you will refer to the hearings on the first deficiency appropriation bill, you will find all this information.

Mr. KELLER. But does it show that we are paying twice as much as would the gentleman for personal rental?

Mr. RICH. They do not say that; but if we had any brains at all, we would know it. It is too much for any building rental for office space in Washington, D. C.

Mr. KELLER. How does the gentleman know it?

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe for a minute that anyone who pays $2 a square foot for space in the District of Columbia is not paying an exorbitant rental for space for these New Deal agencies? What we want to do is cut out about half the New Deal agencies, and then we will get some place. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

All appropriations for vocational education under the Office of Education in this act shall be used exclusively for vocational education purposes.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 113, line 12, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the nature of his amendment?

Mr. KRAMER. Yes. The reason I am making this request is because I was absent last week and did not have an opportunity to present it at that time.

The amendment would provide an appropriation of $8,500 for Joshua Tree Park, in California. This is a monument which was dedicated by the President in 1936 and without this appropriation nothing can be done with it.

The appropriation would be used for the employment of rangers and for constructing roads and getting the park into operation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Further reserving the right to object, do I understand that this request has not been considered by the committee?

Mr. KRAMER. I understand the request has been considered by the committee and the members of the committee on this side had no objection.

Mr. REES of Kansas. What I want to know is whether or not there has been any hearing on this item or whether the matter has been presented to the committee.

Mr. KRAMER. I do not know whether the matter has been presented to the committee or not, but I mentioned it to the subcommittee.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to object to a request of this kind, but it seems to me this is another amendment for a further expenditure of money and an unnecessary expenditure, and just one more item of extravagance, spending $8,500 for nothing at all.

Mr. KRAMER. This is not an extravagance but a necessity in order to put this park into operation.

Mr. REES of Kansas. In all kindness to the gentleman from California, it seems to me this is a matter that should go through the committee in regular order.

Mr. KRAMER. I have told the gentleman what it is for. It is for the services of two rangers and for the purchase of pick-up trucks and necessary office equipment during the period of next year.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Does not the gentleman still think it is a matter that ought to have gone before the committee and had some hearing on it?

Mr. KRAMER. I do not see where there is any significance in that, because the Committee of the Whole is here and there is nothing different in this amendment from any other amendment that might be offered. I am sure the gentleman would not oppose the amendment if it were brought to his attention.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Further reserving the right to object, is not this a matter that can come before the deficiency committee for consideration?

Mr. KRAMER. I do not know about that. I recall taking it up with the committee and they suggested that I might offer it in this way.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I believe this is a matter that could go before the deficiency subcommittee for its consideration and I therefore must object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The Clerk read as follows:

COVERNMENT OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

GOVERNMENT OF THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

For salaries of the Governor and employees incident to the execution of the acts of March 3, 1917 (48 U. S. C. 1391), and June 22, 1936 (48 U. S. C. 1405v), traveling expenses of officers and employees, necessary janitor service, care of Federal grounds, repair and preservation of Federal buildings and furniture, purchase of equipment, stationery, lights, water, and other necessary miscellaneous expenses, including not to exceed $5,000 for purchase, including exchange, maintenance, repair, and operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, and not to exceed $4,000 for personal services, household equipment, and furnishings, fuel, ice, and electricity necessary in the operation of Government House at Saint Thomas and Government House at Saint Croix, $127,250.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Rich: On page 133, line 15, strike out "$127,250," and insert "$67,250."

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to cut down the expense of the Virgin Islands. That is the place where the Government has put you all in the rum business. I have here a bottle of Government House rum that was manufactured in the Virgin Islands. Every individual citizen of the United States of America is a stockholder in this enterprise. The Government has spent, under the guise of relief, $2,000,000 or more for the purpose of taking over the old rum plant, taking over two sugar plantations, and now we have every citizen of America manufacturing this Government House rum.

After they formed this company and spent two and a half million dollars on it, they incorporated it at $30. Think of it. A $30 incorporation after the Government had spent over $2,000,000. One share is owned by the Secretary of the Interior, one share by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, and one share by the Governor of the Virgin Islands, and with this enormous capitalization of $30, they have been going in the red. Last year shows that you have gone in the red and that you are not able to make a dollar on this capitalization. A travesty to a business venture by the Federal Government. They compete with our American rum manufacturers who are taxed high for the privilege of manufacturing rum. Why should the Government compete with them? Why should the Government get into any business that competes with its citizens, whether it be transportation, whether it be electricity, or whether it be sugar growing, or whether it be rum manufacturing?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Yes. I yield to the gentleman from New York City.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is it not a fact that the Government does not make one cent of appropriation for the manufacture of rum?

Mr. RICH. Well, the Government has a rum factory. We made our appropriation, and the rum factory has its money, and now you are trying to camouflage the issue by appropriating to the municipalities, and the money goes also to the operation of these plants.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Oh, I ask the gentleman to answer the question

Mr. RICH. You are trying to camouflage the issue, that you are in the rum industry. I do not yield any more. You know you are losing money in the rum business. You have to support it some way sooner or later by more gifts.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Why not answer the question?

Mr. RICH. You have made your appropriation, and you are going in the red now. You are camouflaging it, and if this rum industry were any good, if you could get along and make a profit, you would not have to appropriate $127,000 now to run the government of the Virgin Islands. You would take the profits to pay your bills, but when you come in here and ask for aid, for each one of these islands to be appropriated the sum of $127,000, you are only camouflaging the issue as to what the money is used for.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Who imports and retails this Uncle Sam rum?

Mr. RICH. Uncle Sam is importing this himself.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. And does he collect the whisky tax on this rum also?

Mr. RICH. Uncle Sam is collecting the whole business. The gentleman is a stockholder. He is in the rum business. Every man, woman, and child in America, every Sunday school scholar, every citizen of America has an interest in that rum plant.

Mr. SABATH rose.

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield now. The Secretary of the Interior on April 26, 1937, sent every one of the members of the subcommittee a bottle of this rum. I still have mine. I do not know whether each of the others has his

Mr. LEAVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania declines to yield further.

Mr. RICH. I cannot yield. I want to show you what the rum plant is doing. They are afraid to put in the statement of what the rum plant has been doing. They say they cannot operate the sugar industry unless they have the rum plant, and when you have the rum plant it shows that you have gone in the red this year. Now, we come in and these men would have you believe that we are asking for this $127,000 to run the municipality. The Government competes with the rum industry of America There is no reason why they should compete with the rum industry of this country. That is setting the Government up in business, and I am opposed to it. I do not care whether it is in the manufacture of rum or in the 101 other things the Government is engaged in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, on page 956 of the hearing on the Interior appropriation bill, the acting chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Johnson, asked Governor Cramer, of the Virgin Islands, if there was any money recommended in the appropriation bill toward the rum business, and here is his answer:

Mr. CRAMER. There is no money in this appropriation for the Virgin Islands Co.

So the statement made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is not correct according to the statement of Governor Cramer, of the Virgin Islands, and I ask the Members to vote down the amendment.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment. For many years prior to the repeal of prohibition I had taken an active part in the fight to bring about repeal. I was somewhat surprised to find today that all of those who served in the dry forces, including many of the present Members of the House, are now in the rumproducing business under a general partnership with all of the American people. Our New Deal wets and drys have put Uncle Sam in the rum business in a big way. Our former dry leaders can vote to keep Uncle Sam in the Government rum business. I am opposed to subsidies from the taxpayers' Treasury to permit Uncle Sam to engage in fields of private business endeavors. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], who exhibited a bottle of Uncle Sam's Government rum, correctly indicated that every American is a partner in Uncle Sam's rum business. I therefore find myself in strange company today-in partnership with Bishop Cannon, that great dry leader, in the Government rum-producing business. We should adopt the pending amendment and get Uncle Sam out of his Government rum business.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. There seems to be a lot of rum talk going on here, but there is no rum in this amendment. Therefore I make the point of order that the gentleman is not talking to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken, and the gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am talking directly to this

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is to strike out the sum of $127,250 and substitute $67,250.

Mr. SCHAEFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, this amendment reduces the appropriation for the operation of various Government activities, including the government rum business in the Virgin Islands. Therefore I am in order, the facetious interjection of my colleague from Michigan [Mr. Hook] to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOOK. The gentleman is violating the ruling of the Chair, who ruled he was speaking out of order. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. I am talking in favor of the pending amendment to reduce the appropriation from the Federal Treasury for the Government subsidized rum business in the Virgin Islands. This subsidized Government competition is unfair to competing American private business and to the American taxpayers.

I hope the pending amendment will be adopted so that private business will have notice that this Congress is in favor of ending subsidized Government competition with private business. We must encourage legitimate private business to expand or the time will soon be at hand when private business will not be able to employ millions of our people who need jobs and will not be able to produce the tax dollars for our New Deal Government spendthrifts.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for me to propound a unanimous consent request?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close within 5 minutes.

Mr. LORD. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Crawford] would like to speak on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to inquire whether there are any other Members, aside from the gentleman from New York, who desire to be heard. Does any member of the committee desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I think not, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal of discussion with regard to the Virgin Islands. I wanted to speak about our unfairness to the Virgin Islands by imposing a tax on sugar. I think if we should cut this down in the amount proposed by the amendment perhaps it would be unnecessary to impose an export tax of $8 on sugar. That tax is not demanded of any other possession in any other part of the United States.

These islands, under Danish rule, got along very well. They got along very well under the government we gave them under the Danish form. I think we have tried to go too far in governing the Virgin Islands. We have injected too much "domination from Washington" into their affairs and this interferes with their custom of making their "own way." I do not think we have been fair in our treatment of them. Of course, we went into this rum industry. We took the sugar factories out of production and put them into the manufacture of rum and the deal has not proven much of a financial success and it brings into the Islands entirely too much dictation from Washington. They have not prospered so well under the "rum program" and the manufacture of rum as when they produced cane for the manufacture of sugar, regardless of the tax. At the present time they export a great deal of sugar on which they have to pay export tax. While I do not want to advocate anything that will be detrimental to the islands, I do hope that this discussion has brought attention to the fact that we are not treating the islands with the regard we should treat them, and I hope it may bring about taking off this export tax on sugar so that they will be on an equality with other parts of the United States.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. Do I understand they must import sugar into the Virgin Islands?

Mr. LORD. No.

Mr. STEFAN. Instead of making sugar out of their sugarcane they are turning it into rum?

Mr. LORD. Yes; they are turning it into rum.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I just want to call attention to what Mr. Brown said in answer to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. LEAVY]. He said:

The sugar-refining business of itself cannot carry on satisfactorily?

Mr. Brown. The raw-sugar business by itself cannot make ends meet. It requires the rum business to be identified with it. The West Indies sugar factory failed. It did not have the rum business.

Now, the American public, interested in this Virgin Island company has failed, because they have gone into the red this year. Every member of the subcommittee knows they have gone in the red to make rum.

Mr. LORD. They must make it into rum, because we put such a tax against the sugar, an export tax of $8 a ton, that they cannot manufacture sugar. We are really forcing them to manufacture rum that they do not want to manufacture. If we would lift this tax it would greatly assist the entire situation in the islands and make the growing of sugarcane and production of sugar more profitable to the individual operator. As it is being worked, I fear there is danger that the Government's rum program may tend to drive all of the private industry now engaged in the sugar business into a position where they will have to submit to Federal domination and produce raw products for the use of the Virgin Islands Co.—the federally owned enterprise. If this happens, it will be bad for the people generally. We all know that any people left to their own enterprise and free will can and will maintain a higher standard of living than they will ever enjoy for a long period of time under Federal domination and planned economy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD] has expired. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rich) there were—ayes 68, noes 91.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

ST. ELIZABETHS HOSPITAL

For support, clothing, and treatment in St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane of insane persons from the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Coast Guard, insane inmates of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons who have become insane since their entry into the military and naval services of the United States, insane civilians in the quarter-master service of the Army, insane persons transferred from the Canal Zone who have been admitted to the hospital and who are indigent, American citizens legally adjudged insane in the Dominion of Canada whose legal residence in one of the States, Territories, or the District of Columbia it has been impossible to establish, insane beneficiaries of the United States Verterans' Administration, and insane Indian beneficiaries of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, including not exceeding $27,000 for the purchase (including 1 at not to exceed $1,200), exchange, maintenance, repair, operation of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles for the use of the superintendent, purchasing agent, and general hospital business, and including not to exceed $1,200, including cooperation with organizations or individuals in scientific research into the nature, causes, prevention, and treatment of mental illness, and including maintenance and operation of necessary facilities for feeding employees and others (at not less than cost), and the proceeds therefrom shall reimburse the appropriation for the institution; and not exceeding $1,500 of this sum may be expended in the removal of patients to their friends; not exceeding $1,500 in the purchase of such books, periodicals, and newspapers as may be required for the purposes of the hospital and for the medical library, and not exceeding $1,500 for the actual and necessary expenses incurred in the apprehension and return to the hospital of escaped patients: Provided, That so much of this sum as may be required for the purposes of the hospital and for the medical library, and not exceeding $200 additional may be paid to two employees to provide mail facilities for patients in the hospital: Provided further, That no part of this for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, persons charged with or convicted of crimes against the United States who are insane, all persons by check to the Superintendent, upon his written request, either in advance or at the end of each month, all or part of the estimated or actual cost of such maintenance, as the case may be, and bills rendered by the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital in accordance herewith shall not be subject to audit or certification in advance of payment; proper adjustments on the basis of the actual cost of the care of patients paid for in advance shall be made monthly or quarterly, as may be agreed upon between the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital and the District of Columbia government, department, or establishments concerned. All sums paid to the Superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital for the care of patients that he is authorized by law to receive shall be the care of patients that he is authorized by law to receive shall be deposited to the credit on the books of the Treasury Department of the appropriation made for the care and maintenance of the patients at St. Elizabeths Hospital for the year in which the support, clothing, and treatment is provided, and be subject to requisition upon the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

I would like to say to the members of the Committee that St. Elizabeths Hospital has made a request for additional funds for the improvement of their property. They wanted to construct several buildings, and from the number of patients they have in this hospital, it looks as if they should have the improvements; but when they suggested-

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. I cannot yield.

Where are you going to get the money?

Mr. HOOK. Where are you going to get the money?
Mr. RICH. When they suggested these improvements, the only place they could suggest for the construction of any buildings was within their own grounds, and when they did that they admitted that to build any buildings there would naturally take away from the beauty and from the benefits which their patients now receive from the sunlight which they enjoy in going around over the grounds and sitting in parkways now on the grounds.

The committee cut this down, believing they should investigate as to whether it would not be better to acquire property away from the present site. For this reason the appropria-tion they asked for increased facilities was delayed for 1 year. Next year, no doubt, they will make other recommendations which will be for the best interests of St. Elizabeths Hospital. I congratulate the committee in deferring this proposition 1 year until proper investigation can be made for additional housing at St. Elizabeths. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma. On page 136 the end of line 4, after the word "repair", insert the word "and."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this is merely an amendment correcting a typographical error.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

COLUMBIA INSTITUTE FOR THE DEAF

For support of the institution, including salaries and incidental expenses, books and illustrative apparatus, and general repairs and improvements, and including not to exceed $11,000 for improvement to the power, heating, and lighting system, $150,950.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Johnson of Oklahoma: Page 138, line 5, strike out the word "institute" and insert in lieu thereof the word "institution."

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this is an amendment that merely corrects the spelling of a word. changing the word "institute" to the word "institution."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 5 minutes

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman not reserve his objection? Numerous requests to proceed out of order have been granted today to enable Members to speak on the housing amendment. I want to speak on it myself in a reasonable way for 5 minutes, and in according me this privilege it will be nothing more than has been accorded several Members on the Democratic side.

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, the other day my friend from New York [Mr. FITZPATRICK] read a telegram from Mr. Bates. My answer to Mr. Bates is that I believe this amendment is necessary in fairness to the rank and file members of the organization he represents. They are the people who have to pay for these so-called slum dwellings-more costly and more elaborate under present plans than their own homes which they bought themselves through toil, thrift, and sacrifice.

If this was merely a question of what could be gotten out of the U.S. H. A. program in construction costs, that would be one thing. But it is more fundamental than that. The merit of the case should rest upon the underlying purpose of providing living quarters for the ill-nourished, the illclad, and ill-housed-and on a basis that is practical and fair to all other citizens. You cannot do that unless you keep the costs within the reach of the slum-family income. That is not being done today. The plain fact is that a slum family, notwithstanding the Government subsidy, cannot afford to pay the rent on a five- or six-thousand-dollar apartment. If you want this program to hit its real target. my amendment should be retained.

Of course the average costs for the country are much less than those of a great big city, like New York, for example. But why should the country, as a whole, be penalized by the costs in New York? This amendment has nothing to do with loans and grants. It deals only with the annual contribution plan. It is designed to apply to the costs borne by the Federal Government. The local participation is not included. It puts all communities on the same basis, and those with highest costs can still meet extra requirements by the local Housing Authority making up the difference in cases above this average.

Now then, is not our great responsibility that of examining the matter of fairness to the average American citizens who are the backbone of the Nation, who carve out the progress of every community, who send us to Congress, and who depend upon us for equitable representation?

Beginning on page 162 of the hearings you will find tables of costs for projects under this program. Under the old set-up some of them cost as high as twelve and seventeen thousand dollars per family. Under the present set-up Mr. Straus, on page 165, cites an average cost of $5,484 without demolition or clearance.

Do not forget another thing. These figures represent the original cost of construction only. They do not include the charges of the 60-year annual contributions. That runs into real money, too, because a complete application of the complicated formula of annual contributions shows that the Federal Government furnishes more than a million and a half dollars for every million-dollar project. Think of that. It means the full cost of the project and a half million more from Uncle Sam to be used to pay the interest charged by him.

The previous limitations apply only to dwelling-room facilities. You can see that substantial costs can be omitted if they are not classified as dwelling-room facilities.

Even so, let us take a look at the figures listed in the hearings. There are four projects at Boston with an average cost of $6,017 per family; three at Cleveland averaging $5,981; three in New York averaging $6,385, four in Detroit averaging $6,243. How do those total costs compare with the home of the average citizen clear across the country-of the farmer, the wage earner, the merchant, in small towns and big citiespeople who do not get homes from the Government and furthermore have to pay this bill?

Do the citizens in Milton, Fla., Burley, Idaho, Ironwood, Mich., Meridian, Miss., Corydon, Iowa, Bryan, Ohio, Manchester, Pa., Tuscaloosa, Ala., Bloomington, Ill., Bath, N. Y., LaGrande, Oreg., Horicon, Wis., Waltham, Mass., or, for that matter, the average of the big cities, live in homes of such value? If not, then it stands to reason that homes of greater cost should not be built at their expense for others under Government aid.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.
Mr. FITZPATRICK. Is the cost to which the gentleman just referred cost under the United States Housing Authority or under P. W. A.?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Under the United States Housing

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not one of the Housing Authority projects has yet been completed. According to their estimate the highest, I believe, is $5,600; and according to the figures of the Department of Labor a dwelling unit cannot be constructed in any part of the United States for less than $4,000.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Answering the gentleman from New York, I refer him to the table on page 164 of the hearings. There he will find the complete answer. They are the new estimates of U.S. H. A. itself, and I have quoted you their own figures.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. The survey shows that the potential market for houses costing $4,000 has dropped from 54 percent to 24 percent within the last 5 or 6 years.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I think that is true.

In conclusion-

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. I regret it, but my time is almost up. I cannot yield for the moment.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me call attention to the fact that the purpose of this amendment is to bring the cost LXXXIV-190 within the range of the slum dweller, as expressed in the last sentence of an editorial which appeared in Sunday morning's Post. This editorial said:

Drastic reduction of the outlays and subsidies appears to be the only way of continuing this important social work.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOOK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last

Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the statement of the gentleman from Ohio who just preceded me on the question of housing. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that for many, many years past we have subsidized housing in the United States, not through Government subsidies but by virtue of the fact that we allowed real-estate sharks to run rampant throughout the United States and flood the country with spurious real-estate bonds. You and I and the others who bought those bonds subsidized housing throughout the United States. Old people with small savings, widows with small life-insurance benefits were urged to purchase and did purchase, these bonds, with the result that their entire savings were swept away. The United States Government is striving to eliminate slums, and I think it is about time we stepped into this field and properly subsidized housing for the people of this Nation.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. HOOK. I hope the gentleman will pardon me just a minute.

Inasmuch as the gentleman from Ohio mentioned the residents of the city of Ironwood, let me state for his information that the United States Government has a project in the city of Ironwood consisting of 119 homes for laboring men, men who labor in the mines, men who lived in old shacks but who helped to make the profits of those corporations which own the mines, profits made from the blood and sweat of those American workmen. The United States Government has now stepped in there to build, as I said, 119 homes.

Those homes are being rented to the common laborers who are residents of the city of Ironwood, Mich., at from $12 to $16 per month. I am sorry to say some people, not in this lower income bracket, have gotten into these homes. I have investigated this situation, and through my efforts it is being corrected. It is not completely corrected, however. I am informed that they are not accepting any persons outside the $900 to $1,800 income group. These people were entitled to those homes at those rents, and I thank God that there is a man in the White House, that there are new dealers, if you please, who are recognizing the man who goes down into the depths of the dingy mines to such an extent that they are at least giving him a decent place in which to live. [Applause.1

Let us subsidize the United States Housing Authority to such an extent that we will wipe out the tenements and slums throughout the United States. The highways and railroads were subsidized, not only under the New Deal but for many years before the New Deal came into being.

Mr. SACKS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. SACKS. May I observe that in the city of Philadelphia the Housing Authority, now controlled by the Republicans, has called off all housing work as a result of this pending amendment.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. In view of the contracts which have been given out, and in view of the launching of the program, if the White amendment is kept in this bill, the whole program will be scuttled as far as housing is concerned.

Mr. HOOK. There is not any doubt about that, and there is no doubt that that is the idea behind the amendment. There is no doubt that that is the purpose of the amendment. I have been here throughout the entire session and I have not seen an amendment offered by a Member on the other side of the House that did not have destruction as its motive.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOOK. I yield to the gentleman from Montana. Mr. O'CONNOR. May I call attention also to the fact that plans have been laid in the larger cities of my district, Great Falls and Billings, to provide buildings at $4,000 per unit. If the reduction provided by this amendment stands, it will impair the entire set-up, because the $4,000 includes not only the buildings but the land, cost of demolition of the old buildings, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. HOOK. There is not any doubt about that.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House, with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Buck, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, 1940, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the White amendment, which places a limitation on the units of the United States Housing Authority appropriation, page 15, line 15.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment?

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, a unanimous-consent request

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. WHITE of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following amendment on page 15, following the amendment offered by me and adopted by the Committee of the Whole:

Strike out the period after the word "house", insert a semi-colon, with the words "Provided further, however, That the fore-going limitation shall not apply upon construction under contracts entered into prior to the date of the enactment of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it proper for the House to vote on the amendments in gross at this time.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE]?

Mr. MARCANTONIO and Mr. SACKS objected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the so-called White amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. White of Ohio: On page 15, line 15, after the amount "$5,000,000", insert a colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That in the use of such funds the total and final cost, including all charges assumed by the Federal Government, shall not exceed $3,500 for each family so housed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. White of Ohio) there were—ayes 58, noes 187.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and navs.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 77, nays 290, answered "present" 1, not voting 64, as follows:

Mr. COCHRAN. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Anderson, was required to be home on account of illness in his family. If he had been present, he would have voted against the White amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit. The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill? Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, no one could doubt that I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts it unless the gentleman makes the statement that he is opposed to the bill. Under the rule, the gentleman must state that he is opposed to the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I am certainly opposed to the bill. The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Rich moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to reconsider the bill and report the same back forthwith to the House with reductions of at least 10 percent of the total amount appropriated in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to recommit the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Rich) there were-ayes 123, noes 215.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill. The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were-yeas 267, nays 105, not voting 60, as follows:

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on tomorrow, at the close of the legislative program, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein an address delivered by me on March 16, 1939, on the occasion of the one hundred and seventy-second birthday of Andrew Jackson, who is buried in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEYER of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a broadcast by Paul Sharrenberg, of the American Federation of Labor, on the Harrison-Thomas bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Record and to include therein certain quotations from the Vegetable Trade Journal and from the secretary of the Vegetable Growers of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, the bill which we have just passed has consumed about 10 days of the time of the House. I understand the bill is about 5 percent under the Budget estimate. I want to take this occasion to compliment the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. Johnson, for the splendid and efficient work he has displayed in piloting this bill through the House.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to insert in the RECORD at this point an explanation of the concurrent resolution introduced this day by me to have printed a revised edition of the Biographical Directory of the American Congress.

This great work, which is the outgrowth of the Directory of the United States Congress and the General Government first published in 1859, has not been revised since 1928. The last volume of Hinds and Cannon Precedents officially states that a revised compilation be made periodically-and the 10-year period has already elapsed.

The need for the new compilation is apparent. It is shown by the fact there are more than 1,000 Members of Congress. who have served since 1928, whose biographies are not in the present volume. Of the 96 present Members of the Senate, 70 do not appear in the present work. And of the 435 Members of the House of Representatives, 362 have no mention in this 1928 edition. Furthermore, there is need of much revision of the biographies of former Members of Congress whose names are included. Because the records were obscure, between two and three thousand biographical sketches of Members who served in the early Congresses, before 1850. should be revised and additional information added. Since 1928, many other changes have occurred which should be recorded. During this 10-year period many of the former Members have died, and hundreds have left Congress for other reasons.

Mr. Ansel Wold, veteran clerk of the Joint Committee on Printing, who compiled the present edition, has continued his research, I am told, during these last 10 years. He has uncovered much new information that is of historical value and should be included in the revised edition. The present edition contains about 9,000 biographical sketches, all checked as carefully as possible during a 4-year period of study from 12 to 16 years ago. It contains more than 1,740 pages and lists historical data regarding all the Presidents from George Washington to Calvin Coolidge. It also contains a record of the Continental Congress, the census apportionment of Representatives through the years as the States joined the Union and the size of Congress grew. Beginning with the Fortieth Congress, March 4, 1867, this book lists Members of the House by congressional districts.

This present edition of the Biographical Directory of the American Congress is a revision of the Dictionary of the United States Congress, published in 1859 and revised in 1869 by Charles Lanham; the Biographical Annals of the Civil Government of the United States, published in 1876 by Charles Lanham and James Anglim; the Lanham edition of 1876, as corrected by Joseph M. Morrison in 1887; the Political Register and Congressional Directory of 1878 by Ben Perely Poore; the Biographical Congressional Directory of 1903 by O. M. Enyart; and the 1911 revision of this work, Before 1809, apparently no effort was made to publish a directory of Members of Congress.

The value of the present book as a work of reference is incalculable. Not only the Government officials in Washington but schools and libraries throughout the country have need of such reference material.

From this brief sketch of the evolution of this great work and the deficiencies in the present book the need for a revision of the Biographical Directory of the American Congress is manifest.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the remarks I made on the bill just passed and to include therein extracts from certain statements made by Chief Tush-Ma-ta-ha in his debate with Tecumseh, from which I quoted on the floor.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein several telegrams on the Housing Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. COFFEE of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in connection with statements made on the floor, in the debate on the Interior Department appropriation bill, and to include therein a brief article on Coulee Dam, written by O. J. Schuster. The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Alexander] be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes on Wednesday next, following the special orders and the disposition of the legislative program.

The SPEAKER. The Chair takes the liberty of stating to the gentleman from Massachusetts that probably tomorrow there may be no legislative program, while on Wednesday there will be, probably. The Chair suggests that the gentleman modify his request accordingly. Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I so modify the request that the gentleman from Minnesota be permitted to address the House tomorrow after the special orders and the disposition of legislative business.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House on Thursday next for 20 minutes, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's table and the legislative program of the day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter submitting a resolution by the Los Angeles Building Trades Conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein articles from the Associated Press and the International Press regarding our foreign trade.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Appendix and to include therein an address delivered by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Ickes, at San Francisco, before the Commonwealth Club on February 17 last.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCHAFER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an editorial from the Milwaukee Journal of February 26, with reference to our foreign affairs.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House tomorrow, after the address of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ALEXANDER] for 20 minutes.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as

To Mr. REED of Illinois, for 5 days, on account of death in family.

To Mr. Risk, for 10 days, on account of important busi-

To Mr. LeCompte, for 1 week, on account of illness.

To Mr. Anderson of Missouri, on account of illness in his

To Mr. Mansfield, indefinitely, on account of illness.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SIROVICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks by printing in the RECORD a speech I delivered on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY], I ask unanimous consent that he be granted 10 days leave of absence on account of

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken today on the bill H. R. 4852, the Interior Department appropriation bill, may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their own

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I just want to take this opportunity to join the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. TERRY] in congratulating the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] for the masterful manner in which he handled this bill. He deserves the thanks of the House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. Johnson]?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Members of the House that I have never in my life enjoyed working with six men more than the six men on this Subcommittee on Appropriations. We have had a lot of hard work. I have opposed them many times, but they have been perfect gentlemen, and I take my hat off to them as being real, honestto-goodness men. While they have put up with me in fighting this bill, they know I am for economy; yet in all fairness to the things that transpired during our work in the committee, we have worked hard to cut the bill down, but without success. My hat is off to the men who were able to put this bill through as they have today.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. RICH. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I think I express the feeling of the House when I congratulate the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania. He has put up a hard fight, and I think an honest fight. [Applause.] We are grateful for his courtesy and kindness to us all. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MARTIN J. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein a speech delivered by the chief justice of the Supreme Court of the State of New Jersey on March 17 in the city of New York, before the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I beg the indulgence of the House for this minute to thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN], and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Terry] for their very kind and entirely too generous references to me and the manner in which I endeavored to steer the Interior Department appropriation bill through this House. It was a very difficult bill, as it always is. The Interior Department bill has 24 major departments or bureaus and numerous other divisions or agencies, many of which contain controversial items, which accounts for the delays we have encountered in passing this bill. Except for the fine cooperative spirit on the part of members of the Interior Subcommittee on Appropriations, as well as others who aided in the passage of the bill, it would not have been possible to cut this bill approximately 5 percent, as it has been pointed out by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Terry] and, I believe also, by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN]. The bill, as it has just passed the House, contains total appropriations amounting to $159,538,815.23, which is a reduction of $7,594,278 below the Budget estimates. This, we feel, is a very good record. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who, I am pleased to say, made a great contribution in the drafting and passage through the House of this bill, I desire to say that we admire his fighting spirit. It has been a genuine pleasure to work with such splendid, high-minded gentlemen as he and the other minority members of the committee. [Applause.]

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Tuesday, March 21, 1939, at 12 o'clock noon.

Va., urging an amendment to the Social Security Act, providing for total exemption of sublodges of fraternal insurance organizations; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1891. Also, petition of Dr. L. B. Lewellyn, of Wheeling, W. Va., urging that ministers be excluded from the social security; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1892. By Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey: Resolution adopted by the New Jersey Association of Professional Engineers and Land Surveyors, at their nineteenth annual convention held in Newark, N. J., on January 15, 1939, advocating the passage of an act by Congress which would eliminate the retroactive features of a Federal tax on State, county, or municipal employees; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

1893. Also, resolution passed by the New Jersey Association of Professional Engineers and Land Surveyors, at a meeting held in Newark, N. J., on January 15, 1939, advocating an increase in Federal funds allocated to the purchase of materials on Works Progress Administration projects; to the Committee on Appropriations.

1894. Also, resolution passed at the last regular meeting of the Sussex County Peace Officers' Association, Newton, N. J., petitioning the Congress for the continuance of the Dies committee, and lauding the committee for the activities and investigations heretofore accomplished; to the Special Committee to Investigate Un-American Activities.

1895. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the city of Dearborn, Mich., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to Senate bill 591, concerning the United States Housing Act of 1937; to the Committee on Labor.

1896. Also, petition of the Missouri State Legislative Board of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, urging consideration of their resolution with reference to regulating mileage by law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

1897. Also, petition of the Central Labor Union of Philadelphia and Vicinity, Philadelphia, Pa., urging consideration of their resolution with reference to House bill 4223, concerning civil service; to the Committee on the Civil Service.

SENATE

TUESDAY, MARCH 21, 1939

(Legislative day of Thursday, March 16, 1939)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Z@Barney T. Phillips, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Mighty Maker of this wondrous frame, from Whom proceeds all beauty of perfection for which we sigh though we cannot attain unto it: Grant that, as we worship Thee with silent awe, we may feel Thy mystic presence, and Thy controlling rule, rooted in the invisible and held in its embrace as an infant lies in its mother's arms. Vouchsafe to us, in these troublous times, some glimpses of Thy purpose, some insight for the solution of every day's most pressing needs, that, as we dedicate our every aptitude to the fulfillment of our duty here, we may bring, through our readiness to minister, the strength of moral courage and the spirit of true hopefulness, shed abroad in our hearts by Thine own indwelling. We ask it in our Saviour's name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the calendar day Monday, March 20, 1939, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

He also presented resolutions adopted by Unit G 1741, of Arcadia; Local G-322, of Weir; Local G-202, of Arkansas City; and Local W-1748, of Eskridge, all of the Workers Alliance, in the State of Kansas, favoring an additional appropriation of $150,000,000 for the continuation of the Works Progress Administration program, which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Sawyer, Kans., remonstrating against the inclusion of religious bodies under the operation of the social-security system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Washington, Kans., praying that the United States adhere to a policy of nonparticipation in aggression and take measures to discontinue the shipment of war supplies to Japan for use in operations in China, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Wright, Spearville, Kinsley, Bellefont, Ashland, and Fowler, in the State of Kansas, praying that the United States adhere to a general policy of neutrality, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MURRAY presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Montana, favoring the enactment of legislation amending existing laws pertaining to agriculture affecting wheat production in Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Vice President on the 20th instant, p. 4114 Congres-SIONAL RECORD.)

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact legislation to facilitate the transportation of products of Montana and adjacent States by construction of dams and other facilities to make navigable the Missouri River from its mouth to Fort Benton, Mont.

to Fort Benton, Mont.

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas the United States Army engineers are engaged in the construction of a dam across the Missouri River at Fort Peck, Mont., for the purpose of controlling the waters of the said Missouri River below the site of the dam in aid of navigation of said river from its mouth to the location of the dam; and

Whereas the said United States Army engineers are engaged in the giver and channel improvement, work from Sioux City, Iowa, to river and channel improvement work from Sioux City, Iowa, to the mouth of the Missouri River above St. Louis, Mo.; and Whereas it appears that the said United States Army engineers have surveyed and located sites for dams to make completely navigable the Missouri River into the State of Montana; and

Whereas the establishment of a water route for Montana products to markets on the inland waterways of the United States would result in greatly lowered rates for the transportation thereof, and would result in immeasurable benefit to Montana producers and producers of adjacent States: Now, therefore, be it Resolved, by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring). That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested and resolved to enact legislation providing for the progressive construction and completion of the dams necessary, together with adequate ship locks and/or ship elevators in each dam, and together with ship locks and/or ship elevators in the Fort Peck Dam, to make navigable the Missouri River from its mouth to Fort Benton, Mont., providing a water route of 9-foot channel depth for the transportation of products of Montana and adjacent States; and be it further Resolved. That the secretary of state of the State of Montana be directed to send a copy of this resolution to each of the Senators and Representatives of the State of Montana in Congress.

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial

Mr. MURRAY also presented the following joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Finance:

Memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the en-actment of appropriate legislation to protect the citizens of the State of Montana against the importation of natural gas from the Dominion of Canada

State of Montana against the importation of natural gas from the Dominion of Canada

To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas there has been developed in the State of Montana large quantities of natural gas, sufficient in amount to supply the present industrial and domestic demands of the State; and

Whereas there are in the State of Montana numerous geological structures from which great quantities of natural gas will be produced when properly developed and when commercial and domestic consumption require; and

Whereas there has been imported into the State of Montana from the Dominion of Canada approximately 1,250,000,000 cubic feet of natural gas to date, free from any duty; and

Whereas the free and unrestricted importation of such natural gas has not only been a drainage of the Montana gas fields, but imposes a hardship upon the State of Montana and those persons and corporations engaged in the development of the natural resources of the State and is retarding and delaying the development of potential oil and gas fields in the State; and

Whereas the Canadian Government imposes a duty of approximately 6 cents per 1,000 cubic feet upon natural gas imported into that country, and such duty closes the door to the producers of natural gas in Montana: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Montana, That the Congress of the United States be respectfully urged and petitioned to enact legislation prohibiting the importation of natural gas into Canada; and be it further

Resolved That copies of this memorial be mailed to the President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Member in Congress from Montana.

THE FARM ACT OF 1938

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have appropriately referred and printed in the RECORD a resolution, which I send to the desk, and which was recently adopted by representatives of farmers.

I feel that the attitude of these farm groups, as evidenced by this resolution, is of particular significance. They do not hesitate to accept responsibility for the present Farm Act, nor do they seek to disguise its weaknesses and its inadequacy. They are at the present time preparing amendments to correct defects in the 1938 act, and will in the near future, I understand, present to the Congress an integrated program for the rehabilitation of agriculture.

I was particularly pleased to note that these representatives of the farmers advocated a balancing of the Budget, and will base their program not upon subsidies, as other lines of economic endeavor seek to do. There is no question in my mind but that they are correct in pointing out the necessity of increasing the agricultural income. No informed person regards the present income of farmers as sufficient. An increase in agricultural income will do more to restore economic prosperity in the United States than anything else.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following resolution was introduced by M. W. Thatcher, president of the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives, and was unanimously adopted by representatives of the Wheat Conservation Conference, the Northwest Farmers' Union Legislative Committee, the National Federation of Grain Cooperatives, and 12 State unions of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America:

"We recognize the responsibility of the major farm organizations for having approved the philosophy of the 1938 Farm Act. This was approved by the said organizations at a special meeting with the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., in February 1937.

"Experience of less than 1 year with the 1938 Farm Act has brought to light conditions which call for immediate legislative attention and action by Congress.

"The National Farmers' Union is prepared to and will present the required amendments to Congress during the present session. The National Farmers' Union will present a legislative program during the present session of Congress to deal with the pressing agricultural problems and to meet its needs for the future. Our program will call for crop and income insurance to assure the producers of will call for crop and income insurance to assure the producers of all the major farm commodities a parity income covering cost of "Our program will not rest upon large subsidies out of the Federal Treasury, but will look toward balancing the Federal Budget.

"We condemn the expressed statements of the Treasury, as reported by the press, which declares against taxes to increase agricultural income. We declare the Congress of the United States can properly be charged with political bankruptcy if it fails at this session of Congress to appropriate the necessary funds to adequately carry out the purposes and provisions of the 1938 Farm Act as a protection to farmers for their 1939 marketing: Now, therefore he it fore, be it

"Resolved, That we, the officers and members of the executive committee of the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America in regular meeting assembled, concur with the sentiments contained in the aforementioned resolution; and be it further "Resolved, That copies of said resolution be immediately handed to the press and sent to the offices of the various State unions for adequate publicity through all available channels.

ELIMINATION OF PROFITEERING IN TIME OF WAR

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill bearing the signatures of 50 Senators of the United States.

For a great many years it has been the earnest and sincere desire of veterans' organizations and patriotic Americans that the Congress of the United States enact legislation that would make profiteering during war utterly impossible. It will be remembered that on April 27 of last year there was presented to the Congress of the United States petitions bearing the signatures of some 4,000,000 Americans asking the Congress to keep the United States out of war and to enact legislation to take the profit out of war. At that time there was introduced the same bill known then as S. 3912, which was widely publicized by the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It was and is a measure that seeks, by the most drastic levels of taxation yet suggested, to make it impossible for any human being in this country, during wartime, to pile up profits out of wartime operations.

It is also the sincere desire of such an organization as the Veterans of Foreign Wars to make impossible the creation of an army of veterans of future wars; and it is my view—and I think it is a view shared by millions of other Americans—that one of the effective ways to accomplish that end is to make it impossible, by law, for a human being in this country to profiteer during war, and to serve notice in advance that no human being can possibly make huge profits out of the miseries of his fellows.

A companion to the bill I am now introducing has this day been introduced in the House of Representatives by four Members. Therefore I now send the bill to the desk for appropriate reference, bearing as I have indicated the names of 50 Senators of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill introduced by the Senator from Washington will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 1885) to tax the profits out of war by steeply graduated income and other taxes in order to provide for effective national defense, to promote peace, to encourage actual neutrality, to discourage war profiteering, to distribute the burdens of war, to keep democracy alive, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. Bone (for himself, Mr. Clark of Missouri, Mr. Nye, Mr. Vandenberg, Mr. Barbour, Mr. George, Mr. Andrews, Mr. Ashurst, Mr. Bilbo, Mr. Brown, Mr. Bulow, Mr. Capper, Mr. Chavez, Mr. Clark of Idaho, Mr. DONAHEY, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. FRAZIER, Mr. GIBSON, Mr. GILLETTE, Mr. Gurney, Mr. Hatch, Mr. Herring, Mr. Hill, Mr. Holman, Mr. Holt, Mr. Hughes, Mr. Johnson of Colorado, Mr. La Fol-LETTE, Mr. LEE, Mr. LUNDEEN, Mr. McCARRAN, Mr. MALONEY, Mr. Murray, Mr. Neely, Mr. O'Mahoney, Mr. Pepper, Mr. Reed, Mr. Reynolds, Mr. Russell, Mr. Schwartz, Mr. Ship-STEAD, Mr. SMATHERS, Mr. STEWART, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. Tobey, Mr. Truman, Mr. Van Nuys, Mr. Wagner, Mr. WHEELER, and Mr. WILEY), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

EDUCATION OF PHYSICALLY HANDICAPPED CHILDREN-AMENDMENT

Mr. WILEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 795) to provide for the education of all types of physically handicapped children, to make an appropriation of money therefor, and to regulate its expenditure, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

On motion by Mr. Logan, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1840) for the relief of Mrs. Mance Hardy, and it was referred to the Committee on Finance.

ANNA RYAN AND ELEANOR RYAN MILLER

Mr. ASHURST submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 109), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate hereby is authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate to Anna Ryan and Eleanor Ryan Miller, only children of Theresa Ryan, late an assistant clerk to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, a sum equal to 6 months' compensation at the rate she was receiving by law at the time of her death, said sum to be considered inclusive of funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolutions were severally read twice by their titles and referred or ordered to be placed on the calendar as indicated below:

H. R. 159. An act to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the naturalization of certain women born in Hawaii," approved July 2, 1932;

LXXXIV-191

THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION—CORRESPONDENCE WITH COLONEL HARRINGTON

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks recent correspondence I have had with Col. F. C. Harrington, Administrator of the Works Progress Administration. This includes my letter to him of February 13, 1939, together with his reply of February 14; my letter to him of February 18 and his reply of February 23; my letter to him of February 24 and his reply of March 7, together with general letter No. 240 of March 7, which Colonel Harrington addressed to all State Works Progress administrators on the subject of political activity.

There being no objection, the correspondence was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 13, 1939.

Col. F. C. HARRINGTON

Administrator, Works Progress Administration

Washington, D. C.

Administrator, Works Progress Administration,
Washington, D. C.

Dear Colonel Harrington: As you doubtless know, I have sought a thoroughgoing investigation of W. P. A. during the last 3 years and it has consistently been denied. I introduced an amendment to the deficiency appropriation bill which would have made possible the payment of $150,000,000 conditioned only by a nonpartisan investigation of W. P. A. I believe that such an investigation could easily result in a great saving to our taxpayers. I am thoroughly convinced that the partisan administration of social-security legislation, of which P. W. A. and W. P. A. are a part, should have no place or standing whatsoever.

I am proposing that the conditions of partisanship in W. P. A. administration in Pennsylvania calls for a thoroughgoing investigation. A State-wide committee of 15 people should be selected for this work outside of your own W. P. A. organization, looking to the reorganization of W. P. A. in Pennsylvania. These 15 people should be recommended by the two United States Senators and other leading citizens. Not more than one-half of the committee should belong to any one party and not more than one-half of the committee should represent actively any political party point of view. The committee might well be called the "Pennsylvania W. P. A. Reorganization Committee."

In each congressional district a similar committee should be set up to assist the work of the State committee. The appointment should proceed from the Congressmen irrespective of party and should be as completely nonpartisan as the State committee itself. Skilled investigators of your own, those you know to be reliable and competent, should be used throughout.

The purposes of the investigation should be:

1. To determine those of adequate income now on W. P. A., who do not need its assistance.

2. To determine the administrative costs of work relief in Penn-do not need its assistance.

2. To determine the administrative costs of work relief in Pennsylvania since its inception.

3. To avoid duplication of appointment.

4. To determine the private activities of W. P. A. political appointee

5. To obtain the names, address, and salaries of all administrative heads of W. P. A. in Pennsylvania since the beginning, including everyone whose salary has exceeded $93.50 a month.

I should like to have your thought in this matter at the very earliest possible time.

I should also like to know according to your present records:

How many persons are on W. P. A. at the present time throughout the country as a whole?

How many do you anticipate will be on the rolls April 1. How many will be continued on the rolls in event an additional $150,000,000 is made available to W. P. A.?

How many will lose their jobs irrespective of an additional appropriation?

Thanking you for this information, I am Most cordially yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS, United States Senator.

Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., February 14, 1939.

The Honorable James J. Davis,
United States Senate.

United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Davis: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of February 13, 1939, relative to an investigation of the Works Progress Administration rolls in Pennsylvania.

An investigation as to the need of persons on the Works Progress Administration program is required by the provisions of Public Resolution No. 1, and is now under way. This is to be completed in the field by March 25, so that the results will be available by the time that the matter of an appropriation for the Works Progress Administration for the fiscal year 1940 is under discussion by the Congress.

I am rather loath at this time to complicate the situation by starting another investigation along the lines described in your letter. We shall have more information on which to base a decision as to our future action after the work that is now under way has been carried to completion.

The answers to the questions which you asked in the latter part of your letter are as follows:

(a) The total number of persons on the Works Progress Adminis-

(a) The total number of persons on the Works Progress Administration program, and projects financed from Works Progress Administration appropriation was 2,963,926 on February 11, which is the latest date for which I have a report.

(b) I anticipate that the number on the rolls on April 1 will be approximately 3,000,000.

(c) If an additional $150,000,000 is made available to the Works Progress Administration in the current fiscal year, the number that will be continued on the rolls after April 1 will be an average of 2,900,000 in April, 2,800,000 in May, and 2,700,000 in June. This would reduce the rolls by the end of June to approximately 2,650,000.

(d) The number that will lose their jobs, even if an additional appropriation is made, as indicated by the figures given in (c) above, will be approximately 350,000.

Sincerely yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON, Administrator.

Col. F. C. HARRINGTON,
Works Progress Administration,

Works Progress Administration, Washington, D.C.

Dear Colonel Harrington: This will acknowledge your letter of February 14 in reply to questions I sent you in my letter of February 13. I deeply appreciate the promptness with which you have answered my letter and the frank, direct way in which you have answered my questions. This efficiency and candor stand in marked contrast to the way in which my reasonable desire for information was met by your predecessor. Moreover, it gives me reason to believe that we are on our way to the nonpartisan administration of public work which we have so long sought. And if this shall be the case you may be sure I shall lose no opportunity to bring your cooperative spirit to the attention of the people.

tunity to bring your cooperative spirit to the attention of the people.

You say that you would not wish to complicate the investigation of W. P. A. you are now conducting with that which I have proposed. This seems entirely reasonable to me because, as you say, your own investigation will be concluded by March 25. Would it not then be possible to have public hearings in Pennsylvania under the supervision of a nonpartisan board of 15 eminent citizens? Fourteen of these citizens, representing the clergy, labor, and industry, rather than political parties could be selected by you from a panel which several of us might present to you. These 14 could then name a fifteenth to serve as chairman. Your own trained investigators could bring in witnesses. Under the supervision of this board, hearings could be held in various cities and communities of the State for the purpose of clearing up local difficulties. Sooner or later I believe this will be done throughout the country for the nonpartisan supervision of W. P. A. I believe to be inevitable. Pennsylvania would be a good place to begin. I shall be glad to cooperate with you for this purpose in every possible way.

Cordially yours,

Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., February 23, 1939.

Washington, D. C., February 23, 1939.

The Honorable James J. Davis,
United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Davis: Thank you for your letter of February 18 in response to mine of February 14.

I assure you that it is my desire that the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania, and elsewhere, shall be so conducted that the public may have full knowledge of its operations, to which it is certainly entitled. If at a later date you feel that an investigation of the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania would be helpful, I shall be very glad to discuss the matter with you in detail. However, I do not feel that I can make a definite commitment on this matter pending the completion of the current investigation of the need of persons who are on the relief rolls. I am also desirous of carrying to completion certain organizational am also desirous of carrying to completion certain organizational and procedural changes in the operation of the Works Progress Administration which are being put in effect throughout the United States.

I appreciate your offer of cooperation. Sincerely yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON, Administrator,

FEBRUARY 24, 1939.

Col. F. C. HARRINGTON,

Administrator, Works Progress Administration

Dear Colonel Harrington: I have your gracious letter of February 23. I appreciate your desire to correct abuses in W. P. A. You will understand my desire in this matter is thoroughly nonpartisan. This is an off-election year and inasmuch as a thorough nonpartisan investigation of W. P. A. and its past activities is inevitable, I thought it best to get it out of the way at

I know the pressures that will be brought to delay such an investigation. But please do not put it off. It will take time to get the necessary lists of names of officials and witnesses and the sconer this is started the better it will be for the country as a whole. Your leadership to this end will be appreciated by all the people, including a great majority of W. P. A. workers themselves.

You can even now find instances of gross abuses in many parts of Pennsylvania. I call your attention to the way the cafeteria is being operated in the project building at Pittsburgh. I have scores of letters showing relatives of high officials on W. P. A. rolls, whose salaries cannot be justified under the original purpose of W. P. A.

of W. P. A.

You will recognize that it will not be possible forever to cover up these abuses and I have every confidence you do not wish or expect to make yourself party to a whitewash. A nonpartisan investigation by citizens outside of W. P. A. is essential. I ask your cooperation for it now.

Cordially yours,

Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., March 7, 1939.

The Honorable James J. Davis, United States Senate.

My Dear Senator Davis: I have given very thoughtful consideration to your further letter of February 24, 1939, relative to your proposal for an investigation of the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania. I am, however, unable to change my previous opinion that such an investigation would not serve any useful pur-opinion that such an investigation would not serve any useful purpose at this time.

The administrative burden now imposed upon the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania in carrying out the provisions of recently enacted Public Resolution No. 1 is very heavy, and to impose a State-wide investigation on top of this would greatly complicate the situation. This is particularly true as you propose that the investigation be made by persons outside the Works Progress Administration, who therefore would be unfamiliar with its policies and procedures and would not be able to accomplish a great deal without a large amount of aid from our administrative personnel in the State.

The responsibility for conducting the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania rests definitely on me, and I have an administrative chain of organization which I feel to be fully competent to investigate any matters which require such investigation. I also wish to assure you that I will be glad at any time to look into any questions or complaints which you may bring to my attention.

attention.

There is a further consideration that the Works Progress Administration is a Federal agency, and I therefore believe that if it is to be investigated by a committee of private individuals, this should be done only if authorized and required by the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

F. C. HARRINGTON. Administrator.

General Letter No. 240.

To: All State Works Progress administrators.

Subject: Political activity.

Public Resolution No. 1, Seventy-sixth Congress, approved February 4, 1939, provides in sections 3 (a), 3 (b), and 5 (a) as follows:

"SEC. 3. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, directly or indirectly, to promise any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, or any other act of the Congress to any person as consideration, favor, or reward for any political activity or for the support of or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

"SEC. 3. (b) It shall be unlawful for any person to deprive, attempt to deprive, or threaten to deprive by any means any person of any employment, position, work, compensation, or other benefit provided for or made possible by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution on account of race, creed, color, or any political activity, support of, or opposition to any candidate or any political party in any election.

"SEC. 5. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person knowingly to solicit, or knowingly be in any manner concerned in soliciting, any assessment, subscription, or contribution for the campaign expenses of any individual or political party from any person entitled to or receiving compensation or employment provided for by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution."

Public Resolution No. 1 in sections 3 (c) and 5 (b) provides the following penalty for any person found guilty of violating the above-quoted sections:

"Any person who knowingly violates any provision of this section shall be guilty of a felony and, upon conviction, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, not in substitution."

Public Resolution No. 1, Seventy-sixth Congress, in section 4 (a) and 4 (b) provides that:

"Sec. 4. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person employed in any administrative or supervisory capacity by any agency of the Federal Government, whose compensation or any part thereof is paid from funds authorized or appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution, to use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. While such persons shall retain the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, they shall take no active part in political management or in political campaigns.

"Sec. 4. (b) Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be immediately removed from the position or office held by him, and thereafter no part of the funds appropriated by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 or this joint resolution shall be used to pay the compensation of such person. The provisions of this section shall be in addition to, not in substitution for, any other sections of existing law, or of this joint resolution."

Intion."

The term "administrative or supervisory capacity" as used in section 4 (a) is interpreted to include persons paid on administrative, general project supervisory, or project pay rolls, who have actual supervision over any other employee or employees or who are in such position that by reason thereof they may exercise authority or influence over other employees irrespective of whether they have actual supervision over the work of any employees.

Any person in an administrative or supervisory capacity who violates the provisions of section 4 (a) shall be subject to immediate discharge and thereafter such person shall not be eligible for any employment which is compensated from funds appropriated to the Works Progress Administration. Where alleged violations of section 4 (a) of Public Resolution No. 1 are investigated by the State administrator, a copy of the report of each administrative investigation, together with a report on the administrative action taken as a result of the findings of each investigation, shall be forwarded to the Deputy Administrator, Works Progress Administration, Washington, D. C., immediately upon completion of the inquiry.

inquiry.

To carry out rules and regulations relating to political activity and to effect compliance with the provisions of the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1938 and of Public Resolution No. 1, Seventy-sixth Congress, no person employed by the Works Progress Administration in an administrative or supervisory capacity as defined above shall be retained in such employment if—

(1) Such person is a candidate for any Federal, State, district, county, or municipal office in any primary, general, or special election, or who is serving as a campaign manager or assistant thereto for any such candidate.

(2) Such person is holding an elective office the duties of which would necessitate being absent from a W. P. A. position during regular working hours or to which a salary in excess of $200 per year is attached, provided that under no circumstances shall such person hold any public office through which such person would be involved in political management or political campaigns.

(3) Such person is a member of a party committee or organization the duties of which are concerned with political management or political campaigns.

or political campaigns.

The policy of the Works Progress Administration concerning the exercise of the voting franchise by W. P. A. employees remains as Follows:

Every citizen who works for the Works Progress Administration, whatever his job, has a right to vote in any election for any candidate he chooses. When the hours during which polling places are open or any other conditions prevent employees from freely exercising their voting privileges, scheduled hours of work may be adjusted to provide the necessary time for this purpose. Employees shall not be paid for time allowed during which to vote, but they shall be permitted, insofar as practicable through a rescheduling of working hours, to work their full quota of hours during the pay-roll month for which the time off is granted.

The regulations prescribed by this general letter shall be effective immediately and State administrators are directed to take such action as may be required to effect compliance with these provisions. In order that these regulations shall be known by all W. P. A. employees and by other persons, the State works-progress administrators shall arrange to have copies posted on bulletin boards at the site of every project and at all administrative offices throughout the State.

PENNSYLVANIA'S REPRESENTATION AT NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, as part of my remarks, a statement, dated March 10, 1939, by Mrs. Barclay H. Warburton, chairman of the Pennsylvania Women's Committee for the World's Fair. This statement shows an unexplained insult to the Pennsylvania Women's Committee for the World's Fair. Moreover, it calls attention to the desire of the respectable citizens of Pennsylvania that any representation made of our State at the World's Fair shall possess the dignity and the respect which our citizens as a whole have a right to expect in such an exhibit. I am confident the representative citizens of Pennsylvania do not desire our exhibit at the New York World's Fair to degenerate into a hamburger parlor.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MRS. BARCLAY H. WARBURTON, CHAIRMAN OF THE PENN-SYLVANIA WOMEN'S COMMITTEE FOR THE WORLD'S FAIR, RECEIVED OVER THE TELEPHONE FROM HER WINTER HOME IN PALM BEACH, FLA., ON FRIDAY, MARCH 10, AND ISSUED TO THE NEWSPAPERS

The women officially appointed in Pennsylvania to participate in the New York World's Fair have been completely ignored. They have never been consulted; they have never been contacted by the Governor's commission; they have never been asked to express an opinion; they have never been invited to sit in on conferences; they have never received a single communication concerning the exhibit; and so the women of Pennsylvania are in no way responsible for the atrocity which has been perpetrated in the name of this State.

name of this State.

The women of the advisory committee, of which I am chairman, want it to be known that they have had no part whatever in the planning and execution of the Pennsylvania exhibit at the World's Fair. Although invited officially to participate, more than 100 leading and representative women of Pennsylvania have been left completely out in the cold.

My Pennsylvania associates have done nothing in connection with this exhibit. We have done nothing for reasons that will be quite apparent. I was appointed chairman by Grover Whalen and Mrs. Vincent Astor, with the request that I should select women in the various counties of the State who would function as a committee working in conjunction with the commission appointed by Gov. George Earle.

Viewing this as a civic duty to be assumed, I went ahead and George Earle.

Viewing this as a civic duty to be assumed, I went ahead and appointed the committee. They were actuated by a sincere desire to do something that would really contribute to the fair and something which could be a proper and creditable contribution from our State. These names were sent to Governor Earle's commission in June 1938, but until now we have had no communication from that commission, nor have we been requested to attend any meeting other than one which I individually was asked to attend at the executive mansion in Harrisburg last June.

We have never been requested to make any suggestions as to the character or architecture of the building nor consulted about details of the interior furnishing. Of course, we had no official State status, but the Governor's commission had notice of the existence of the women's committee.

tails of the interior furnishing. Of course, we had no official State status, but the Governor's commission had notice of the existence of the women's committee.

The women of Pennsylvania would have taken a much greater interest if they had been invited to sit in on official conferences when the plans were drawn. When I attended Governor Earle's meeting we weren't asked anything. We were told. Mrs. Huberta Earle, chairman of the State commission, did her best to prevent the original plans from being carried out as suggested, but apparently the commission paid no more attention to her wishes than they did to the women of the State.

Mr. Irwin D. Wolf, the secretary, promised he would notify me when meetings were to be held so that I might be present. I have since learned that many meetings were held but that I was never notified. To make criticism of the exhibit now would accomplish little or no good. The duplication of the State house, no matter how badly bungled it may be, is an accomplished fact. The interior decorations of the building are probably already definitely determined by the New York architects whom the Governor employed. If that is so, criticism would be worthless.

I feel that I can confidently state that the representative women from all parts of the State who accepted posts on the committee resent, as I do, the deliberate and insufferable affront we have received at the hands of the State commission. Nevertheless, these women are still willing to give their best efforts to redeem, if possible, the glaring errors which now threaten our State's exhibit.

We do not want the great industrial State of Pennsylvania to be blazoned before the country as a beer and hamburger parlor in a pseudohistorical setting.

REORGANIZATION OF EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4425) to provide for reorganizing agencies of the Government, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I propose to make a few observations on the pending bill. A year ago I had occasion to address the Senate on a similar reorganization bill. I desire at this time, in a measure, to reiterate some of the arguments advanced by me when I spoke in favor of the said reorganization bill which the Senate passed last year, and to take exception to the position of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] with respect to their assertion that the Congress will surrender its legislative powers to the executive branch of our Government by enacting the pending bill; that should the bill pass, the President would have the authority to actually abolish departments of government created by the Congress.

I quote an excerpt from the speech delivered yesterday by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER]:

The West is vitally interested in reclamation; it is vitally interested likewise in the Forest Service, because of the vast forests in the West. In the House of Representatives there are, relatively speaking, few Members from the West, because the Western States are sparsely settled. Legislation affecting that section, to do away with the Reclamation Bureau, might very easily be passed by the Congress of the United States, because I would say that a large part of the Eastern States are opposed to irrigation and reclamation.

Suppose, however-

that the House approved a reorganization plan doing away with irrigation and reclamation, and it came over to the Senate of the United States, and because of the numerical strength of the West in the United States Senate we said, "We will not approve it." It would still be the law of the land, notwithstanding the fact that both branches of the Congress had not approved that particular legislating the same of the congress had not approved that particular legislation.

In other words, the Senator from Montana takes the position that should the President attempt to reorganize the Forest Service or the Reclamation Bureau, he is given the right to abolish the substantive part of the law creating those services. I take issue with that contention. The only thing the President could do under this bill would be simply to transfer from one agency to another the administrative feature of those laws, the execution of those laws.

After all, the President of the United States is the chief administrator of our laws. We look to him for the execution of all of our laws. The only authority that is granted to the President of the United States under this bill is simply and solely to group, coordinate, and consolidate some of the executive agencies; that is all. And that function must be exercised by him under certain conditions specified in the bill and-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope the Senator is correct; but I ask that he clarify for me subsection (4) of section 1, on page 2, in which the authority is given-

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary.

It occurred to me that the abolition of the functions would be taking away the power of the agencies to do those things; and I should be very glad to have the Senator assure me that I am wrong in that interpretation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield, in keeping with the question propounded by the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield. Does the Senator's inquiry pertain to the same question?

Mr. McCARRAN. The same question. In other words, would not the Executive be authorized, in abolishing the functions, to abolish all the facilities and all the operations of every department that he might see fit that were not necessary? I am using the last words of the expression read by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ELLENDER. That could happen if it were necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government. It may be true that that would be necessary.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. Will the Senator yield for one more question, please, in keeping with the former one? Then I shall not interrupt the Senator again.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield. Mr. McCARRAN. Would it not be, then, a mere question of the judgment of the Executive as to whether or not that function or that facility was necessary?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; it would be. To the extent, of course, that such would be necessary in order to carry out a plan of reorganization of the executive agencies affected.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. One more question right at that point: Then the Executive's judgment could not be interfered with at all by Congress. Is not that true?

Mr. ELLENDER. True, as to the administrative feature of the law, but not as to the carrying out of the substantive part of the law. Should we in Congress enact certain legislation, and let us say that in such legislation we delegate to a commission the authority to carry out the will of the Congress, as is the case with respect to T. V. A., for example, which was mentioned on the floor of the Senate on two or three occasions; the President would have the right to shift the duty now imposed on the directors of T. V. A. to some other agency to carry out the will of the Congress; but he would not have the right to annul the substantive portion of the Tennessee Valley Authority. In other words, reorganization would be limited to the administrative features of a

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Is it not the Senator's judgment that the President's power would be limited to the elimination of agencies? It does not extend to the elimination of functions; but only those agencies will be retained that will accomplish the functions. The President would not abolish the functions themselves.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; it would lead to this: The President would abolish the executive agency whose duties would be transferred to another existing executive agency or department in order that the will of the Congress can be carried out. The President could even transfer certain administrative functions, or even abolish some that would not be necessary, just so long as he carries out the substantive part of the law. That is all that would happen.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is it not true that the language read to the Senator from Louisiana by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams] carries with it not only an implication but an absolute, direct, and positive authority that not only may the function be abolished but the function may be abolished so far as the Executive may deem it necessary to abolish it?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes; as I pointed out to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], so long as the will of Congress is carried out.

Mr. McCARRAN. The will of Congress has already been expressed by the creation of these functions and by the creation of these agencies. After the will of Congress has been expressed in creating these agencies and in creating these functions, nevertheless they will be abolished by one individual, whomsoever he may be, without Congress having an opportunity again to pass upon the matter.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, if an agency of the Interior Department can carry out administrative functions which are now vested in the Agricultural Department, let us say, what difference does it make which department carries out the will of Congress?

Mr. McCARRAN. Just the difference between congressional action and no congressional action; that is the difference. In other words, congressional action is the will of the people, and the will of the people is the sovereign, because in a democracy the people are always the sovereign. The Senator from Louisiana is addressing himself to the idea that the sovereign has resigned, and many of us in the past have been addressing ourselves to the idea that the sovereign in this country has resigned and has become the elected executive head of the Government.

The Senator has asked me a question. I desire to answer it at length. In other words, if the Senator's view has any cogency whatever, it means that Congress will resign its entire

Mr. ELLENDER. What function?

Mr. McCARRAN. Although for 50 years last past it has exercised that function of legislating for the people whom the Congress represents. That is the answer to the Senator's question, "What function?"

Going on again, if we carry out the provisions of this bill as it is now presented, we shall entirely resign every power that Congress has to maintain the instrumentalities of government which Congress during half a century has put on the statute books, after long and continuous debate on the floors of the two Houses of Congress; and we shall do more than that. We shall resign the right to pass upon the acts of the Executive, whomsoever he may be. This authority extends into 1941. Let me draw the attention of the able Senator from Louisiana to that fact. It extends into 1941. The Senator from Louisiana and some of the rest of us may be here then. There are others who may not be here. This authority extends to the point where the Senator, by reason of his party affiliation, will have no control over the acts of an Executive who may be here in 1941; and I am further answering the question of the Senator.

If democracy intends to remain in control of our Government, it is time for democracy to exert and assert itself through the will of its elected representatives. It is not a question of who may be sitting in the White House. It is not a question of who may be advising the able gentleman who sits in the White House. It is a question of when and where and how a democracy represented by the form of government we have in this country will resign its functions, and become subject to the will of one organization, or one individual advised by an organization that is not elected by the people.

That is the whole question involved here.

Mr. ELLENDER. I realize that, Mr. President. That is the issue that is causing most of the debate on this bill. I cannot help reiterating, however, that the only power given to the President of the United States by this bill, as I understand it, is simply to group, coordinate, and consolidate, under certain terms and conditions specified in the bill, certain governmental executive agencies. It is a question, not as to changing the substantive part of the law but as to the method of carrying out the law. I repeat, what difference does it make whether a law which was passed before the present Congress is administered by the Agricultural Department, the War Department, or the Interior Department, so long as the will of Congress is carried out. Let us not forget that the President is the chief administrator and executor of our laws and Congress looks to him to carry out the substantive part of all laws, except as to those which are selfoperative.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President-

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield to the Senator from Indiana. Mr. MINTON. Directing the Senator's attention to the argument of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] to the effect that by this bill Congress is surrendering its power as a legislative body, what we are doing here is saying to the President that he shall have authority to reorganize his own executive branches of government because the Congress does not feel that it is competent to do so. We are not doing anything differently than what we do when we create an Interstate Commerce Commission to pass upon the reasonableness of the rates of carriers. We say to the Interstate Commerce Commission, "You do this job, because it is too intricate a job for Congress to do." The job we turn over to the Federal Trade Commission, the job we turn over to the Civil Aeronautics Authority, is not a surrender of the sovereign power of Congress. It is only creating an agency to do that which Congress feels is too intricate for Congress to do by definitive legislation on the floor of Congress.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. And by the same token, since the President is the chief administrator of the laws enacted by the Congress, we are giving him the authority of facilitating his work in order that he may carry out the will of the Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question, not a speech. Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator asked for a speech before, and I gave it to him. I hope he will not ask for one again.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was rather interested.

Mr. McCARRAN. I call the Senator's attention to page 2, lines 9 to 13, which is subdivision (4):

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government.

I ask the able Senator from Louisiana, is it not true that involved in that very expression there is entirely delegated the right for whomsoever may carry these provisions out to exercise his or their individual judgment?

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly. Why should we not give that right to the President, when he is the chief administrator of our laws? We in the Congress established, for instance, the P. W. A. We say, in a measure, how the funds are to be distributed—for what purpose they are to be used. We have a yardstick in the law as to how the money is to be distributed. Suppose the President were given authority to change, let us say, by consolidating with another executive agency, the method of administering the law; what difference would it make, so long as the funds are distributed for the purposes indicated in the law and to the agencies entitled thereto.

Mr. McCARRAN. Who would give him the authority?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Congress, of course.

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly. Now let me go back to the first question.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is what we are doing here; we are doing that in this very bill. We are simply permitting the President to combine, to consolidate, these hundreds of bureaus and subdivisions which the Congress has been creating for the past hundred years or more.

Mr. McCARRAN. Now, let me go back to the Senator's question, "Who is the administrator of our laws?" That was the Senator's question. That implies the very thing I have been trying to put over to the Senator, that it is the law of Congress. In other words, it is our law. If we say that someone else shall have the right to make that law, then we have resigned our position.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator mean who should administer the law? Is that what is in the Senator's mind?

Mr. McCARRAN. No; it is our law. We created the law, and it is now our law. When someone else creates the law. or someone else carries out the provisions which we have not delegated to him, then it ceases to be our law.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I conclude this? I refer to the law of Congress.

Mr. ELLENDER. Let me ask the Senator a question. Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is very much interested | in reclamation and in reforestation.

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly. Mr. ELLENDER. I am using reclamation and reforestation in my example because the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] has referred to it many times.

Mr. McCARRAN. He referred to it entirely as an example. Mr. ELLENDER. Suppose the pending bill should be passed and the President should see fit to transfer the functions of the present administrator of the forestry law to some other executive agency.

Mr. McCarran. Yes. Mr. ELLENDER. Would the Senator conclude that the President would have the further right to abolish the law itself under the pending bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Certainly; the transfer of the functions is an abolition of the law.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is where the Senator and I differ. Mr. McCARRAN. Let me answer further. Congress created the Forest Service.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. Mr. McCARRAN. And Congress said what the functions of the Forest Service should be, and Congress said where those functions should be exercised. When some other agency than Congress attempts to do that which Congress did and which Congress alone has the right to abolish, then I say that we have resigned that which was our initiative in the first instance, and should be our function in the last.

Mr. ELLENDER. It does not follow that the consolidation of the administrative functions carries with it the right to annul that substantive portion of the law. I am sorry to disagree with the views taken by the Senator from Nevada [Mr.

McCARRAN].

Mr. McCARRAN. Of course, we do not agree.

Mr. ELLENDER. But it strikes me this way very forcibly, that we in the Congress have passed a law respecting reclamation and one respecting reforestation, and the only authority we are now giving to the President is to take those Departments, if he sees fit, and administer them by methods which will be better for the efficient conduct of the Government. We do not give him the right and the authority to abolish the Forest Service, the substantive part of the law. We are simply affecting the administrative features of the

Mr. McCARRAN. In keeping with that thought, let me read again to the Senator the language of the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator mean subdivision (4)?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes. Mr. ELLENDER. I am familiar with it. Mr. McCARRAN. Let me read it again:

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies.

"And to abolish such agencies."

Mr. ELLENDER. It would be necessary to abolish some. if the duties imposed were carried out by another executive agency or agencies.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will not the Senator wait for my question? I will ask the Senator, if he will kindly yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I am going to read again:

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies.

I will ask the Senator to please keep that in mind.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand.

Mr. McCARRAN. "Or such functions thereof." To abolish agencies and to abolish functions means to put an agency out of business, does it not?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct; absolutely correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. Then, let us go back to reclamation. To abolish reclamation, you put its functions out of business.

Mr. ELLENDER. No; he could transfer the administrative feature of the law to another agency, and if he did that he would have to abolish the administrative functions of that agency; necessarily so.

Mr. McCARRAN. Very well. If the Senator says that it will mean the abolition of the functions and an abolition of the agencies, the Senator has answered my question in the

Mr. ELLENDER. The transfer of the administrative functions, which is all it would mean. The question would always resolve itself as to who would administer the substantive portion of the law. That is all it would mean.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield there?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. It would be absurd to transfer a function to one agency, then leave the old agency existing from which we had transferred the function.

Mr. ELLENDER. Exactly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator along the line of the inquiry of the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. ELLENDER. Certainly. Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Why is the conjunction "or" instead of "and," if the Senator from Indiana is correct? If the conjunction were "and," the functions and the agency would go together; but the conjunction is "or," meaning a separation between the functions and the agency.

Mr. ELLENDER. It may be that we would want to transfer the functions of one agency to another agency. That would be possible under that interpretation of the bill. If we should use the conjunction "and," the President would have to abolish both the agency and the functions of the agency, but as the bill is written the President would have the right to say "Agency B, which administers the Forest Service, can be abolished"; that is, the agency itself; but the functions of it could be transferred to another agency to carry out the will of the Congress.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Does it not mean just what it states, that it gives the President broad powers over both the agencies and the functions? That is the way the bill reads, and I think that is the intent.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. I disagree with the Senator from Colorado on that point. It will remain true that if an agency is consolidated with another agency, it will be necessary that the one which is attached to the other agency would have to be abolished; would it not? It would necessarily follow that there would be one which would be a nominal agency, doing nothing, with a transfer of its functions to another agency-to do what? To carry out the will of the Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield. Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator undoubtedly, through history and otherwise, fully appreciates the expression "abolish." There was a time in history when that word was very much uppermost, so the Senator appreciates its import and its purport. Now let me read to the Senator again, and ask the Senator kindly to explain to the Senate what is meant by the term "to abolish such agencies or such functions." Does the word "abolish" mean what the Senator contemplates it means, and what all of us contemplate it meansto put out of business, to rub out, to exterminate?

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Does not that mean just what I suggested awhile ago, that if we abolish or transfer the performance of a certain function from Agency A to Agency B, then we will eliminate Agency A and the performance of that function which we transferred to Agency B?

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct.

Mr. MINTON. We do not eliminate the function in its entirety; we merely eliminate the agency of A to deal with the function which we transferred to B.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is all; that is exactly what I have been trying to convey to the Senate.

The distinguished junior Senator from Virginia IMr. Byrd] in a speech made some time ago with reference to the reorganization bill which was pending in the Senate last year, submitted these figures:

There have been at least 29 agencies concerned with lending Government funds according to reports taken from Government

All agencies created apparently for the same purpose. The pending bill would merely permit the President to eliminate probably 1, 2, 5, or 8, or perhaps 10, of these agencies—to do what? To carry out the will of the Congress as expressed in legislation, the substantive part of it, not the administrative feature of it, but the substantive part of the law.

I quote further from the speech of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrn]:

There have been at least three agencies concerned with insuring deposits and loans.

There have been at least 34 agencies concerned with the acquisition of land.

There have been at least 16 agencies concerned with wildlife preservation.

Let us suppose the President were to abolish all but one of those agencies. He could certainly do so under the provisions of the pending measure and still carry out the will of the Congress, and at the same time carry out the purpose for which the pending bill is being placed on the statute books.

I continue to read from the Senator's speech:

There have been at least 10 agencies concerned with Government construction.

Think of that. Senators:

There have been at least nine agencies concerned with credit and finance.

There have been at least a dozen agencis concerned with home and community planning.

There have been at least 10 agencies concerned with materials of construction.

There are more than two score personnel officers for the Government listed in Washington offices alone.

There are more than 100 information and publication offices in Federal agencies at Washington.

There are more than 100 Federal agency libraries in Washington besides the Library of Congress.

Just stop and think of that, Senators. More than 100 Federal agencies in the city of Washington deal with libraries. Why could not the whole system of libraries be placed under one or two executive departments and at the same time carry out the will of the Congress? Certainly the President would not be permitted under the bill, by which he is being given the right to reorganize the Government agencies, to abolish the functions of those libraries. That, to me, seems ridiculous.

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. LEE. What would happen to the Members of the Congress if we attempted to consolidate all those libraries in a bill on the floor of the Senate, and also on the floor of the House? Would not every one of the employees and all their friends and relatives and everyone they could influence be down on us, undertaking to influence us against doing that?

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand the Postal Telegraph Co. is now in receivership. If the Congress of the United States should try to reorganize every department of the Government, that telegraph company might get back on its feet because of the money it would make by virtue of the millions of telegrams which would be sent to each and every Senator, asking him not to vote to consolidate here or consolidate there. Senators, the question of reorganization of Government departments has been before the Congress for over 50 years. Someone has always advocated a plan of reorganization, but no Member of Congress has ever been able to put it through. In my opinion the trouble is that Congress has not the courage to reorganize the governmental agencies created by it.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder if the Senator is speaking of himself, and undoubtedly he is, when he says he has not the courage. I take it that we are all to be grouped with the able Senator from Louisiana. I wonder what the object of these telegrams is. Is the object to influence someone?

Mr. ELLENDER. I will leave it to the Senator to answer that question. Then he can ask another funny one.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator from Louisiana think that the Members of Congress are the only ones in the world who are susceptible to the influence coming through the voice of the people at home?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; of course not.
Mr. McCarran. Does the Senator from Louisiana believe that the executive department is not listening to and subject to pressure from abroad and at home as well?

Mr. ELLENDER. I believe it is. What we are doing here, in my humble opinion, is simply passing the buck. All we are doing is passing the buck to the President.

Mr. McCARRAN. Will the Senator yield for a further expression along that line?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield. Mr. McCARRAN. If that be true, then I say, with the Senator from Montana, that we do not seem to have the courage to assume and carry out our responsibility, and that there are those of us who are going to vote for the Wheeler amendment and propose to assert that courage and to carry out our responsibility, so that the executive department of the Government may be relieved of the responsibility which belongs to the legislative branch of the Government.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I said a while ago, it appears rather ridiculous to me when I read history and find the numerous efforts that have been made by this President and by that President to reorganize the governmental departments. Many Senators have spent months trying to devise some scheme whereby the Government departments could be reorganized. But the records fail to show, so far as I have been able to find, that any Congress has undertaken the reorganization of the executive departments. I may be wrong about that. I shall be glad to be corrected by any Senator who knows the contrary.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not know whether what I am about to say is in the nature of a correction, but in my experience in the past 6 years I am not aware of a single measure introduced in the Senate of the United States providing for any detailed reorganization of the Government. In other words, we have talked about plans as to who was to do it. We have discussed the question whether Congress should reorganize or the President should reorganize, but no Senator has ever introduced in the Senate a bill for reorganization.

Mr. ELLENDER. Why?

Mr. ADAMS. I cannot answer the Senator's question, "Why?" I am merely saying that it is not accurate to say that it cannot be done when it has never been tried.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Does the Senator from Louisiana know whether in recent years the Chief Executive has ever sent down in the form of a message a proposal to reorganize the Government bureaus and departments?

Mr. ELLENDER. My understanding is that was done in the early part of President Roosevelt's administration, when there was some law then in effect authorizing the President to consolidate or reorganize the departments.

Mr. BONE. The present President of the United States?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. That is my recollection.

Mr. BONE. Was that in the form of a Presidential mes-

Mr. ELLENDER. No.

Mr. BONE. Was it a mere general suggestion that Congress attempt to reorganize these departments and bureaus?

Mr. ELLENDER. No. As I recall it, an act was passed during the Hoover administration, and President Hoover, as I recall, submitted a plan of reorganization under that act. That plan was voted down by the Congress. The act in question, as I recall, was later amended—and I should like to be corrected if I am in error in what I am now saying—giving President Roosevelt a certain period in which to submit a reorganization plan, and I understand that the President did make several proposals which have been followed. In other words, his proposals became effective.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Louisiana, in view of his statement that there seems to be some doubt in his mind as to the procedure which was adopted, that I observed that the Senator from South Carolina IMr. Byrnes! entered the Chamber just at the time the Senator from Louisiana made his statement. The Senator from South Carolina is thoroughly familiar with the steps which were taken and the law which was passed. If the Senator from Louisiana desires an answer to his question, I am sure the Senator from South Carolina can give him full information about the subject.

Mr. ELLENDER. I will ask the Senator from South Carolina whether I stated correctly what has occurred. I gave my recollection of the situation.

Mr. BYRNES. I regret to say that I was not in the Chamber at the moment the Senator made the remarks to which he now refers.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Washington [Mr. Bone] asked whether or not any President ever submitted proposals for reorganization, and it is my recollection that in the latter part of the Hoover administration—

Mr. BYRNES. I will say to the Senator that in June 1932 a measure was passed by the Congress unanimously which gave to the President the power to sign an Executive order and send it to the Congress, and it became effective in 60 days, unless either House of Congress should disapprove. The House disapproved the only order that was sent by the previous President, Mr. Hoover.

Then on March 1, 1933, I offered an amendment to the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, which amendment provided that the law should become effective in 60 days, and there was no provision for any action by the Congress other than legislative action, which would be the passage of a joint resolution or a bill.

Then on April 20, in the Roosevelt administration, that law was amended, because under the proposal I had submitted, and which had been adopted unanimously in the Senate, the 60-day period ran only while the Congress was in session.

In April 1933 the law was amended so as to provide that when the President signed an order it became effective in 60 days, whether the Congress was in session or not. There were 12 votes in the Senate, and only 12, against that proposal. That was the law under which the President formed the Farm Credit Administration, and transferred the Shipping Board to the Department of Commerce, and signed about 32 other orders of reorganization.

Mr. ELLENDER. How did the procedure differ from that provided for in the pending bill, I will ask the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BYRNES. It differed from the procedure provided in the pending bill in this respect: Under that bill the Congress had no power to act, or to show its disapproval, except by passing a bill or joint resolution, which necessarily would have to go to the President for signature. The question that is now raised could have been raised then, that if the President vetoed the resolution or the bill, the Congress would have to override the veto by a two-thirds vote. Last year, when we had a proposal in the same language, the argument was made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Gillette], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Johnson] that that should not be done, because it required a two-thirds vote. The Democratic Members of the House, seeking to meet that objection, have taken the proposal first submitted by the three Senators I have named and put it into the bill to give the Congress, by a bare majority instead of a two-thirds vote, the right to disapprove any order of reorganization.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, may I again intrude at this point?

Mr. ELLENDER. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. BONE. I merely seek information. While the Senator from South Carolina is in the Chamber he probably can answer the question. I fear that I did not state it clearly. My question was, Has any President in recent years submitted to the Congress a concrete proposal in the form of a message in which he set out exactly what he proposed to do in the way of reorganizing departments, changing functions, and abolishing or changing the boundary lines of the departments, so that the Congress could have some actual piece of proposed legislation to work on?

As I recall from hearing the debates, the suggestion was that we authorize the President to make such changes; but I am wondering whether or not any President so far has ever come to Congress with a concrete proposal as to what he intended to do. I do not recall any such instance in my service in the Senate.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, the joint committee worked upon the matter for some years.

Mr. BONE. I know; but did the President himself suggest anything?

Mr. BYRNES. The President, urging reorganization, suggested the appointment of the committee. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison] and others served on the committee. After a year's work, the committee submitted a suggestion. On the committee there were three members of the President's Cabinet, representing the executive departments, together with Members of the Senate and House. The committee submitted to the Congress a plan which provided for the consolidation of various departments. President Harding submitted that plan to the Congress. It proposed quite a number of consolidations and mergers. However, just as soon as the plan had been submitted all the gentlemen who were affected by the mergers came to Congress as quickly as did the message; and nothing was done by the Congress.

The message to which I refer was submitted to Congress by President Harding. The Senator was asking for information. Of course, President Roosevelt, under the bill of 1933, to which I have previously referred, did submit to the Congress the orders he had signed. There were some 32 orders, abolishing various activities. Among the agencies abolished was one about which we used to joke in the Senate and House, the International Screw Thread Commission. At that time I did not know there was such a thing. A number of commissions were abolished, and other were transferred into departments. However, they did not amount to anything in comparison with the merger of the Farm Credit Administration, and the transfer of the Shipping Board to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from South Carolina does not say what I should like to have him say; that is, that the President actually acted in some specific instance. He did abolish the Shipping Board, and transferred the Shipping Board to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. BYRNES. I thought I said that.

Mr. BROWN. He did it under a law which gave Congress no authority whatever to act after his order came to Congress, except by a piece of legislation.

Mr. BYRNES. That is absolutely correct.

Does the Senator from Louisiana wish to ask me a question?
Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown] stated that there was a consolidation of two agencies. The Shipping Board was consolidated with some other agency. How was that consolidation accomplished? Was anything changed except the agency that was provided for in the act to administer its provisions? How was the change effected?

Mr. BYRNES. There was an order of abolition of the Shipping Board, and its functions were transferred to the Department of Commerce.

Mr. ELLENDER. Only the administrative function was transferred from one agency to the other.

Mr. BYRNES. Of course. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. And, in the Senator's opinion, that is all that the present bill seeks to do?

Mr. BYRNES. I think we have greatly exaggerated the importance of the matter. If we left in a department the power to go on and spend money, the department would come to the Appropriations Committee at the next session of Congress, and the Appropriations Committee would be met with a request for funds. After the transfer of the Shipping Board, its functions were exercised by the Department of Commerce. There were 27 orders signed. I will say to the Senator that I have a list of them before me.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not desire to retain the floor any longer, but, before closing my remarks, I wish to refer the Senate to section 1, outlining the purposes of the bill:

SECTION 1. (a) The President shall investigate the organization of all executive agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the following purposes:
(1) To reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with

(1) To recure expenditures to the different operation of the Government;
(2) To increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable within the revenues;
(3) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

The purpose of the bill is not to destroy; not to give the President the right, as it were, to nullify the substantive part of any act passed by Congress; but merely to change the agency or the administrative body to carry out the will of the Congress. That is all the present bill proposes.

I read section 4:

SEC. 4. Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that—
(a) the transfer of the whole or any part of any executive agency the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency; or

(b) the consolidation of the functions vested in any executive agency; or
(c) the abolition of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof, is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section

(d) prepare a reorganization plan for the making of the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions, as to which he has made findings and which he includes in the plan.

I invite the Senators to read section 1 of the bill in conjunction with section 4. It will be seen that the only power vested in the President is to change the administrative feature of the law. So far as the Congress is concerned, it makes no difference whether the administrative feature of a statute is carried out by, let us say, the Senator from Indiana, the Senator from Colorado, the Senator from South Carolina, or anyone else, for that matter. What the Congress is interested in is to see that the substantive part of the law is executed.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. MINTON. Suppose a business corporation were seeking to reorganize its own departments. Of course, the stockholders, the constituent elements of the corporation, would not be called in to do the job. Neither would the board of directors. I think the board of directors would probably authorize the president of the concern to go ahead and regroup the various agencies, and to reorganize his own concern. The board of directors would not undertake to do the job itself. It would do just what we are attempting to do; that is, authorize the executive of a great public corporation to reorganize and regroup the agencies for efficiency

Mr. ELLENDER. The power to reorganize would be delegated to the administrative head of the corporation, the exact thing that we are now trying to do in this bill. We are seeking to delegate to the President the powers of adjusting the administration of laws. I repeat, all the bill provides is to delegate to the President the power to group, coordinate, and consolidate executive agencies which have to do with the administration of the laws which we enact.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. It occurs to me that the Senator from Indiana has used a very unfortunate illustration. As a matter of fact, the president of a corporation is merely the agent of the board of directors. He can do nothing that the board of directors or the stockholders have not authorized him to do. Our Government is not analogous to a private corporation. The Constitution of the United States vests all executive powers in the President of the United States. No executive powers are vested in the president of a corporation, other than those given to him by the bylaws adopted by the stockholders or by the board of directors. So when the Senator says that the president of a corporation could decide such a matter I think he is mistaken. For example, if the president of the United States Steel Corporation wanted the Youngstown plant shut down, or wanted to build a new plant somewhere else, or wanted to stop making sheet steel somewhere, under normal corporate processes he would not have the authority to do it without going back to his board of directors. It seems to me the illustration is unfortunate. It does not go to the point which the Senator from Indiana wishes to reach.

Mr. MINTON. Of course, the Senator from Colorado and everybody else knows that the analogy is not complete. However, the analogy is complete to this extent: The President is the chief executive officer of the Nation. We sit as a board of directors in this instance. We tell him what to do administratively with reference to the various agencies, boards, and bureaus. When the President acts, he does so under a delegation of authority from the Congress of the United States, just as the board of directors might authorize the president of a corporation to act. The President of the United States cannot act beyond the authority we give him in this bill any more than the president of a corporation can act beyond the authority given him by the board of directors of the corporation.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt once more?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. There is one other difference. The board of directors of a corporation may delegate the making of rules; they may delegate the establishment of policies. United States Constitution vests all legislative powers conferred by the Constitution in the Congress. The Congress cannot delegate legislative powers to the Executive. Under this bill we cannot delegate legislative powers. That is beyond any question. We can delegate the administration of legislative powers, but we must legislate, and the Executive must carry out the law.

Mr. ELLENDER. Is not the Congress, in the long run, interested in seeing that its will is carried out, insofar as the substantive part of the law is concerned, and not as concerns the administrative feature of it?

Mr. ADAMS. Certainly.

Mr. ELLENDER. Very well; if that be true, what difference, may I ask again, does it make whether an established department that we created administers the act, or that we authorize the President to transfer the functions of that administrative agency to another administrative agency, in order to carry out the purposes of the law? What difference does it make?

Mr. ADAMS. I am merely trying to make the point that, of course, in the creation of a Cabinet position we cannot delegate legislative power. Suppose we decided we wanted a secretary of public welfare and we wanted to fix his salary and his functions; would not that be legislation? Could we delegate to the President authority to create any executive department of the Government that he thought would be for the welfare of the Government?

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the pending bill he is not permitted to do that, as I construe the pending bill.

Mr. ADAMS. May I ask the Senator could we delegate such a power?

Mr. ELLENDER. No; I do not think we could.

Mr. ADAMS. If we create a department within our legislative power, could we delegate to the President authority to abolish the department which we had created?

Mr. ELLENDER. The administrative features, yes; provided the administrative functions of the abolished agency are carried out by some other existing administrative agency. Mr. ADAMS. I mean the department and its functions.

Mr. ELLENDER. That raises the same question the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran] raised awhile ago, that this bill does not give the President the right to abolish anything but the administrative feature and not a substantive part of the law. It simply gives the President the right to say that, instead of the agency that we created under say, Senate bill 14, we are going to permit another agency to carry out the functions of that law. That is all the present legislation proposes, and nothing else.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado stated that Congress cannot give to anybody the power to make rules.

Mr. ADAMS. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Mr. MINTON. I misunderstood the Senator if he did not say that.

Mr. ADAMS. I did not say that.

Mr. MINTON. Then I misunderstood the Senator, because the Senator knows and everyone else knows that we

Mr. ELLENDER. I now yield the floor to the Senator from New Mexico, who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Louisiana and other Senators. I desire to speak very briefly upon a matter which has arisen in the debate on the pending bill. Yesterday a great deal was said about democracy and the course this country has been taking by the pending and similar legislation, and comparisons were made on the floor of the Senate of the course of the present administration and the course of the German Government. During the debate yesterday the statement was made that-

The Reichstag of Germany granted Chancelor Bruening the legislative power and right to issue decrees.

In reply to that statement which was made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Shipstead], as I recall, the Senator from Maryland said:

I thank the Senator for his contribution. Yes; just as we are doing here the Reichstag of Germany did under Mr. Bruening. It gave him the right to issue temporary decrees in his name; but that is not the American system of government.

The statement that the Reichstag had granted the power to Chancelor Bruening under which he issued executive decrees was to me rather startling. I had not so understood the situation. To clarify the matter I asked the Senator from Maryland if such a method of government—that is, the issuance of executive decrees-had not arisen by virtue of the constitutional authority. I asked the specific question:

Was it not a constitutional right?

To which the Senator from Maryland replied:

No. The Constitution of Weimar was a democratic constitution, which lodged the legislative power in the Reichstag, or the German Congress.

Except for the fact, Mr. President, that constant reference has been made on the floor to the similarity of action we are taking in this bill and in others to the action and the course of events which took place in Germany, by which democratic government broke down and the rule of the dictator became supreme, this matter perhaps would not be important; but, to my mind, today it is important. I see no similarity between the proceedings which have occurred under the present administration and the events which took place by which constitutional government in Germany came to an end.

In order to keep the record straight, Mr. President, I made a hurried search last night, and I desire to place in the Record today something about the history and development of the executive decrees in Germany. First of all, I desire to quote article 48 of the German Constitution, to which the Senator from Maryland referred. That article reads:

In the event of a State not fulfilling the duties imposed on it by the Constitution or the laws of the Reich, the President of the Reich may make use of the armed forces to compel it to do so.

Where public security and order are seriously disturbed or in danger within the Reich, the President of the Reich may take the measures necessary for their restoration, intervening in case of need with the help of armed forces. For this purpose he is permitted, for the time being, to abrogate either wholly or partially the funda-mental rights laid down in articles 114, 115, 117, 118, 123, 124,

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HATCH. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is not drawing the parallel which he originally started to draw. The President, under the Constitution of Weimar, was empowered to issue decrees. To quote the exact language of the constitution:

Where public security and order are seriously disturbed or en-dangered within the Reich, the President of the Reich may take the measures necessary for their restoration, intervening in case of need with the help of armed forces.

The President of the United States can do that in cases when security is affected and there is serious disorder.

For this purpose he is permitted, for the time being, to abrogate either wholly or partially the fundamental rights laid down in article 114—

And so forth.

Mr. HATCH. I am going to read from those articles in just

Mr. TYDINGS. I am dealing with what the Senator has read. So is the Governor of every State empowered to declare martial law in a period of great emergency and make the military for the moment dominant over the civil.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator will be patient-

Mr. TYDINGS. I will be patient. Mr. HATCH. Until I read from the other articles mentioned, I think that statement will hardly be justified.

The President of the Reich must, without delay, inform the Reichstag of any measures taken in accordance with paragraphs 1 or 2 of this article. Such measures shall be abrogated upon the demand of the Reichstag.

Where there is danger in delay, the State government may take provisional measures of the kind indicated in paragraph 2 for its own territory. Such measures shall be abrogated upon the demand of the President of the Reich or the Reichstag.

That is the constitutional provision to which I referred on yesterday, which indicates that Chancelor Bruening exercised his power to issue executive decrees by virtue of constitutional authority.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has stated, of course, a fact, but he has neglected to cover within the scope of the fact as stated all the circumstances. It is one thing to issue decrees in the face of national disturbance; it is another thing to quell that disturbance and to reestablish order; it is another thing to issue decrees dealing with religion, with taxes, with money, with conscription in the Army, with public works, and a variety of matters which have not the slightest reference, to quote the words of the authority, to public security and order when seriously threatened.

To say that Mr. Hitler in following the example of Mr.

Bruening

Mr. HATCH. No, he did not; there is a difference there, as I will point out later.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the point I made yesterday was that Mr. Bruening started to issue decrees which had for their purpose the restoration of public security and order, and that when Mr. Hitler came into power he used the example of Mr. Bruening to work out by decree matters which had formerly been determined by the German Reichstag. I do not see up to this time that I am basically wrong in the statement I made.

Mr. HATCH. As I recall, the first emergency which arose which caused the issuance of an executive decree by Chancelor Bruening was the fact that the Reichstag had failed to approve the budget as submitted by the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think that is true.

Mr. HATCH. The Reichstag was dissolved, and, by executive decree, the same budget was put into effect.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but the Senator will be fair. Mr. HATCH. I want to be fair. That is the reason why I brought the authority with me.

Mr. TYDINGS. I know that. There is no fairer man on the floor of the Senate than the Senator from New Mexico, and I do not say that idly. I believe that to be true.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TYDINGS. To use the exact words of the German Constitution, when may the President of Germany, under the Constitution of Weimar, issue a decree?-

Where public security and order are seriously disturbed or en-dangered within the Reich, the President of the Reich may take the measures necessary for their restoration.

The Governor of every American State has the right to take measures under his police power. He may call out the militia. He may declare martial law in the area where the disorder exists. The President of the United States may do it. So we are really debating here the police powers of Germany, which have nothing to do with the ordinary routine operations of government by decree.

In the latter part of Mr. Bruening's administration, however—and, as I said yesterday, in my opinion he was a good man, and sought only to bridge over an emergency-his decrees took on wider and wider scope, away beyond, in my judgment, the authority conferred on him by the Constitution, because many of those decrees did not deal primarily with disturbance and lack of security in the German Reich.

Then, when Mr. Hitler came in, what he found Mr. Bruening could do he has done on an ever-widening scale.

My thought was, as I expressed it yesterday-and with this statement I shall conclude—that we talk about the government of one man, the great power he has, and the world disaster and misery that follow in the wake of the exercise of power by one man without legislative restraint, and then in the very next breath, here in our own Congress, we confer power on the President of the United States and imitate the very example we formerly condemned.

Mr. HATCH. If I may proceed, I am really more interested in the historical discussion of the subject than in attempting to prove that the Senator from Maryland was right or wrong on the constitutional question.

Mr. TYDINGS. I appreciate that fact.

Mr. HATCH. But the reference in the Constitution to certain other articles intrigued my interest, and I looked at

In those articles it will be observed that by the executive decree authorized by article 48, the President of the Reich may abrogate in whole or in part rights laid down in the subsequent articles. Articles 114 to 118 are comparable to our own Bill of Rights. They assert the inviolability of personal liberty. They declare "the residence of every German is an inviolable sanctuary for him." No punishment may be inflicted for any action unless it was designated by law as a crime before the act was passed. In other words, there shall be no ex post facto law, in effect.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Without getting into the field of academic debate, I am sure the Senator will not deny that frequently, when disturbances break out in a State in which it is necessary to call out the armed forces, the Bill of Rights, as we know it, does not exist, because everything gives way to the restoration of order.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is talking of a military government, not a civil government.

Mr. TYDINGS. The German constitution says action may be taken even to the extent of calling out the armed forces.

Mr. HATCH. To enforce these rights; but the President of the Reich may set them aside by executive decree without any armed force.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is absolutely true; but he may do it only when the security of the people is endangered, or if there is disturbance.

Mr. HATCH. When there is an emergency, in other words.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. HATCH. That, in substance, is what the Constitution of Germany says, and it has always been so treated.

Mr. TYDINGS. In my remarks yesterday I think the Senator will remember that I pointed out over and over again that there was no emergency calling for reorganization in the sense in which we are using the word here. There is no foreign army at Bladensburg; the banks are open; the farmers will not get any more for their wheat than they are going to get anyway; the unemployed will still be with us. I am not taking issue with the Senator; but I believe a strict construction of my remarks will show that the power of ruling by decree could be exercised only in case there was such a degree of disturbance that it was equivalent to the beginning of martial law.

Mr. HATCH. I cannot agree with the statement that there was such a degree of disturbance as to be equivalent to the beginning of martial law, and I do not think history so reveals; but I desire to continue and finish these remarks as soon as possible.

In addition to the matters which I have mentioned, those articles protected the secrecy of correspondence, postal, telegraph, and telephone service, all declared to be inviolable: and article 118 provides:

Every German has the right, within the limits of general laws, to express his opinion freely, by word of mouth, writing, printed matter, or picture, or in any other manner. This right must not be affected by any conditions of his work or appointment, and no one is permitted to injure him on account of his making use of such rights.

The American doctrine of free speech, yet subject to be set aside, under the German Constitution, by executive decree of one man!

The articles to which I have referred would in our country be considered the fundamental rights of American citizens: and it was under this constitutional power that the first executive decree was authorized and brought into being by Chancelor Bruening. No act of the Reichstag brought it into effect. In fact, it was because the Reichstag was obstreperous that it was necessary to use it in the first instance.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, may I ask a question of the Senator at that point?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. Was it not by reason of the fact that the Reichstag rather resigned its prerogatives and its

Mr. HATCH. No; it was exactly the opposite of that in the beginning. Later they did. Under Hitler they absolutely laid down everything, as I shall presently show.

Mr. McCARRAN. I mean, finally they did lay down all of their powers.

Mr. HATCH. When Chancelor Hitler took over complete power the Reichstag surrendered everything to him, as I shall show, and that was done by act of the Reichstag, but at the time the movement began there was opposition.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I interrupt the Senator for another question?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. But the first step was taken in that which the Senator is now relating. In other words, the first step was a break, so that eventually Hitler took over entire control.

Mr. HATCH. I shall continue with that as I go along, and try to show much better, in the language of another man, the correct history.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New Mexico is making a decided contribution to this debate by publishing the real facts and the law, and I think that in construing a certain part of those decrees I perhaps carried my remarks beyond the field of real accuracy.

Mr. HATCH. That is perfectly natural. We frequently

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I was attempting to make, however, aside from the form of this bill, was the matter of substance that when we begin to walk that road we do not know what the final result is going to be. When there is an emergency, sometimes we have no choice; but when there is no emergency we have a choice, and we ought not to start to walk that road.

Mr. HATCH. I really have not desired to discuss that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course not.

Mr. HATCH. But I have some very deep convictions on the course we have been traveling since 1933, and the course which the German Government has traveled.

Mr. TYDINGS. I was simply attempting, not to take issue with the Senator but to point out the philosophy of the remarks I made yesterday. I did not seek to argue with him on his own point of view.

Mr. HATCH. I understand.

I desire to call the attention of Senators to a work entitled "In Europe Since 1914," by F. Lee Benns, a most authoritative discussion of the liberal and Nazi regimes in Germany. In this work we find how government by executive decree grew up under Chancelor Bruening.

In July 1930 after the Bruening government had failed to secure the adoption of a budget—the failure of the Reichstag to adopt the budget was the emergency-after the Reichstag had rejected the budget, President Hindenburg dissolved the body; and the President, under the emergency clause, article 48, which I have read, inaugurated a financial program which differed but little from the one the Reichstag had rejected.

Again in December 1930, President Hindenburg was compelled to resort to emergency decrees in order to put into effect the financial program of the government. It was not until after measures were adopted in the Reichstag in February 1931 to prevent the obstructionist tactics of the Nazis, and the leader of the German Nationalists withdrew from the body, that the government succeeded in getting its 1931 budget approved. The Bruening government continued to be confronted by national financial difficulties. The knowledge of her financial troubles began to cause alarm at home and abroad; and late in 1931 President Hindenburg was compelled to issue a new set of emergency decrees. They were:

(1) To reduce national expenditures still further, (2) to force down wages and prices in German industry so that German might successfully compete in foreign markets and thus safeguard the stability of her currency, (3) to increase the Government's police power for the purpose of suppressing possible attempts to overthrow the republic.

It may be noted at this point that at that time President Hindenburg's period of service was about to expire. Chancelor Bruening asked President Hindenburg to extend his own term of office, which under the constitution he had the power to do by executive decree. He refused to do so.

Thus from this most cursory statement it appears that the constitutional power for executive decrees did exist, and that was what I stated yesterday, that it was used by President Hindenburg and Chancelor Bruening strictly in accordance with the constitution, without authority from the Reichstag. In fact such course was made necessary by opposition which arose in the Reichstag. It was no surrender of legislative power by the Reichstag at that time. However, we now pass to a most interesting development in Germany, and I think it was of this the Senator from Maryland was speaking and thinking rather than the development of government by executive decree under Chancelor Bruening. After Adolf Hitler had been appointed Chancelor in 1933, events began to move most rapidly—almost as rapidly as they have been moving in recent days. Hitler dissolved the Reichstag on February 2 and immediately began raising the specter of communism, much as Mussolini had done, in an effort to strengthen his own power and apparently to seize control of the Government.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. When Hitler dissolved the Reichstag, did he obtain authority to do so, or did he have the authority under

Mr. HATCH. There was no violation of constitutional authority.

Mr. LUCAS. Another question has been discussed with respect to emergencies which exist in the German Empire at any particular time. If I understand correctly, such emergencies could be determined under the constitution solely by one man, and the Reichstag had nothing to do with saying what was or what was not an emergency.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. May I interrupt the Senator just a moment?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I do not wish to interrupt the continuity of the Senator's thought, but in order that we may understand, let me ask if the Reichstag as it existed under the German Constitution and under the German reorganization was not quite analogous, we will say, to Congress as it exists under the American democracy? Am I correct in that?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator repeat that? I am not quite certain of its implications.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Reichstag was the expression of the German people?

Mr. HATCH. It was the German Congress.

Mr. McCARRAN. It was the German Congress?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. McCARRAN. In other words, it stood in the same place under the German Constitution following the war which Congress occupies today in the United States?

Mr. HATCH. It had similar powers.

Mr. McCARRAN. The appointment of Mr. Hitler was made by the President, under the German Constitution?

Mr. HATCH. Absolutely; there was no breach of constitutional power at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct. But Mr. Hitler in being appointed was given greater power than that exercised by the President himself?

Mr. HATCH. I shall show in a moment just what that power was, and it will startle and amaze the Senator, I am quite sure. First, however, I desire to quote the issue as Hitler saw it. I quote Hitler:

There can be no middle course here. Either the red flag of bolshevism will be hoisted soon or Germany will find itself again.

That was the way he saw the issue.

Now I quote from the book Europe Since 1914, which vividly describes the course of Adolf Hitler toward unlimited and unrestricted power in Germany.

During the 5 weeks preceding the Reichstag elections Hitler's During the 5 weeks preceding the Reichstag elections Hitler's government resorted to strong-arm methods against the opposition, particularly the Communists, the Social Democrats, and the Centrists. Opposition newspapers were suspended or suppressed, opposition meetings were forbidden or broken up; opposition speakers were denied access to the radio which became a Nazi monopoly. On February 28, 5 days before the elections, a fire of incendiary origin nearly destroyed the Reichstag building. The Communists were at once accused by the Nazis of being the perpetrators of this act of vandalism, and hundreds of Communist leaders were arrested. By dwelling upon the dangers of a Communist. trators of this act of vandalism, and hundreds of Communist lead-ers were arrested. By dwelling upon the dangers of a Communist-Socialist plot to overthrow the Government, the Nazis sought to cause a wave of anti-Communist hysteria to sweep the country. An emergency decree of the President suspended all constitutional provisions guaranteeing personal liberty, freedom of the press, liberty to hold meetings, and even secrecy of the mails.

Yet, Mr. President, Senators of the United States stand here and compare the pending bill with the actions of Adolf Hitler in destroying constitutional government in Germany.

I quote further:

All Communist papers in Germany and all Social Democratic papers in Prussia were at once suspended until after March 5. The President further authorized the Federal government to seize the executive power in any German state which failed to take "the necessary measures for the restoration of law and order."

On March 5, stirred by the propaganda and excitement of the preceding week, more than 39,000,000 German citizens went to the polls. Although the German workers still showed their militancy and strength by polling 7,000,000 votes for the Social Democrats and 4,800,000 for the Communists, although the Catholic Center parties showed their opposition to the Nazi program of suppression and intimidation by casting 5,500,000 votes and even increasing their Reichstag representation, the millions of ordinary "stay-at-homes" who participated in this election turned the tide in favor of the National Socialists. In the country as a whole the latter secured more than 17,000,000 votes, which, with the 3,000,000 votes of the Nationalists, gave the Hitler-Papen government about 52 percent of the popular vote. With 288 Nazi representatives and 53 Nationalists, Hitler controlled a majority of the 648 seats in the new Reichstag. An analysis of the vote further revealed that the National Socialists had gained the ascendancy in Bavaria from the Catholic Centrists and in Prussia from the Social Democrats.

Wearing his Nazi uniform, Chancelor Hitler appeared before the newly elected Reichstag at its first session and read his official message, at the conclusion of which, much as Mussolini had done in 1922, he demanded dictatorial powers for 4 years. In a single session the Reichstag rushed the enabling act granting these powers through the required three readings, finally adopted it by a vote of 441 to 94, and then adjourned indefinitely.

441 to 94, and then adjourned indefinitely.

Then, having abdicated and surrendered, the Reichstag adjourned indefinitely.

I read further from this book:

The enabling act consisted of five articles and until April 1, 1937, The enabling act consisted of five articles and until April 1, 1937, conferred upon Hitler power to do anything—constitutional or unconstitutional—except to diminish the rights of the President and to abolish the Reichstag and Reichsrat as "institutions." Budgets might be adopted, government loans authorized, laws decreed, treaties made without consulting with the nation's popularly elected representatives. In the words of one keen political observer, the effect of this act was to confer upon Hitler and his government "a blanket power of attorney for the German people." Thus Adolf Hitler, after more than a decade of fighting, achieved by constitutional methods the great triumph toward which he had so long looked forward. He was now Chancelor of Germany and possessed of power greater by far than even the Iron Chancelor, Bismarck, had ever wielded. had ever wielded.

Thus, Mr. President, constitutional government died in Germany. Mr. Hitler came to power in Germany in the same year in which Franklin D. Roosevelt took office as President of the United States, and there are Senators who seek to draw a parallel between the course of Adolf Hitler and the course of Franklin D. Roosevelt. But the parallel ends with the taking of office, for every act of Adolf Hitler since he first occupied his position has been to destroy constitutional government in Germany and democratic processes, and every act of the Democratic administration under Franklin D. Roosevelt since March 4, 1933, has been to restore and save and preserve constitutional government and democratic processes in the United States of America.

Today constitutional government in Germany is dead, and today in the United States of America constitutional government lives, and, please God, whether the pending bill passes or does not pass, constitutional government in the United States of America will continue to live.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I have been exceedingly interested in the remarks of the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. I am interested in his review of history, and especially interested in his review of our history as it parallels the history of Germany during the same period.

Mr. President, if we are to go forward with a democracy in America we must go forward with a democracy which has some definite aims and some definite ideas and some definite limitations. If those aims and those ideas and those limitations were found worth while during the past century and a half, I wonder if it would not be entirely worth while in this trying period of the world's history that we go forward with at least a semblance of the constitutional limitations which were expressed a century and one-half ago.

I was especially interested in the review so ably given by the Senator from New Mexico, because to my mind it displays an entirely different result from that which the Senator from New Mexico would have it imply. In other words, the history of Germany, from the close of the war up to the present time, has reflected, not the will of the people of Germany but rather the will of those who by reason of exigency or opportunity were placed in places of potential power. And we now stand at a breaking point in the history of our country.

Shall Congress resign its position as a legislative agency? Shall it abdicate the place given it by the founders of our country a century and a half ago, as a similar place given to the Reichstag only 21 years ago was resigned by the Reichstag only a few years after it was conferred upon it; or shall we go on with the great history of a great democracy to lead the world?

Mr. President, the history recited by the able Senator from New Mexico illustrates and emphasizes the fact that unless the Congress curbs the movement, which is now gaining momentum in this country, to take from Congress that which the Constitution gave to it, we will arrive at the same result. only it will be a more unfortunate result than that which has befallen the German people of today. I say we will arrive at the same result, because the same ideas which are now prevailing in the German constitutional government we find are being advocated by some here. I say the result will be more unfortunate because we will have set aside 150 years of the able and efficient advocacy of the great democrats of America, whereas Germany set aside only 20 years of its democractic history.

Let us consider what has been recited by the able Senator from New Mexico. He did not draw the parallel, as he might have done, with the history of the greatest military genius of all times. It would have been well had he referred to Napoleon in connection with the history of Germany, as that history has been written in the last 21 years, and as it is being written now.

There is no comparison between Napoleon and the present ruler or controller of Germany. The one was a great military genius. The other is a "flop," to use the common expression of the hour. He may aspire for the time being, but his limits are within human view. He may aspire because he has now taken over a people who, coming out of the throes of war. found themselves wabbling, if you please, trying to find an agency of government to guide them. Unfortunately, they have gone forward and have eliminated the ideas of democracy from that great form of government of which Von Hindenburg was the head. Senators will remember that Von Hindenburg, when he was given the authority to prorogue the Reichstag, denied himself that right. It will be recalled that he was above the thought of doing such a thing. But those who advised him, those who were close to his ear. as was Mr. Hitler, carried out their views, not by the will of Von Hindenburg, but because of a Reichstag which lent itself to their wishes, through a Reichstag, if you please, which I claim is analogous to Congress, which lent itself to the whispering, not of Von Hindenburg but of Mr. Hitler, who was Von Hindenburg's adviser through all that period. And Hitler found himself in entire control, not by the will of the President of Germany, because, as recited by the able Senator from New Mexico, the President of Germany was opposed to the very methods that Hitler espoused, but rather found himself in control because the Reichstag of Germany yielded to a whispering campaign. That is exactly analogous to what is going on here today.

What is this whispering campaign? I am not entirely content to lend my ear to some of it; I am not willing to lend my ear to some parts of it that to my mind are beneath men of American birth. So I will not mention that. But I say that today there is in this country an element which would drive us into a foreign war if they had the opportunity; they are lending themselves day by day and hour by hour to such an effort; and they are using certain methods and certain agencies to bring about a change in the form of government here, so that, perchance, after all, we may lend our ear to a call that would say we should engage ourselves in a foreign embroilment. That to my mind is not in keeping with the best thought.

Let us recur to what the Senator from New Mexico was primarily dealing with, namely, the bill which is now before the Senate. If the Congress is willing to yield its power over legislation, if the Congress is willing to say that some agency in the executive branch shall have control over that which belongs to the elected representatives of the people, then I say we place ourselves in the same position in which the Reichstag placed itself when it permitted Mr. Hitler to take over the control of Germany, when it permitted Von Hindenburg to resign from the Presidency of Germany, and thus placed the Reich, not in the hands of a democracy but in the hands of those who, seeking personal control, subrogated and set aside all democratic rule so that they might have the power.

Power is the uppermost thing in the pending bill. Let no one deny that. Power is the thing which is uppermost in this reorganization measure—power to set aside democratic control, power to set aside the prerogatives of Congress.

Why do I say that? Because of the lines that I read to the able Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] earlier today. The question was raised during the last session of Congress, and, as Senators will recall, the lines were stricken from the bill at that time. The words which provided the power to the Executive to set aside the functions of any particular branch of government, were stricken from the bill. Why? Because the argument was so forcefully made that that was an abrogation and setting aside of the power of the legislative function.

Mr. President, there is only one analogy that can be drawn from the splendid speech which has been delivered by the Senator from New Mexico, and that analogy brings to us the lesson that we should not set aside our powers as a legislative body, because the lesson of what happened in Germany has taught us that we should not give to any branch of government the power to say that a democracy may be entirely set aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURRAY in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, no Member of the Senate is less qualified that am I to enter into a discussion of constitutional law. I have listened to the debate and have been tremendously interested in it. I have listened with advantage to the discussion by very learned and erudite lawyers who are Members of this body and who have approached the problem before us from many angles.

As I have stated, I am one of the Members who are not lawyers. I do not practice law. I am a farmer, and I represent an agricultural constituency. We are interested in the pending measure-and I am trying to speak for my constituency—not from the standpoint of abstruse and intricate discussions of constitutional questions but with reference to the purpose of the bill-what it is destined to do and what it is designed to do. We are interested not only in the purpose but in the manner in which that purpose is to be carried out.

It might well be asked why I take the floor at this time and attempt to discuss the bill at all, with my lack of knowledge of legal questions. I have found in my life that it is sometimes of real advantage to divest a subject under discussion of superfluities and get down to the real meat of the matter, the question which must be decided. I have risen merely to state my own view, as a Senator from the State of Iowa, as to the pending measure, its purpose, and the manner of its application.

No Senator has spoken on the subject during the time I have been in the Chamber who is not in full agreement with every other speaker as to the value of the purpose of the bill. Everyone has said, "I am fully in accord with the purpose of the proposed legislation to eliminate duplication and to curtail unnecessary expenditures in governmental administration." Everyone agrees, Mr. President, that in the administration of our laws the growth of our official personnel has reached such a point that it hangs over the people of America like the sword of Damocles, threatening to destroy us by using up all possible revenues that we can raise.

Every day in this body there is discussion as to how we can cut down appropriations; but so long as we create agencies and delegate to them functions to perform we must provide the money for their activities.

I am discussing a question which has been before every Congress for years. The agreement to which I have referred has been universal during that time; but we have demonstrated by inaction that we as a Congress will not take the steps necessary to reorganize governmental agencies, abolish those that are not necessary, eliminate duplication of functions, and curtail expenses of administration. We have not taken, and in my opinion we will not take, those steps. We must designate someone or some agency to act for us in taking the preliminary steps to determine whether or not reorganization can be effected, and how it shall be accomplished.

In the pending measure, as in the measure which was presented last year, there is an attempt to do what I have outlined. Is there any more logical agency to which to delegate the power than the executive department of the United States, which by the Constitution and by our action in setting up certain administrative powers is clothed with the duty of executing the law? Is there anything more logical than to give the executive department, the President of the United States, instructions to make an investigation and to report to us?

What does the bill do? The first thing it does is to direct the President of the United States to make the necessary studies and report to us. That is the bill, reduced to its lowest terms. In the bill we set up certain limitations, certain directions to the President as to how he shall make the studies and investigations, and how he shall make his report. Is there any Member of this body who does not agree that we have a right to ask the President to make such studies and report?

What is the next step? The President makes the studies and submits his report. Under the bill, if enacted into law, he cannot do one thing to carry out a reorganization plan other than to make the studies and report to the Congress of the United States, as we instruct him to do. That is all

When he has done that, what is the next step? Last year a number of Senators privately and on the floor of the Senate expressed concern over the delegation of powers to the President without the obligation of reporting to us. The Wheeler amendment was presented. As the Senate knows, if the bill had been enacted last year with the Wheeler amendment, it would have required action on the part of the Congress before the recommendations of the President could have gone into effect. The bill was passed by the Senate and later was rejected by the House.

At that time my learned colleagues the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown] and the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. Johnson], having in mind the very grave difference of opinion in the Senate, and having in mind the desire of every Member of the Senate that some action be taken toward reorganization along the lines of the study which had been conducted under the leadership of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Byrd] and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes], joined me in proposing an amendment. There was fear on the part of many Members of the Senate, as well as on the part of the general public, that we were delegating power to the Chief Executive and divesting ourselves of our constitutional right and duty. Because of that difference of opinion we proposed an amendment, which was later embodied in the bill.

As I view the situation, not as a lawyer but simply as a farmer and a citizen, we instruct the President to make studies and investigations and to report to us. He can take no effective action whatever until that is done. At the time we give him this instruction in the basic law which we enact-if and when we do enact it-we prescribe certain definite limitations, certain definite things that must be done before reorganization shall become effective. Is there any lawyer in this body, in the face of the recent decisions of the Supreme Court, or regardless of the decisions of the Supreme Court, who will take the position that at the time we enact a law we cannot provide as a limitation that the reorganization shall not go into effect until approved by a concurrent resolution of the Senate and the House? Is there any lawyer who will say we do not have that right?

The same question was raised last year; and, still speaking as a farmer, I am ready to agree that if we were to try, by a concurrent resolution, to abrogate law already on the statute books, we could not do it. But when we direct our agent to exercise certain power under instructions given to him, and at the time specify certain limitations on that power, is there anyone who thinks it cannot be done?

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator having invited discussion-

Mr. GILLETTE. Not legal discussion. The Senator may answer my question, of course.

Mr. ADAMS. I was about to make a legal discussion. There is no question as to the right of the Congress to ask the President to make the study. I think the Senator is minimizing the second step when he says that we merely ask the President to make a report. We ask the President to submit a plan of reorganization, and we provide that the plan of reorganization shall become the law unless a concurrent resolution disapproving it is adopted by both Houses. That is something decidedly more than making a report.

If I may add a word or two, I do not believe the fact that Congress by a concurrent resolution approves the plan or, under the operation of the Wheeler amendment, approves the plan in any way, adds to the validity of the delegation to the President. The authority which we give to the President must stand or fall by the terms of the delegation. The provision of the Wheeler amendment or the provision of the pending bill merely provides a condition upon which the plan may go into effect. In other words, a concurrent resolution is not a legislative enactment of the plan.

The Wheeler amendment does not provide a legislative enactment. We either have made a valid delegation to the President to formulate a plan, or it cannot be made valid either under the provisions of the House bill or by the Wheeler amendment. All we are reserving by these two suggestions is the right to veto the plan. We can say to the President, "You may formulate a plan to consolidate"; but my question is when it comes to abolishing agencies and abolishing functions—for, of course, we cannot delegate legislative power; I think there is no question as to that—are the powers which we delegate legislative powers? I should like to have the Senator, who talks of being a farmer, although he does not talk like a farmer, discuss that question.

Mr. SMITH. May I ask the Senator how does a farmer talk? [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator of South Carolina has given a thousand illustrations here.

Mr. SMITH. They are much better than those of the Senator from Colorado by unanimous consent. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. It has been my pleasure, Mr. President, to sit in this body only 6 of the glorious years which have been graced by the presence of the Senator from South Carolina. I know no farmer so well educated, so fluent, and so instructive as is the Senator from South Carolina, and I have always sat at his feet with the utmost humility.

Mr. SMITH. Let not the Senator get into a position where I should like to kick him. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, if I may say a word further—

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. In my mind is the question whether or not, under the provisions of the bill, we are seeking to delegate legislative power, which we cannot do, or are we merely directing the President to execute a law as it is laid down? If we lay down a principle of law, and we provide how it shall be executed, it is perfectly proper to say to the President, do this, that, or the other thing; but I am not clear that we can say to him, "You may abolish functions which we have created by an act of Congress when we provided for the establishment of a particular office."

I should like the Senator to clear up in my mind the question whether validly and legally we can give to the President such power. I think, as I have said, the question of delegation should not be confused with the matter of action by the Congress. Whatever we do depends upon the passage of an act. If we have delegated a power, we cannot make it valid by anything that we may do other than in the legislative process by the signature of the President upon the measure.

That is my inquiry, and, as I have said, I intruded upon the Senator because there seemed to be a desire upon his part to have some lawyer, or someone who pretends to be a lawyer, at least, enter the discussion.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I am under deep obligation to the Senator from Colorado, because he has stated on the floor just now what he has stated to me many times in conversation in discussing this matter. Neither am I in the position, as I have stated, regardless of the conclusion of the Senator, to cross swords with him on questions of constitutional law. But the fact remains that it became more apparent to me after the discussion the Senator has just presented to this body that we are not clothing the President, or attempting to clothe him, with any power to abolish a function. There is a difference of opinion as to the meaning of the bill, but we are not clothing him with the power to do anything except to make studies and to report a suggested plan to the Congress. When the plan comes to the Congress it may provide for the abolition of a function, whether so provided in the bill or not. We ask him to report a plan to us. and we provide in the bill that such plan when presented shall not go into effect until we take certain specific action. Whether or not the President exceeds the power given him or whether we eliminate and entirely wipe out the provisions referring to functions, he could send Congress a plan embodying the abolition of a function whether it was so provided in the bill or not.

We reserve to ourselves the right to act on his report. As to the advisability of doing it, there is a difference of opinion; there is a strong difference of opinion as to whether we should take affirmative action or whether we should take negative action. All I am trying to do, as a farmer, I will say to the Senator, is to say that when reduced to its lowest terms we have been indulging in an abstruse discussion that does not go to the merits of the matter in which the people of the United States are interested.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand the position of the Senator from Iowa to be that there is no delegation of power involved when the Congress asks for a report, as the Senator suggests, and then when the report is made provide that it shall be a law if one branch of the Congress is willing to accede to it or is not willing to repudiate it? Does not the Senator think that is a delegation of power?

Mr. GILLETTE. In a measure, it is a delegation of power, but it is reserving to ourselves the right to act on it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is not reserving to the Congress that right.

Mr. GILLETTE. Just a moment. The same situation is extant in the case of any measure that comes before the Congress. The Senate can go on record on a bill and announce a decision by a record vote, but if the other body, the other arm of Congress, does not act favorably, it does not become a law.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me, it seems to me that the analogy is extremely poor for this reason: It may be granted that the Senate may pass a measure for the repeal of any law now on the statute books, and if that is disagreed to by the other House of Congress, the repeal is not effectuated. The proposition of the Senator from Iowa is essentially different.

Mr. GILLETTE. I agree fully with the Senator that it is not parallel.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If the Senator will permit me further—

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator's proposition now is, in effect, that the Congress shall grant to another branch of the Government the right to make laws, or the right to provide a scheme which will have the effect of law, unless both branches of Congress can agree on repealing it.

Mr. GILLETTE. Will the Senator answer a question from me?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will be glad, indeed, to do so, if I can.

Mr. GILLETTE. Does the Senator maintain that we, clothed with sole legislative authority under the Constitution of the United States, do not have a right, in a measure of this kind, to direct the executive branch of the Government to make certain studies and report them to the Congress, and at the time we pass the law specify certain conditions under which the suggested changes shall take effect, reserving to ourselves when we pass the law the right to determine whether or not they shall become effective? Does the Senator say we have not the right to do that?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is my personal view of the Constitution of the United States that that would be a delegation of power which is not authorized by the Constitution.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. BYRNES addressed the Chair. Mr. GILLETTE. I yield first to the majority leader, who has been on his feet, and then I will yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Will the Senator let me answer the question?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to take any precedence over the Senator from South Carolina, and will be glad to have the Senator from Iowa yield to him.

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I wish to say there may be a difference between the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Colorado, but I still like the statement made by the Senator from Colorado on March 15, 1938, when a reorganization bill was last being considered. I should like to read that statement on the very point as to whether or not we can put a condition as to the time when the law shall become effective.

I read from the statement of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. ADAMS], and my dear friend, with whom I seldom differ:

Mr. President, my own theory is based merely upon the one premise that, regardless of what preceding Congresses may have done, regardless of practices, this Congress has the right to legislate as it pleases. It has the right to make certain delegations, to make those delegations conditional, and to provide that reorganizations shall not become effective until the conditions are complied with.

I ask the Senator to listen to this:

We may make a delegation, saying to the President, "Your Executive order shall not be valid unless it receives the unanimous approval of the Republican Members of the United States Senate." We may specify any condition which we see fit to specify, whether it be sound or unsound. It is for the Congress to attach any condition it sees fit upon the delegation which the Congress makes.

I understand that the Senator from Iowa takes the same position as that of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. WHEELER addressed the Chair.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky. Then I will yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the question of delegation of legislative power has been frequently passed upon by the Supreme Court. I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that he not only talks like a good farmer, but he talks like a good lawyer. All the power that Congress has is legislative power, except that the Senate may have in a certain form executive power in regard to the confirmation of appointments and the ratification of treaties. That partakes of an executive function. The Senate may act in a judicial capacity in the matter of impeachment. But all the power that Congress has with reference to the passage of laws is legislative power.

Congress may pass a law reorganizing all the departments. Nobody will dispute that statement. It is no indictment of the competence and the ability of Congress that it has not done it or that it will not do it, because if Congress ab initio should undertake to sit down, either through committees or as a Committee of the Whole, and go through the departments with a fine-tooth comb and find out what we could do in the matter of reorganization, working as hard as we could it would take an entire session of Congress to do that, without considering any other subject. That is the reason why it is physically impossible for Congress to do it and why it never will do it, and that is no reflection upon the intelligence or the competence of Congress. It is just a physical situation which we face.

On a number of occasions the Supreme Court has passed upon what we might call the delegation of power to some executive agency, or some agency set up by Congress. For instance, in 1912 Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to reorganize the Customs Service if he found that such reorganization would result in economy and in efficiency. That reorganization was not required to be returned to Congress for action. The only condition was that the Secretary of the Treasury should find that such reorganization, such consolidations, and such abolitions of offices, and even functions, would result in economy and in efficiency. As the result of that act, the Secretary of the Treasury abolished many customs offices which had been located and established by Congress. No question was ever made of the power of Congress to delegate to the Secretary of the Treasury a power which Congress itself had, namely, to abolish customs offices. I recall that at some time during the Wilson administration, when Mr. Roper, later Secretary of Commerce, was Commissioner of Internal Revenue, he consolidated the internalrevenue bureaus all over the United States. He combined the bureaus in Kentucky from five into one, and that one has remained ever since as the sole internal-revenue bureau in Kentucky. No question ever was made as to the right of Congress to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury or the President, as its agent, to do that.

The only condition which the Supreme Court has ever fixed upon the power of Congress to delegate this duty to somebody has been that it set out sufficiently definitely the standards that it desires to set up, and the conditions under which the action may be taken.

In the case of the Customs Service, the only condition in the law was that the Secretary of the Treasury find that economy and efficiency would result. That is precisely what we are doing in this instance. We are saying that the President shall make this survey, and he shall do it with two things in view: First, economy; and second, efficiency in the conduct of the Government; and he is required to bring about such consolidations and adjustments and reorganizations as may ultimately bring about the conduct of our Government within the revenues which are provided by the tax laws of Congress.

Certainly the standard set up in this bill is even more restricted than it has been in many other bills in which Congress has delegated to some executive officer the power to do something that Congress itself could have done if it had had the time and the facilities and the ability from those standpoints to do it.

I want to say frankly that I think both the Wheeler amendment and the provision in the bill are constitutional. I have not any doubt that Congress may fix a condition precedent; and that condition may be the happening of a certain thing, or it may be based upon the failure of a certain thing to happen. Either one of them would be constitutional. In my judgment in this case, based upon the laws which heretofore have been passed and have been passed upon by the Supreme Court, we may authorize the President, as our agent, to make these consolidations without bringing them back to Congress. There is difference of opinion about that matter, but I believe that it may be done now, just as it has been done in the past. We undertake, however, to give Congress the right to pass upon the consolidation by saying that Congress may, within 60 days, reject it; and if the consolidation is rejected by Congress, it becomes null and void. Of course, that is a condition precedent which, in my judgment, is just as valid as the affirma-tive condition which is urged here by the Wheeler amendment.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. ADAMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield first to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let us assume that under the Constitution we may delegate to the executive branch of the Government the powers of Congress. If we may delegate to the executive branch of the Government the powers | of Congress, if we may delegate the power to legislate, we may delegate the power to impeach. Will any Senator on this floor stand up and say that the Congress could delegate to the President the power to impeach a member of the Supreme Court or to impeach anybody else?

If, under the Constitution, we may delegate one power granted by the Constitution, then we may delegate the other powers granted by the Constitution; and let me call attention to the fact that if the Senator's theory is correct and if the theory of certain other persons is correct, we may delegate the power to declare war. If we may delegate the power to abolish the functions of office, as expressed under this bill, then we may delegate to the President the power to make appropriations for any purpose for which he wants to appropriate money as long as we say that they shall be within the bounds of reason; or we may delegate to him the power to raise or lower taxes. We may delegate any power if we may delegate the power to abolish functions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, we have delegated to the President and the Secretary of the Treasury the power to do that very thing.

Mr. WHEELER. To do what?

Mr. BARKLEY. We have provided in a law that the Secretary of the Treasury may raise the tariff upon certain articles, or even embargo them, if he finds that they are inferior to articles being manufactured in the United States and being consumed by the American people.

Mr. WHEELER. Does the Senator refer to the Tariff

Commission?

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, no! The Tariff Commission may not abolish anything. It may only recommend.

Mr. WHEELER. All right. We provided that certain things may be done upon the recommendation of the Tariff Commission; but the Senator says that, in his view, the saving clause is that the matter comes back to the Congress, which votes on it. The delegation of such power to the President is not saved in the slightest degree by the fact that we put in the bill a clause to the effect that if one branch of the Government is against the President's action. it shall not be valid.

Let me call the Senator's attention to a fact which seems to me to show "where we are getting off," if the Senator will pardon me, with reference to the delegation of power.

Surely those who drafted the Constitution of the United States saw a vast difference between delegating powers to the President of the United States and delegating them to some arm of the Congress. The reason for it was apparent, because the subject was fresh in the minds of our forefathers, many of whom had recently left the countries of the Old World, where they had seen kings and monarchs have the executive power and also the legislative power, and had seen the power abused, and seen the Bill of Rights overridden. They said, "We want to have three separate branches of the Government." In effect we are now abolishing the three separate branches of the Government when we delegate to the President of the United States the power of the Congress.

I appreciate the fact that when a Congress of the United States is told that it is desired to turn over that power to the President, it is a very difficult thing for Members of the Senate to withstand that kind of pressure. I am not unmindful of that fact. It is a difficult thing to withstand, and it was so recognized by those who drafted the Constitution. They recognized the fact that the executive branch of the Government had the power of appointment to all the various governmental offices. They recognized the fact that the President would have tremendous power over the legislative branch of the Government; but they tried to protect the legislative branch against that power, and now we are trying to tear town that protection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield further-I do not want to take his time-

Mr. GILLETTE. Go right ahead.

Mr. BARKLEY. Almost the very first Congress set up by our Constitution, made up of many Members who sat in the Constitutional Convention, enacted in 1792 a law conferring upon the President power to embargo the importation of products from other countries. That was not giving the President power to pass a tariff law. That was done under the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. For over 100 years Congress time and time again has established the President of the United States as the agency through which it would regulate commerce with foreign nations, not conferring upon him any legislative power to fix tariffs but conferring upon him as the agent of Congress the power to regulate, even to the point of exclusion, the importation of articles into the United States.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me to make an inquiry of the Senator from Kentucky as to the accuracy of his statement?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I think the matter the Senator has in mind arose in the case of The Aurora, an early case in the Supreme Court of the United States. Congress did not delegate to the President the initial right to embargo: but it provided the embargo, and said it would be effective if the President found certain conditions to exist.

It was legislation to go into effect when the President found to exist a certain condition of discrimination against this country.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, it was a condition precedent, but it was upon the affirmative finding of the President of the United States, who was made the agent of Congress; and that precedent has been followed from that time until now.

In the Tariff Act of 1890 a similar provision was made. The point I am making is that the Congress has the power to designate the President as its agent to do a certain thing, as well as to set up an independent board of its own to do that thing.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the Senator will remember that as one of his humble followers I have always felt that the argument which he made in reference to the unconstitutionality of the flexible tariff was sound. I followed him to the extent that I voted against the reciprocal-trade agreement, based upon the argument which the Senator from Kentucky made on this floor as to the unconstitutionality of the flexible tariff, and neither he nor anyone else has yet answered his argument.

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, yes; I answered it myself. [Laughter.] The only difference is that I have learned a little since I made the argument, and I hope the Senator from Colorado has. He has the ability to learn, whether or not he uses it.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, if my colleagues are willing. I should like to finish the other 2 or 3 minutes' statement which I wish to make.

This debate proves to me very effectively the uselessness of trying to discuss a measure of the kind before us, especially by one in my position, when other Members of the Senate, my colleagues, are filled to overflowing with the matter of legal discussion which they wish to inject into the debate. I am perfectly willing to listen, or to watch the chasing of legal butterflies whenever the boys like to indulge in that sport. But there are certain very definite matters which are to be decided in the vote on the pending bill. I am perhaps naive enough to think that they are

Before I refer to the question I asked the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Missouri, I wish to ask two or three other questions. What does the bill do? In section 1 it is provided:

The President shall investigate the organization of all executive agencies of the Government-

That is defined later-and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the following purposes.

And the purposes are set out. Is there anyone who thinks we have not the right to direct the President to do that, to make investigations along the lines of the limitations we set down, and make the studies with a view to accomplishing certain things? Have we not the right to do that?

What is the next step? The President shall then prepare a reorganization plan to bring about the transfers and consolidations which he has in mind to effectuate the purpose for which he makes the study; to prepare a reorganization plan and transmit it to Congress when it is in session at certain times and under certain limitations. Is there anyone who says he has not the right to do that, and that we have not the right to ask him to do it? I asked whether there was any Senator in this body who would say that we did not have a right when we clothed the President with the power to do those things and instructed him to do them to lay down at that time conditions precedent as to if and when any suggestions would take effect.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. Adams], who usually speaks directly to the point, failed me dismally at that time. He rose and said, "You cannot abolish functions." I asked the same question, couched in almost the same terms, of my friend from south of Iowa, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark], and he said, "Would you have one body of Congress be in a position to nullify the action of the other body?" I agree that there is a grave difference of opinion as to the advisability of that. But neither one of these Senators would answer the question, and I will ask them now to answer the question.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, the question involves going back a little following the argument of the Senator. Of course, Congress can ask the executive arm of the Government to make an investigation, and, of course, the President can make his report.

The Senator from Kentucky said that Congress had only legislative powers. That was very accurately stated. He omitted to state the other fundamental—that the Executive has only executive powers and we cannot delegate any legislative powers to the Executive any more than the Executive can delegate executive powers to the Congress.

The Senator from Kentucky said that the Congress authorized the abolition of certain customs places. The Senator did not say that the Congress could delegate the power to abolish by Executive order the Customs Service. That is the question really involved. Could the Congress delegate to the President the power to abolish the Home Owners' Loan Corporation? Could the Congress delegate to the President the power to abolish the Income Tax Service? Could the President have delegated to him the power to abolish other executive agencies? This bill, on page 2, refers to abolition of agencies and functions, which refers back to the President's right to consolidate executive agencies.

Then we drift on, and on page 4, where the report is provided for, when the President finds that it is desirable to abolish the whole or any part of an executive agency or function thereof—that is one of the things he is to find—then he shall prepare a plan making provision for the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions as to which he has made a finding.

Then the bill proceeds to provide for the transfer of funds which the appropriation statutes have provided. Then, at the bottom of page 5, it is provided that the President shall make provision for winding up the affairs of the executive agencies abolished. Then, on page 6, reference is made to the transfer, consolidation, or abolition of agencies.

On page 7, section 6, the bill provides:

For the purposes of this title any transfer, consolidation, abolition, designation, disposition, or winding up of affairs referred to * * shall be deemed a "reorganization."

So when we give to the President the authority to submit a plan of reorganization, under the terms of the bill we authorize him to provide for the abolition, disposition, and winding up of executive agencies and the abolition of executive functions.

I have no question, I will say to the Senator, of the right of Congress not only to request but to direct the executive agencies to carry out the laws of Congress and to give to them the right to work out the details, including place and time. But when Congress has established an agency, when it has given to that agency a function, when it has prescribed its duties, those are legislative acts, and we must rest upon the unquestioned principle of law that Congress may not delegate legislative powers.

So we come back to the one question, in my mind, as to whether or not we are seeking to delegate legislative powers, and I have been unable, after listening to the Senator from Iowa and listening to others who make far greater pretense, perhaps with less justification, as to learning in the law, to find how we can justify the elimination of an agency created by the exercise of the unquestioned legislative authority of Congress, by an administrative act on behalf of the Executive.

Personally I am not concerned so much with the details of the argument, the necessity for doing it. The fact that Congress is incompetent is not an argument for the abdication by Congress of its constitutional functions. It is an argument to be addressed to a constitutional convention, or to the States to submit a constitutional amendment.

If the Constitution gives us powers which we cannot well exercise, it is the fault of the Constitution; but it does not justify us in disregarding the instrument which brings us here, and to support which without mental reservation we agreed when we entered upon our duties in this body. So I think we are under an obligation on behalf of the Congress, on behalf of legislative powers, to scrutinize carefully the pending proposal.

I may be a little hazy about it now, but I recall a year or two ago reading how the great protector of English liberties, Oliver Cromwell, came into power because of abuses of the then executive, the King. He had not been in office very long before he proceeded with a purge, a magnificent purge. He shut 70 members out of the House of Commons because they declined to agree to do what he wanted done. They levied taxes. One man paid his taxes and then retained some lawyers to bring suit to recover them. The great protector of English liberties threw into jail the lawyers who dared to bring suit against the English Government to recover taxes charged to have been illegally collected.

The whole thing goes back and has its roots in battles during hundreds of years.

I will say to the Senator that I did not mean to trespass on his time.

Mr. GILLETTE. Not at all. I asked the Senator to do it; but I hope the Senator will use discretion. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS. I am sorry that the Senator qualified his generosity; but I will say to him again, in concluding, that I do want to know how the Congress of the United States can justify the delegation to the Executive of the power to undo those things which we have solemnly done by formal acts of Congress. In my judgment, there is no escape—I speak only my own judgment, of course—from the fact that if we create a department, if we create an agency or a function, we are exercising legislative power. We could not delegate to the President the power to create that function. We could not delegate to the President the right to create the Internal Revenue Bureau. We could not delegate to the President the right to create the Home Owners' Loan Corporation.

Mr. GILLETTE. May I interrupt the Senator to ask him a question?

Mr. ADAMS. The Senator has the floor. I am the intruder.

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Wheeler amendment, as now proposed, should be adopted as an amendment to the pending measure, and the language of the bill should otherwise remain as it now is, would not every argument the Senator has presented apply as to delegation of power to abolish functions?

Mr. ADAMS. Absolutely. I will say that the only reason why I am concerned with respect to the Wheeler amendment is that in the bill we are making what I regard as an unconstitutional delegation, and I want any proposed plan of reorganization to come back to the Senate of the United States for action upon it, so that we can veto it, if we desire to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I certainly do not desire to trespass on the time of the Senator from Iowa, and I would not as a matter of fact have done so except that the Senator himself requested me to do so. I was on my way out to answer a call from a constituent 5 or 10 minutes ago, and the Senator from Iowa asked me to remain because he wished to say something about me. What he said was that I had not answered a question he asked me. I thought I had categorically answered the question. He asked me whether I thought this delegation of power would be legal and constitutional, and I said "No," that I did not think it would. I do not know how to make a more categorical and explicit answer than that.

But since I have remained, if the Senator will permit me to trespass upon his time for just one moment further, I should like to ask the Senator a question in answer to the last argument which he made, which was to the effect that since by this bill Congress is asking the President to present a reorganization scheme, where is it any delegation of power to require joint action of both branches of Congress to prevent the reorganization, rather than to require joint action of both branches of Congress to make it effective?

I should like to ask the Senator, using his own analogy, as to direction. I am perfectly willing to admit, as the Senator has urged several times, that Congress does have the right to direct the Executive to make a report or investigation, or anything it pleases. Now it so happens that Congress has by law directed the President to make investigation of the fiscal resources of the United States every year and the fiscal requirements of the United States every year. Having done that and having established the Bureau of the Budget, having directed and requested the President of the United States to consider both the resources and the requirements of the United States, and having required him by law to submit a report to the Congress every year and make recommendations as to the appropriations which should be made, does the Senator believe that the Congress would have the right under the Constitution of the United States to provide that the recommendation of the President, through the Bureau of the Budget, or the recommendation of the President upon the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, I should say, would have the effect of making appropriations within the scope of the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. GILLETTE. No, indeed.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the Senator believe that the Congress would have the right to authorize a Bureau of the Budget and the President on the recommendation of anyone to levy the necessary taxes to support the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget?

Mr. GILLETTE. No.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Then it seems to me that the argument of the Senator entirely falls when he says that all that is done here is to require recommendation. The two instances I have used are classic illustrations of the right of the Congress to direct recommendations from the President, in one case as to appropriations, in the other case as to taxes to support appropriations. It seems to me that Congress would have just exactly as much right to say to the President: "Send up a Budget recommendation, and unless both branches of the Congress within 30 days, or 60 days, or any other period, passes a concurrent resolution disapproving your recommendations, they shall stand as the appropriations of the Government for the next year, and, Mr. President, we suggest that you send up an estimate and recommendation as to raising taxes, and unless within 60 days, or 30 days, or any other period, both branches of the Congress by concurrent resolution disapproves them, then they shall stand as the taxes of the United States for the next year," as it has to pass the pending provision.

I cannot see, to save my life, how the Senator from Iowa or anyone else can distinguish between those two instances and the proposal contained in the pending bill.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I have listened, as we all have, to these learned lawyers, and I regret to say that to me, as a novice, they seem to be lost in the maze of their own reasoning. [Laughter.]

Let us return to the simple matter before us. We create an agent and direct him to do certain things and report to us. That is what the bill provides. Everyone agrees that we have the right to direct the President to do certain things within certain limitations and report to us. The difference arises from what action we take after the report comes back to us. The pending bill provides that the plan submitted shall become law unless we take negative action. The Wheeler amendment provides that the plan, the President using the same power which Senators say we are delegating, will go into effect unless we take negative action.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President-

Mr. GILLETTE. Just a moment. I do want to finish this statement, and then I will be glad to yield to the Senator.

During the last session the Senator from Colorado, as quoted by the Senator from South Carolina, stated far more cogently and clearly and powerfully than I could state in a thousand years the proposition that we have a right to lay down a condition precedent when we create our agent, and when we instruct him to report; that we can impose a condition at the time, not at a subsequent time, not by action after subsequent laws have been placed on the books, but at the time we issue instructions to our agent to report back to us, and specify what action shall be taken before the act shall take effect. That was the argument presented by the Senator from Colorado and is the argument presented by other Senators regardless of their viewpoint; and I am not interested in the discussion for the purposes of the proposed act, whether or not we are clothing the President with the power to abolish functions.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I ask for information. The Interstate Commerce Commission was created by act of Congress, which is a part of the law today. Let us suppose that, as a part of the President's plan, the restriction being taken out of the bill, the President were entirely to abolish the Interstate Commerce Commission. Let us suppose that he sent that plan to Congress with the Interstate Commerce Commission abolished, and let us suppose that we failed to take any action on the plan and the plan became law. Do I make the situation clear?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would there be an act of Congress repealing the Interstate Commerce Commission Act?

Mr. GILLETTE. Would that have the effect of repealing it?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not ask that. I asked whether Congress would have repealed the Interstate Commerce Commission Act in the devious way in which the action had been taken.

Mr. GILLETTE. Is not the question, then, whether that would be the effect of it?

Mr. TYDINGS. Well, that would be the intent of it; but would it be good law to say that Congress had repealed the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission when Congress never took any action on that matter? In other words, one could open a book, and among the laws of the United States, find the Interstate Commerce Commission Act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission; but nowhere could one open a book which would show that through any legislative process the Interstate Commerce Commission had been abolished. He would have to find its abolition in the Executive order of the President, not in the law of the land. Am I not correct in that statement?

Mr. GILLETTE. One would have difficulty in finding it, of course. He would have difficulty in finding any law. At least, I do.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am asking for information. I think I made my point clear.

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.
Mr. TYDINGS. The point I make is that the President would have repealed or abolished the Interstate Commerce Commission, created by an act of Congress. Where would the citizen find out that the Interstate Commerce Commission had been abolished?

Mr. GILLETTE. That was why the Senator insisted on his own language. I referred to the effect. The effect would be as the Senator states.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not now arguing whether the effect would be legal or illegal; but I am saying that if it were legal, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have been abolished by the President's reorganization plan.

Mr. GILLETTE. I think that is a correct statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. Where would one find the act of Congress repealing the act of Congress which created the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. GILLETTE. It would be in the records of the Con-

Mr. TYDINGS. Where? Congress would not take any action on the question. It would have only the right of negation. If Congress did not take any action on it-in other words, if the President's plan were approved by reason of the 10-day period expiring and neither House disapproving it-where would one look in the laws of the United States to find that the Interstate Commerce Commission had been abolished?

Mr. GILLETTE. The records of the action of the Congress embodied in the law-if we are to enact the bill into law-and the records of the subsequent proceedings, taken as a whole, would show the status of the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not know that I make myself clear. Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GILLETTE. Certainly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Perhaps the specific answer to the question propounded by the Senator from Maryland is to be found in the language of the bill.

On page 9, beginning in line 15, it is distinctly provided

If the reorganizations specified in a reorganization plan take effect, the reorganization plan shall be printed in the Statutes at Large in the same volume as the public laws, and shall be printed in the Federal Register.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. Now let us go further. How does the act of the President of the United States obtain the force of law so that it becomes a statute of the Congress of the United States like any other law?

Mr. GILLETTE. By the subsequent action of the Con-

Mr. TYDINGS. But Congress takes no subsequent action. It has only the power of negation.

Mr. GILLETTE. At the time we initiate action we specify the various steps by which it will take effect.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true; but the bill itself does not say what the President is going to find. It only gives him the power, I maintain, to put in the statutes a law supposed to be a law of Congress, a law which the records of neither House show Congress has ever considered, and which becomes a statute of the United States by Executive decree. Am I not correct in that statement?

Mr. GILLETTE. All the argument made by the eminent Senator from Maryland and others on the floor of the Senate goes back to the initial proposition that we are clothing an agent with power to make a report, and instructing him to make a report. What action we shall take after the report comes back in order to give it effect-

Mr. TYDINGS. I think there is a distinction.

Mr. GILLETTE. I realize that there is.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator from Colorado raised an important point. I am not arguing with the Senator. I am merely seeking information.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am arguing. Last year I strongly supported the position of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator from Colorado raised the question whether or not a President by authority of Congress to reorganize the Government, could abolish a department created by Congress through affirmative law. The Senator's answer is "yes," and particularly so under the proposed plan, because after the President abolishes a department or bureau the plan comes back to Congress, and if Congress does not choose to act the President's plan becomes a law after 10 days.

Mr. GILLETTE. Then the Senator agrees that every step up to that point is perfectly proper.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I will not agree to that, but I will assume it for the sake of argument.

Mr. GILLETTE. Up to the time the Senator and I part company.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. GILLETTE. Up to the time the report comes back to the Congress as a plan proposed by the President, with the provision, as argued so ably by the Senator from Maryland and by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], that the language means to abolish functions.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not yet law.

Mr. GILLETTE. No; of course, it is not yet law. Mr. TYDINGS. Suppose——

Mr. GILLETTE. Wait a moment. The Senator and I have fully agreed that every step taken up to that time, regardless of any language as to authority to abolish functions, is perfectly proper.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will not agree to that; but I will assume, for the sake of carrying on the discussion, that we are in agreement, though, to be honest, I could not quite agree completely with that assertion of the law. However, let us assume that the position which the Senator states is the law, and is accurate. Congress fails to take any action, and a period of 10 days elapses. Then the President's order becomes law, as I understand. Is that correct?

Mr. GILLETTE. A period of 60 days.

Mr. TYDINGS. A period of 60 days. Is that correct? Mr. GILLETTE. Unless the Congress has acted under the powers reserved to it in the law.

Mr. TYDINGS. Congress fails to act. Then the President's order becomes the law of the land. Where do we find in the acts of Congress an instance in which a former act of Congress has been repealed in that fashion? May the Executive be given authority to repeal acts of Congress by the passage of a law authorizing him to do so?

I am asking for information, because frankly, without any discussion, I believe that if we give the President that much authority we violate the limitations on the delegation of legislative power, which must have a top and a bottom. We give the President authority, in effect, to repeal an act of Congress; and the citizen can find no law in all the statute books in which the act creating the Interstate Commerce Commission has been revised, altered, or repealed.

I think that is a true statement of the case. I should like to hear the Senator say whether or not he believes the failure of Congress to take action, thus permitting the President's recommendation to become a law, would be good law; in other words, that the President could abolish a department by Executive order because the Congress had failed

Mr. GILLETTE. I will say to the Senator that I did not rise for the purpose of arguing the advisability of doing it.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understand that.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am not able to argue the question of advisability or inadvisability. I rise simply to state that during the interminable time I have been on my feet and listened to argument I have not heard it disputed that we have a right to do it if we decide that it is the advisable method to pursue.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point I make is that I do not believe we have the right to do it unless Congress finally takes some affirmative action.

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Senator takes that position, he differs from every other Member of the Senate who has spoken.

Mr. TYDINGS. In the case suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, Congress passed an act empowering the Secretary of the Treasury to consolidate the Internal Revenue Bureau, not to abolish it, not to change—

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President-

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield at that point—

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois.
Mr. LUCAS. I ask the Senator to yield to me in order that I may ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland a question.

Mr. GILLETTE. If the Senator from Maryland wishes to be interrogated, I gladly yield.

Mr. LUCAS. My friend from Maryland seems greatly disturbed over the question where there could be found in the Federal statutes a law which by implication may have repealed some act of Congress and abolished some commission or agency which had been created by Congress. I should like to develop that thought, and ask the Senator where we would find such an act if we should adopt the Wheeler amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I previously stated that while I would support the Wheeler amendment I did not intend to vote for the bill. I raised the point that unless Congress itself finally passed the law there would not be on the Statutes of the United States any law repealing or altering any other law which the Congress had passed. It would appear on the statutes of the United States simply as an Executive order, and we should be legislating by Executive order rather than by congressional action. I should like to have the Senator tell me where the citizen would go to ascertain whether on the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I assumed would be abolished by the President in the example I took, had really been abolished, altered, or changed.

Mr. LUCAS. May I ask one further question?

Mr. TYDINGS. Certainly.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the distinguished Senator from Maryland, he takes the position that neither the Wheeler amendment nor the provision in the bill has any effect whatever; but what he is complaining about is the original delegation of power by the Congress of the United States to the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should not want to answer that question categorically. However, as I understand the philosophy of the Senator's question, I believe that what we are doing is legislating by Executive order rather than delegating to the President power to perform some particular function.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President-

Mr. GILLETTE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan to ask the Senator from Maryland a question.

Mr. BROWN, I do not wish to ask a question. I wish to answer one.

The Senator wished to know whether or not a situation could arise whereby the President could repeal in effect a statute enacted by Congress. As the Senator will recall, such a situation arose early in our history. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] referred to it. The situation arose in 1809, I think, when the Congress, during trouble with France, specifically gave the President authority to establish an embargo against importation of goods from across the water, upon a condition. That condition was that the foreign country—France, in this particular instance—discriminated unfairly against American exports to France. The precise situation which existed in that instance is exactly the situation which exists in connection with the bill. That power was upheld by the Supreme Court, and has been upheld many times since. (See Brig Aurora, 7 Cranch, 382; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649.)

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

I do not think the Senator has drawn a correct parallel. Did the President repeal the act of Congress or simply make an exception to fit certain cases?

Mr. BROWN. The President suspended a law which Congress had enacted.

Mr. TYDINGS. For how long?

Mr. BROWN. For so long as the condition prevailed.

Mr. TYDINGS. But he did not repeal the act?

Mr. BROWN. He repealed the act, in effect.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; he suspended the operation of the act.

Mr. BROWN. The trouble with the Senator is that he fails to see that the Congress sets up the standard by which the Executive acts and the authority under which he acts. That is what is attempted to be done by the first section of the pending bill, namely, to set up a standard under which the Executive may act. The Executive, as the Senator implies, does impliedly repeal what Congress has heretofore done, but he does it not because we give him power to do so by laying down the standards by which he may act.

Mr. TYDINGS. I follow the Senator's argument, but I do not believe the parallel is accurately drawn. In the instant case to which the Senator alludes the President never repealed a single solitary act of the Congress. What the President did, acting within the limitations imposed on him by the Congress, was to suspend the action of that law in certain cases when certain facts were evolved. In the present case, if the exceptions are wiped out as they are likely to be—and I use that for illustration—the President may reorganize without any limitation whatsoever worthy of the name the entire executive branch of the Government of the United States, and even though the Congress takes no action after it is notified of the Presidential order, his act becomes the law of the land.

Mr. BROWN. It seems to me that it is identical in principle.

Mr. TYDINGS. It may be.

Mr. BROWN. If we say to the President, "Mr. President, if you find that the Federal Reserve Board and the office of the Comptroller of the Currency are each performing the same function in examining Federal Reserve banks; if you find that condition to exist, we say to you you may abolish the function of the office of Comptroller of the Currency in examining such banks." I think, however—and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Colorado—

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan allow me to interrupt him there, with the indulgence of our very generous friend from Iowa—and I am not going to impose much longer on his time—

Mr. GILLETTE. So far as I am concerned, I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me give the Senate an illustration of the point I have been arguing. In a railroad rate case, in a demurrage case, or in any case affecting charges imposed upon a shipper or an assignee by a common carrier, the law provides that the demurrage code under the seal of the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be accepted as evidence of what the tolls, charges, and penalties really are in demurrage cases. I think that is plain.

In other words, if there is a code under the seal of the Interstate Commerce Commission it may be introduced in a damage case involving a charge for demurrage by a railroad against some assignee of a cargo, and the demurrage code fixes the measure of damages which the jury may find. That is law.

Now let us suppose that the President in a proposed reorganization plan abolishes the Interstate Commerce Commission; where will be the act of Congress authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission under its seal to furnish to a litigant in court that code for the purpose of presenting it in evidence?

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator from Wyoming answered that question. It will have to be found in the Statutes at Large, which the Senator mentioned as being referred to in this bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BROWN. I will yield in just a moment. I do not want to get away from the fundamental question to which I was referring, and I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Colorado. Under paragraph (4) of section

1 of the pending bill there is no provision for the abolition of a function of government. It reads:

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government.

But recurring to my bank analogy, I do not think there is authority in this bill to abolish the function of examining the banks of the United States.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, I believe I still have the floor. I desire to yield the floor and let the Senator from Michigan have the floor in his own right.

Mr. BROWN. I thank the Senator from Iowa.

I say that under paragraph (4) there can be no abolition of a function. Everything that existing law requires should be done must be done. The President cannot wipe out all agencies that perform a given function, but he can wipe them all out but one.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Subsection (4) on page 5 reads:

(4) make provision for winding up the affairs of the executive agency abolished or the affairs of the executive agency with respect to the functions abolished, as the case may be; and

Where does the Senator find that every function save one can be abolished; and where is the one function and what is the one function that is retained?

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, recurring to my illustration-

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment to point out to the Senator an answer to his question if I might.

Mr. BROWN. Very well. I thought I could answer the Senator, but the Senator from Colorado can do it better.

Mr. ADAMS. The difficulty is that the Senator from Michigan was referring to paragraph (4), on page 2, while the Senator from Maryland was looking at paragraph (4) at the bottom of page 5. That led to confusion. Paragraph (c) of section 4, on page 4, provides that-

Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that—
(c) The abolition of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a), he shall—

Then, at the top of page 5, paragraph (d) provides that he shall-prepare a reorganization plan for the making of the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions as to which he has made findings and which he includes in the plan.

Mr. BROWN. My point, I will say to both Senators and all Senators who are within range of my voice, is that nowhere in this proposed statute can there be found any right, authority, or power given to the President of the United States to abolish a function which the Congress by statute says must be continued.

Now, to proceed with my illustration-

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. The Senator from Maryland does not permit me to complete my thought before interrupting me.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said that at no place in this proposed act could there be found such a provision. If that be so, then we are not reading the same provisions. The bill says the President shall have the power to abolish "the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions

Mr. BROWN. Provided-and it is written all through the proposed statute-provided that that function is taken care of by some other agency.

Mr. TYDINGS. Where is that found?

Mr. BROWN. In subsection (4) on page 2-

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government.

Let me illustrate it to the Senator in another way. The President could not abolish the Reclamation Service unless he provided some other agency to do the work now being performed by that Service. Perhaps it is not a very good illustration or distinction to make in a constitutional argument, but I say it is somewhat similar to the difference between substantive law and adjective law; that is, in existing law Congress says that certain things must be done; but it says to the President, "You may choose the agency by which the function will be performed, but if there are two, three, four, or five agencies performing the same function, such as the examination of banks, then you can wipe out four of the five, but you cannot wipe out the fifth; the function must still be performed by someone."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am in agreement with the Senator as to what can be done under this bill; but the Interstate Commerce Commission could be entirely wiped out and its rate-making authority could be transferred, we will say, to the Maritime Commission.

Mr. BROWN. Of course, the Senator recognizes-

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not say that would be done.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator recognizes that it would not be done under this bill, because the Interstate Commerce Commission is within the exempted classes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; but I am assuming for the purpose of the argument that there are no exemptions.

Mr. BROWN. I say it could be done through some other agency of a similar nature.

Mr. TYDINGS. Congress has passed an act providing that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be the agency to fix the rates of the country. In the absence of some final congressional action other than negative actionand I am saying this seriously and in good faith-I am wondering whether the action of the President in abolishing the Interstate Commerce Commission would not be a delegation of congressional authority beyond our limitations and ability to go without Congress taking some additional action.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I think it ought to be said that the argument of the Senator from Maryland is altogether too subtle. He bases his entire discussion upon a premise which does not exist. In every 100 words he speaks about the abolition of the Interstate Commerce Commission, although that body is positively exempted. It is altogether unfair to any person who reads the Congressional Record, without reading the record of this entire debate, to read what the Senator from Maryland says about the abolition of the Interstate Commerce Commission and the abolition of its rates. The qualification which the Senator introduces every 5,000 words will not be read by those who read various paragraphs of his discussion. Let us confine the argument to exactly what the proposition is.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Then, will the Senator from Wyoming concede that if the Interstate Commerce Commission were not within the exemptions my argument would be sound? Mr. O'MAHONEY. I shall not concede that at all because the Senator is not arguing on the bill-

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I am.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And he has not listened to the words of the Senator from Michigan. Will the Senator now listen to me for just a moment? Let me ask him to refer to page 2. to the language which the Senator from Michigan has been reciting, beginning at line 9. Paragraph (4) of section 1, to which the Senator from Michigan has alluded, is perfectly clear. It is all one whole. It declares that one of the primary purposes for which Congress is now authorizing the President to act is this:

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary for the efficient conduct of the Government.

The Senator in his argument reads this paragraph as though it were two distinct paragraphs. It is one paragraph. If the President, exercising the authority conveyed to him by the bill, undertakes to consolidate agencies having similar functions, then certainly it is clear after the consolidation that if the agency which is consolidated with another agency is still allowed to stand without being abolished, the reorganization is ineffective; and, as the Senator from Michigan has so clearly stated, this abolition of agencies and functions depends solely upon the consolidation of those

Mr. BROWN. I was just about to take the Senator from the floor, but after that remark he may go on. [Laughter.] Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I read this language, it is clearly intended to perfect the consolidation, and not at all to do what the Senator from Maryland suggests.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Indiana, who has been on his feet for some time.

Mr. MINTON. Under existing law the President of the United States has had authority, and has exercised that authority, to transfer the functions of certain agencies to other agencies, and to abolish the agency from which he transferred them. I have in mind, for instance, the Shipping Board, which the President abolished by transferring its functions to the Commerce Department. As I understand the pending bill, that is all that the President may do. He may reorganize these agencies by transferring functions from one to another. When he transfers a function from agency A to agency B, he abolishes the function in agency A, but the function still remains in agency B.

Mr. BROWN. Exactly.

Mr. MINTON. Now let me go just one step further. If the President should do what the Senator from Maryland [Mr. Typings] has conjured up, if he should do what the Senator has suggested, in my judgment the President would be violating the provisions of the bill; and leaving out entirely the question of essentiality, he would be attempting to abolish a Commission that he had no authority to abolish. The Commission, therefore, would remain in existence. The Commissioners might file their claims for salaries before the Court of Claims and have adjudicated by the court the question whether or not the President had violated the terms of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. To sum up my view upon this subject-and I am starting in the middle of my argument, because I obtained the floor when I was answering a question—it is my contention that the President has no power or authority, under this bill or any of its two or three predecessors, to prevent the enforcement by some appropriate agency of the will of Congress. He may, as I said, abolish five out of six agencies, but he may not abolish the last one. The will and direction of Congress under existing law must be followed.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I was going to ask about the pending amendment. I do not want to interrupt the Senator's course of thought.

Mr. BROWN. Go right ahead; I yield.

Mr. ADAMS. As I understand the Wheeler amendment, it involves simply the one question whether or not the Senate of the United States wishes to have a veto upon the President's plan. I was about to ask the Senator whether or not he sees any evil in the Senate exercising that veto as an individual legislative body.

Mr. BROWN. I was about to take up that subject.

I say to the Senator from Colorado, whose legal ability I greatly admire, that I, who am now against the Wheeler amendment—although I voted for it a year ago because I could not get across the substance of this amendmentbelieve that the Wheeler amendment, which would amount to the same thing as the enactment of a statute after the President's orders came here, adds something to the constitutionality of this bill. The Senator from Colorado took the opposite view, saying that he did not think it added any more to the constitutionality of the bill than did the Gillette-Brown-Johnson amendment. I think the Wheeler amendment does add something to the bill in that respect, but I do not believe it is necessary to the constitutionality of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS. May I make just a brief comment along that line? I will say to the Senator that I see in this matter two entirely separate and distinct questions. One is as to the right of Congress to make the delegation of reorganization to the President. The second is as to whether or not, that delegation having been made, valid or invalid, we wish to reserve to ourselves the right to veto the reorganization plan.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator has clearly in mind just what I have in mind as to the issue here. First, there is no authority on the part of Congress to delegate its legislative power. It cannot be done; but what is legislative power is a matter of great difference of opinion. This bill does not, as I construe it, delegate legislative power.

Let me say that I frankly believe this is a close question. I think there is some doubt about the constitutionality of the pending measure; but, in my view of my duties as a Senator and of the expressions which the Supreme Court heretofore has made, I do not believe that doubt ought to prevent me from voting for a bill which I believe to be constitutional.

The Court has many times said, and said very recently, that the only way in which a constitutional question can reach the Court is on the basis of some legislation. Every Federal act that has ever been tested in the Supreme Court of the United States or in any Federal court throughout the country got there because the Congress passed the act. The Court said very recently, I think in the case of Evans against Gore, involving the right to tax the salary of a judge, that Senators were acting entirely within their rights in voting for a bill about the constitutionality of which they had some doubts so that the question of the power might be presented to the courts of the United States for adjudication. I fully believe in that principle; and it will be the basis of my views upon the public-salary and bond-tax proposition which will doubtless come before Congress before long.

We have in this bill, however, two constitutional questions. First, may we delegate this authority to the President? Second, does part 2 of the House bill raise further doubt to the constitutionality of the bill?

I discuss the first question, May we delegate this authority to the President of the United States? What are the precedents? What have the courts found?

As the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] has twice pointed out, a three judge court in the city of New York, consisting of a circuit judge and two district judges, has approved the constitutionality of the precise and exact powers that are granted to the President in this bill.

Regardless of whether it contains a 60-day provision, by which the Executive order becomes effective after the running of 60 days, or whether it becomes effective upon certain action or inaction by the Congress, the courts have twice held that the language used in the pending measure constitutionally confers the powers enumerated to reorganize the Government upon the President.

I have, I think, quite thoroughly discussed, with the aid and assistance of the questions of the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Wyoming and others, the fact that we do not by this measure permit the President to abolish any functions which must be performed by the executive authority of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator has been very fair, and I am particularly impressed by his remark that while he feels that the bill is constitutional and good in its present form, subsequent action by Congress might be desirable to strengthen its validity.

Mr. BROWN. I think such action eventually will be taken. Mr. TYDINGS. That was the point I was attempting to bring out by the illustrations. I think we are in a twilight zone there, and it would be better to put the law in condition so that it would be known to be valid than to leave it in this nebulous condition.

Mr. BROWN. I think the twilight is pretty bright.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think it is pretty dark.
Mr. BROWN. Our courts have approved many delegations of authority to the President of the United States, and to other administrative and executive officers, which were much stronger, if I may use that term, than the one before us.

Reference has been made to the suspension of the importation of goods. I think the instance I am about to give is one that is closer to the facts than any other. When the Brooklyn Bridge was built the Congress delegated to the Secretary of War authority to determine whether or not that bridge was a menace to navigation. It laid down but one standard; that is, that the bridge should be built so that it would not impede or interfere with navigation. The Secretary of War was given absolute and plenary authority to determine what was a menace to navigation, how high the bridge should be above the waters of the East River between New York and Brooklyn. Its plans were to be submitted to the Secretary and determination as to whether it would be constructed or not left to him.

The matter got into the courts, in the case, I think, of Miller v. The Mayor of New York (109 U. S. 385). The statute was challenged upon the precise ground on which Senators challenge the pending bill; that is, it was contended that it was unwarranted, unlawful, and unconstitutional delegation of legislative authority to the Secretary of War to permit him to determine how high the bridge should be and what its general plan and make-up should be. The court then held, and has held many times since, that there was no unconstitutional delegation of authority, that it was not a delegation of legislative authority.

The same as the Senator from New York [Mr. Wagner] pointed out a few days ago is true in regard to the Interstate Commerce Commission, which not only fixes rates but establishes safety rules. We have delegated to many administrative officers the right not only to prescribe rules and regulations but to prescribe penalties, punishment, for the violation of those rules, and that, it seems to me, comes much closer to being a delegation of legislative authority than we have here.

Mr. President, if we assume that the Federal court in New York was correct in its determinations in the two cases cited and in the other precedents I have mentioned, then the pending bill is not an unlawful delegation of authority, then the question arises, Is the veto provision, so-called, contained in the bill as it passed the House a valid exercise of legislative power? In other words, may we by congressional action less than the enactment of a law, exercise a veto power?

Mr. President, many times we have done practically the same thing. We did it in the two cases I have mentioned, the two cases decided in New York, the case of Isbrandtsen-Moller Co. against the United States and the case of Swayne & Hoyt, Ltd., against the United States, and the Supreme Court there upheld the same power and authority we grant here, and a similar method of disapproval of the President's action.

We have delegated to the Secretary of the Treasury power to determine when a condition exists upon which a law becomes effective, and the Supreme Court has upheld such a provision. In the recent tobacco case, Currin against Wallace, decided January 30 last, we delegated to those interested in the marketing of tobacco the right to determine whether or not the law became effective, in their area and the Supreme Court of the United States said in that case:

So far as growers of tobacco are concerned, the required referendum—

That is, the right to determine whether or not the law would be effective—does not involve any delegation of legislative authority. Congress has merely placed a restriction upon its own regulation by withholding its operation as to a given market "unless two-thirds of the growers voting favor it." Similar conditions are frequently found in police regulations.

If we can say to a group of individuals who are interested in the marketing of tobacco that a solemn enactment of Congress does not go into effect until they themselves have decided to adopt it—that is, until two-thirds of them have voted in favor of the proposal—surely we in Congress can say that the President's order shall not go into effect until that order has come here and has remained here 60 days, and shall not then go into effect if both Houses join in a concurrent resolution to the effect that the order is not to become the law of the land. It seems to me it is an almost precise and exact parallel to the case.

If the Congress, as the Senator from Colorado stated, can determine as a condition precedent upon which a law is to go into effect, that the approval of certain Members of the Senate—I think he said the Republican Members of the Senate—shall be required; if, as he says, we can do that, then surely we can require as a condition precedent to the effectiveness of the law that the President's order shall remain here for a period of 60 days, during which time Congress may take appropriate action.

Mr. President, I think the question is a narrow one; I think it is one which might well have been compromised. As a matter of fact, the proposal here is a compromise of the issue that was presented to the House and the Senate when the last reorganization bill was defeated.

I firmly believe, first, that the Congress may grant the President these powers, understanding all the time that he may abolish no function which must be performed by the executive department as directed by existing law.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. In just a moment. Second, I firmly believe that this compromise is a fair and just one, and that the Congress may validly provide that through this method it may prevent, by action of both Houses, enactment of any reorganization plan which the Congress itself believes to be undesirable. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Wherein does the Senator find that the President is prohibited from the abolition of a function? Mr. BROWN. I do not think, first, that the President can do anything which he is not expressly authorized to do by the proposed law. That is fundamental. Is not that a fact?

Mr. BYRD. If the Senator will look at page 4 he will see that the President is authorized to abolish "the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof," and if the Senator will refer to the House report on the bill, he will see that on page 4 it is stated:

That whenever the President, after the investigation provided for in section 1, finds that any one or more transfers, consolidations, or abolitions are necessary to accomplish any one or more of the five purposes—

And so forth.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the Senator was in the Chamber when I argued that question. I take the view that the entire power of the President is limited by part 1, section 1, and that he may not abolish any function on the part of any agency unless that function is performed by some other agency.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator will see that the only limitation is the declaration of purpose in section 1. A new declaration of purpose was added yesterday by the unanimous vote of the Senate, which declares that—

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of the continued national deficits beginning in 1931 it is desirable drastically to reduce substantially Government expenditures and that such reduction may be accomplished in some measure by proceeding immediately under the provisions of this act.

If in carrying out any one of these declarations of purpose in the judgment of the President it is thought necessary to abolish functions he, of course, has the power to do it under the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think he has the right to abolish a function which would prevent the doing of an act which the Congress has heretofore required the executive department to do. Was the Senator in the Chamber when I discussed that?

Mr. BYRD. Unfortunately, I was not.

Mr. BROWN. I think this is a pat illustration. As the Senator knows, we have a Federal Reserve bank, the Comptroller's Office, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, examining banks. I know that the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation are eliminated from this bill. The President may not abolish them. But assume, for the purpose of argument, that he could. I say that the President could not abolish all three of those functions. He would have to retain one agency which would conduct the examination of banks. He could not abolish three of them. If there were five different agencies performing the same duty, he could abolish four of them, but he could not abolish the fifth.

Mr. BYRD. Let us take, for example, the farm conservation program. Is it the judgment of the Senator from Michigan that the President could abolish the farm conservation program if he thought it wise to do so in the interest of reduction of expenditures?

Mr. BROWN. Not unless the same function could be performed by some other agency to which he assigned the func-

Mr. BYRD. I am not speaking of the agency. I am speaking of the function itself. The function of the farm conservation program itself is a definite, specific function.

Mr. BROWN. Anything which Congress has ordered the executive department to do by existing law must be done. I do not think the President would have authority to abolish all agencies which are engaged in the performance of that function. He has to leave someone in the Government to do the task imposed by law.

Mr. BYRD. I am not speaking of agencies of Government. I am speaking of the function itself. For instance, under my interpretation, the President could do away with all appropriations for the soil-conservation program in the reorganization plan.

Mr. BROWN. He will have no other agency to perform the same general duty then.

Mr. BYRD. He will have no other agency.

Mr. BROWN. I disagree with the Senator in that matter. I say that the President is limited by section 4, which says that he may reduce the number of such agencies, consolidating those having similar functions, and abolishing such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necessary. But he cannot abolish all the agencies that perform the function. There must be one left to do what the Congress by statute requires to be done.

Mr. BYRD. Let the Senator look on page 5, at subsection (2), whereby the plan shall also—

Make provision for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property (including office equipment), and personnel affected by such transfer, consolidation, or abolition.

Then the same provision is made in subsection (4), and so forth, through the act. The Senator from Michigan, as I recall, was one of the first Senators, as well as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney], to suggest that the President has no power under the bill to abolish a function of government. That has been frankly and freely admitted in the debate up to this time.

Mr. BROWN. I think he can abolish any function or agency as long as he leaves one arm of the service or one agency to do the work which the Congress has directed the executive department to do. Unless the bill is so construed, it is unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power. If there is any doubt about it, let us amend it so that there may be no abolition of a function unless that function is performed by some other agency.

Mr. BYRD. Could the President, in the interpretation of the Senator from Michigan, continue the agency but abolish the function?

Mr. BROWN. He could if that agency had something else to do.

Mr. BYRD. The Department of Agriculture, for example, carries out the soil-conservation program. It has ample other activities and duties. Could the President, under this plan, abolish the soil-conservation program?

Mr. BROWN. No; I do not think he could. I do not think he should be permitted to. That would be legislation.

Mr. BYRD. I am not saying what he should be permitted to do, but has he not the power under the bill to do it?

Mr. BROWN. I do not think he has. The thing the Congress directed to be done—that is, the carrying out of the soil-conservation program—must be done by some agency of the Government.

Mr. BYRD. The House report takes recognition of that, and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] admitted it when he made his opening statement on the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know anything about that. As I read this legal language I cannot come to any conclusion other than that the power to abolish functions is not a power which may prevent the going into effect and the carrying out of the intent of Congress in any statute it has heretofore written.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. BROWN. I yield the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, it seems to me that the question of the Senator from Virginia is answered in the House report to which he refers. It is my conception of the bill that section 1 outlines the powers which are conveyed and delegated to the President.

Mr. BROWN. And with a limitation on every one.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. With a limitation on every one of them. Section 4 describes the manner in which those powers are to be carried out. The House report, from which the Senator from Virginia read, says distinctly on page 4:

Section 4 is the section which describes the circumstances under which the President exercises the powers conferred upon him, the nature of the powers conferred, and the duties of the President. It provides that whenever the President, after the investigation provided for in section 1, finds that any one or more transfers, consolidations, or abolitions are necessary to accomplish any one or more of the five purposes specified in section 1 (a)—

Mr. BYRD. At that point let me say a word.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me finish, please.

Under section 1 (a) he may thus act:

Section 4, in lines 22 and 23, provides—

Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that-

Certain acts are-necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a).

The purposes of section 1 (a), therefore, circumscribe the powers of the President.

Mr. BYRD. What are those purposes?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Those purposes are set forth in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5).

Mr. BYRD. A new purpose was added by the Senate yesterday, and that was that—

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of continued national deficits beginning in 1931 it is desirable to reduce substantially Government expenditures.

Suppose the President should decide that in order to carry out that one purpose of section 1 it was necessary to curtail the functions of government, would he not have the right

Mr. O'MAHONEY. He would not have the right to do so any more than he would have the right, for the purpose of reducing the deficit, to do away with the agencies which are specifically exempted.

Mr. BYRD. Here is one purpose, to reduce the expenditures of government, and the President certainly would have the right to abolish functions of government to do that.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. No; that all precedes the colon in section 1 (a). The purposes and the powers of the reorganization granted to the President are contained in paragraphs (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5), and each one of them must be read according to the interpretation of the whole.

Mr. BYRD. There is a new declaration of purpose which heads the entire list, that was adopted by the Senate yesterday, and that was to reduce the expenses of government.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is a preliminary declaration. It was always in the bill.

Mr. BYRD. It was not always in the bill. It was just placed in the bill yesterday.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator believe that the President could abolish the Home Owners' Loan Corporation and not turn its functions over to any other agency? I do not think he could.

Mr. WHEELER. Will the Senator let me answer that question? There is not any question about that. If the Senator will read the language of the bill, he will find that it is perfectly clear. It says:

Whenever the President, after investigation, finds-

Mr. BROWN. Where is the Senator reading?

Mr. WHEELER. From page 4.

Mr. BROWN. I am contending that section 1 is a limitation upon the entire act.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is entirely wrong.

Mr. BROWN. Because its subsections determine the limitations upon the power of the President.

Mr. WHEELER. The President may find that action should be taken with respect to any one of them. He does not have to find that action must be taken with respect to all of those matters. He can abolish a certain function.

Mr. BROWN. Only if the function is performed by some other agency of the Government.

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Montana misreads the bill if he reaches that conclusion. Let us read it. There is only one way to understand language, and that is by reading the language itself. The Senator from Virginia has just referred to the very sound amendment offered by him and adopted by the Senate, declaring the purpose of Congress to do everything that may be possible, within certain limitations, to do away with deficits. The Senator's amendment clearly is a preliminary declaration in the nature of a preamble.

Mr. WHEELER. That is all. It does not mean anything. Mr. O'MAHONEY. It provides:

The Congress hereby declares that by reason of continued national deficits, beginning in 1931, it is desirable to reduce substantially Government expenditures, and that such reduction may be accomplished in some measure by proceeding immediately—under the provisions of this act. Accordingly the President-

Then we come back to the language of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. The Senator is reading from what page? Mr. O'MAHONEY. Page 1.

The President shall investigate the organization of all executive agencies of the Government and shall determine what changes therein are necessary to accomplish the following purposes.

Those purposes, outlined there, are the complete measure of the authority of the President, and none other.

Mr. WHEELER. I beg the Senator's pardon-

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Just a moment. The language is clear. I will demonstrate it in just a moment if the Senator will bear with me. What are the purposes? On page 2:

(1) To reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government.

(2) To increase the efficiency of the operations of the Government to the fullest extent practicable within the revenues:

(3) To group, coordinate, and consolidate executive agencies of the Government, as nearly as may be, according to major purposes;

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head, and to abolish such agencies or such functions thereof as may not be necesry for the efficient conduct of the Government; and (5) To eliminate overlapping and duplication of effort.

Every bit of argument that has been presented by the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Virginia is based upon the contention that we do go far enough to enable the President to abolish functions and abolish agencies and abolish departments to effect a saving of money. On the other hand they complain because the bill allows the President to do what is within the scope of these five policies, without returning the action by the President to the Congress for the enactment of the law.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Virginia has not made any complaint about efforts to reduce expenditures.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad that the Senator has not.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President-

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just a moment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will yield to the Senator from Mich-

Mr. BROWN. The very section from which the Senator from Montana is reading, and I think he read subsection (c) of section (4) on page 4

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I did.

Mr. BROWN. Is followed by the language:

Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that • • • the abolition of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof, is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a).

It refers back to the purposes and the conditions laid down in section 1 of the bill.

Mr. WHEELER. What I am saying to the Senator is that the President does not have to find all these things; and that is the reason I am calling the matter to the Senator's attention. If the President finds any one of them, his finding of fact cannot be disturbed by the court. All he has to do is to make an order and to say, "I find that the abolition of one of these bureaus is necessary for the purpose of saving expense to the Government of the United States."

Mr. BROWN. Only if its functions can be transferred to another agency.

Mr. WHEELER. No. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on that particular point I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. BROWN. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I listened with very great interest to the Senator's argument. However, I wish to call the attention of the Senator to one fact. If the Senator is correct in his premise, then subsection (c) on page 4 is wholly and entirely unnecessary. Therefore it seems to me that the construction which the Senator puts upon the language cannot possibly be the correct interpretation. For example, section 4 says:

Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that

(a) The transfer of the whole or any part of any executive agency the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency; or

(b) The consolidation of the functions vested in any executive agency; * * is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a), he shall * * * prepare a reorganizapurposes of tion plan-

And so forth.

If the Senator's argument proceeded upon a correct premise, subsection (c) would be wholly and entirely unnecessary. It would serve no purpose whatsoever in the bill. That interpretation cannot be the proper one, because the Senator's position, broadly, is that the President may abolish every agency but one, and may transfer any particular function from any agency, but must lodge it in some other agency. Therefore it seems to me that the Senator, if he will look at the language in line 15, commencing with subsection (a), is bound to see that the full power of transfer of an executive agency, and the full power of transfer of any function thereof is clearly, completely, and absolutely given in express language. Therefore, the abolition of a function could have no possible meaning if the Senator's interpretation is correct, that the President may abolish the exercise of the function, and take away from every agency but one the exercise of the function.

Mr. BROWN. Let me apply the Senator's argument to a particular state of facts. The Senator knows that the office of the Comptroller of the Currency examines banks. He knows that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation examines banks, and he knows that the Federal Reserve Board examines banks. The President comes to that situation. He reads subsection (a), line 15, on page 4, and he says: "I have concluded to transfer the function of examining banks, which is now in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation." That is all he could do under subsection (a), is it not? He could merely transfer the function. "But," he says, "here is the office of the Comptroller of the Currency without a single function to perform. What am I to do with it?" He reads on, and he comes down to subsection (c), in line 20, and he says, "There I have the power to abolish the office of the Comptroller of the Currency because I have transferred its function to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation." will say to the Senator that that could not be done without both subsection (a) and the power vested in the President in subsection (c).

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will permit me, it is quite true that if he transferred all the functions of the office of the Comptroller of the Currency to some other agency of Government, he might still lack the power to abolish the office. But when he is given, in the conjunctive, the power to abolish the office and abolish the functions, the language means precisely and exactly what it says, because in subsection (a) he has all the power necessary to transfer the function to whatever agency he wishes to select.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator must admit that under subsection (a) he could not abolish the office of Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the agency. I have no objection to that.

Mr. BROWN. All he can do is transfer the function to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Mr. GEORGE. Or to another agency.

Mr. BROWN. In order to get rid of the Comptroller's office-and I am merely using that as an illustration-he must come down to subsection (c), to find the power to abolish it.

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. Otherwise it would stand without a duty to

Mr. GEORGE. That is correct. He must go to subsection (c) to obtain the power to abolish the agency. The Senator is entirely correct. Also, he must go to subsection (c) to find the power to abolish the function and not transfer it.

Mr. BROWN. That is correct. Mr. GEORGE. Because, as clear as day, he has the right to transfer the function under subsection (a).

Mr. BROWN. My position is that nowhere in the bill can be found the authority on the part of the President to abolish all the agencies which perform certain functions. He may abolish five out of six, but he may not abolish the sixth.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President-

Mr. BROWN. I do not wish to yield at this time.

We must go back to section 1; and section 4, on page 4, tells us to do it. It says "to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a)." Under subparagraph 4 of subsection (a) of section 1, the President is limited to abolishing agencies "by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head."

So, I get back to my original proposition, that there is no authority to abolish the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, for example, unless the functions performed by the Home Owners' Loan Corporation now engaged only in collections can be transferred to the Treasury or Federal Housing Administration, or the United States Housing Authority, or some other agency.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. GLASS. Suppose the President came to the conclusion, in his discretion, that the Home Owners' Loan Corporation could be abolished without affecting the efficiency of the Government. Suppose the President came to the conclusion which many persons have already arrived at, that it is not necessary to examine the banks, and that he would abolish bank examination.

Mr. BROWN. He would be violating the provisions of the bill. He could not do it under the bill.

Mr. GLASS. The discretion is left to the President to reach such a conclusion.

Mr. GEORGE. With all due respect to the Senator, it seems to me very clear that the President can abolish functions, and that is my whole trouble with the legislation.

Mr. BROWN. If we use "function" in the narrow sense of the function which is being immediately performed by a particular agency, the Senator is correct. However, if we use it in the larger sense of the thing necessary to be done under existing law-for example, the examination of banks under the direction of existing law—then the function cannot be abolished. It is merely the performance of the function by a certain agency which is abolished, but the statutory duty placed on the Executive must be done by some agency.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that I am in thorough accord with the views stated by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George]. Just read the language. It seems to me it is so plain that it is impossible for any one to misconstrue it. I have great respect for the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown], but the Senator is construing the language in section 4, in effect, to say that before the President can abolish functions he must transfer the office.

He can abolish any function he wishes. He goes back to section 1, which says that he can abolish a function if he finds that it is necessary to do it in order to reduce expenditures to the fullest extent consistent with the efficient operation of the Government. That is all he has to find. Or he can find that it is necessary to do it to increase the efficiency of operation of government to the fullest extent. He can abolish functions of office if he finds any of the things stated in section 1. First of all, if he wants to reduce the expenditures of government, he can abolish functions.

Mr. BROWN. Only if there is another agency performing a similar function.

Mr. WHEELER. No. There is no provision in the bill to that effect.

Mr. BROWN. I do not think the bill grants the authority which the Senator contends.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me read the language in section 4.

SEC. 4. Whenever the President, after investigation, finds that—
(a) the transfer of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency; or
(b) the consolidation of the functions vested in any executive agency; or-

Those are two things he can find.

Mr. BROWN. Where is the Senator reading?

Mr. WHEELER. I am reading on page 4, section 4.

(c) the abolition of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof,

Mr. BROWN. That is absolutely necessary in the event the President has found two agencies performing similar functions.

Mr. WHEELER. Where does the Senator find that statement?

Mr. BROWN. I find that in subparagraph 4 of subsection (a) of section 1.

Mr. WHEELER. The trouble is that subsection (c) of section 4 says, not that the President must find all the things in section 1, but that-

The abolition of the whole or any part of any executive agency or the functions thereof is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a).

Section 1 sets forth all these different purposes. So going back to section 1 it will be found that if the President finds any one of the conditions specified in that section he may act.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator find any authority in section 1 on page 2 to abolish a function? There is no such authority there.

Mr. WHEELER. No.

Mr. BROWN. Does the Senator find any such authority in section 2? There is no such authority there. Does he find it in section 3? There is no such authority there. The only place where he can find such authority is in section 4.

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. And that is where a similar function under a single head is existent at the present time.

Mr. WHEELER. Let me say to the Senator I have to disagree completely with him, because the power to abolish, the power to transfer, and the power to consolidate are in

Mr. BROWN. What power to abolish? The power to abolish if there is some other agency performing a similar function, and under no other condition.

Mr. WHEELER. Let us read the language. There cannot be any question about it. It says:

Whenever the President, after investigation, finds-

What? That-

(a) the transfer of the whole or any part of any executive agency the functions thereof to the jurisdiction and control of any other executive agency-

That is one thing he can do; that is the power that he is

(b) the consolidation of the functions vested in any executive agency-

Those are two things he can do.

Thirdly, he can abolish in whole or in part any executive agency, or he can abolish the functions thereof. Then it says if it-

Is necessary to accomplish one or more of the purposes of section 1 (a).

Then, by going back to section 1 (a) we find that if the President finds it is necessary in order to reduce the expenditures he may take action.

And on page 5 it is stated he can-

(d) prepare a reorganization plan for making of the transfers, consolidations, and abolitions as to which he has made findings.

Mr. BROWN. What abolitions? The abolitions that are referred to in section 4 and-

Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. In subsection (4) of section (1) of the bill. Mr. WHEELER. That is correct.

Mr. BROWN. That is, abolitions are limited to those functions which are already being performed by a similar agency or are to be so performed under the reorganization.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I submit that there is not anywhere in the bill any language that can possibly be given such a construction.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. LEE. Mr. President, I shall speak very briefly on the amendment before the Senate and on the bill which is pending.

I have listened to the interesting but hairsplitting arguments on the phraseology of this bill. Every lawyer knows that when it is undertaken to determine the meaning of a document the document must be taken as a whole and not merely one paragraph or one line. If I were allowed to take a certain choice of lines from Scripture I could prove that a man ought to go out and hang himself. For instance, the Scripture says, "And Judas went out and hanged himself"; it also says, "Go thou and do likewise"; and it further says, "What thou doest do quickly." But that kind of interpretation of language never prevails. The Supreme Court and all other courts always look at the entire document and even consider the congressional intent.

I do not believe that it would ever be considered that the Congress had the intention of passing a law that would give the President power to abolish a function that was necessary for the Executive to perform in order to execute legislation passed by the Congress.

I think the illustration of the Senator from Michigan is very much in point. Here are two agencies of the Government performing the same function, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Federal Reserve Bank Board. They perform the function of examining banks, and they both perform the same function. The President, under this bill as I read it, could abolish one agency and abolish the function of that agency, but still leave the same function performed by the other agency.

I understood the Senator from Georgia to say that if he believed that he would support the bill. Why should not the function of, say, the Federal Reserve Board to examine banks be abolished, still leaving the function of examining banks untouched so far as the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is concerned, and thus carry out the actual letter as well as the spirit of the law?

To me the most impelling argument delivered last year when we considered this subject was that of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Harrison]. We want to bring about a consolidation of agencies, but we are unable to do it as a Congress, and so we assign that power to the Executive. By so doing we have not surrendered our power any more than when people become so numerous that they cannot have a pure democracy they resort to a representative democracy and elect representatives to exercise certain powers. In that event they do not surrender their sovereignty; the people never surrender their sovereignty in a representative democracy; it is only once removed. That would be the case in this instance.

I wish to read from the speech delivered last year which was very convincing to me on this particular point. If we should adopt the so-called Wheeler amendment, in my opinion, we would nullify the whole bill; we would put the reorganization question back in the lap of Congress, and it is impossible for Congress to abolish functions and to consolidate agencies, as shown by this speech which was made last year by the Senator from Mississippi. It is very brief; just a part of one column I shall read:

Mr. Harrison. Mr. President, I have no fault to find with any Senator who differs from me on this question. I shall vote against the motion to recommit the reorganization bill.

As a member of the Select Committee on Government Organization I regret that I have not been able to render some assistance to the distinguished and able Senator from South Carolina during the consideration of the bill. He has made a courageous and apple fight and has proven his splendid qualities of leadership. the consideration of the bill. He has made a courageous and an able fight and has proven his splendid qualities of leadership. Continued conferences and hearings on the pending revenue bill have made it impossible for me to be present during all of the discussions. I rise now only because in 1921, when President Harding was President, he sent a message to the Congress making a clear-cut issue on the question of reorganization. He presented the necessity of a reorganization of the departments as one of the great and major issues.

A joint committee on reorganization was appointed consisting

A joint committee on reorganization was appointed consisting of six Members of Congress, three from the House of Representatives and three from the Senate. I was the Democratic Member of the Senate on that committee. Senator Smoot and Senator Wansworth were the Republican Members of the Senate on that committee.

We went into an investigation of the departments in an earnest and sincere attempt to reorganize the Government. For 2 years we labored at that job, and when we would be about ready to transfer a bureau from one department to another we would find that the Cabinet member at the head of the department affected would put all the forces of propaganda to work and bring influence upon Members of Congress against our proposals. Of course, our efforts in the circumstances were unsuccessful, and after 2 years of work we had accomplished nothing. I say to the Senate today that in my humble opinion Congress will never be able through any committee to reorganize the departments of the Government. The task must be placed in the hands of some one official. The President is the proper one.

With the very limited powers that are given to the President in this bill I cannot believe that he will abuse those powers. I have enough faith and confidence in him to believe that he will not.

That is the same situation which would confront us if we should adopt the Wheeler amendment, which would throw the reorganization of every department back into the lap of Congress on each one of those issues, and make it impossible for us to accomplish the purpose we have in mind.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. Wheeler's amendment is, on page 6, beginning with line 16, to strike out all down to and including line 4 on page 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

page 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 5. The reorganization specified in the plan shall not become effective until after the enactment of a joint resolution specifically approving such plan. Any such joint resolution shall provide for the approval of such plan as a whole, without modifications, and shall contain no other provisions. If any such joint resolution providing for the approval of any such plan is introduced in either House, it shall at once become the special order therein and that House shall proceed to its consideration, without reference to a committee; and, not later than 1 hour after that House meets on the tenth calendar day (Sundays excepted) after the day on which such joint resolution was introduced, a vote shall be taken in that House on the question of the passage of a joint resolution approving such plan. If any such joint resolution is passed by one House it shall be sent to the other House, and that House shall immediately proceed to its consideration, without reference to a committee. Not later than 1 hour after the House meets on the tenth calendar day (Sundays excepted) after it has received such joint resolution, a final vote shall be taken in that House on the question of the passage of such joint resolution. No notice or motion to reconsider the vote shall be in order.

And on page 9, to strike out all of part 2 down to and including line 2 on page 14.

Mr. McNARY. I call for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BYRNES. I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of no quorum having been made, the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Danaher	La Follette	Reynolds
Andrews	Davis	Lee	Russell
Ashurst	Donahey	Lewis	Schwartz
Austin	Downey	Lodge	Sheppard

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ninety Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to what is known as the Wheeler amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. On that amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——
The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ANDREWS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt]. If that Senator were present, I understand that he would vote "yea" on the question. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay." I withhold my vote.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I insist that I was on my feet, addressing the Chair, before the roll call was started.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I corroborate the statement of the Senator from Wyoming.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair saw the Senator from Wyoming, but did not hear him address the Chair. The Senator from Wyoming came into the Senate Chamber with papers in his hands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the roll call up to this point be vacated in order that the Senator from Wyoming may be recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair

hears none. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am not going to delay the roll call. Just before it was ordered by the Chair, there was a protracted debate, in which several Senators participated, with respect to the extent to which the President would be authorized under the bill to abolish the functions and agencies of the Government. The able Senator from Michigan [Mr. Brown] and I expressed one point of view with respect to the construction of the language of the bill. The able Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] and the able senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Tydings] expressed a contrary view. It was our contention that the power to abolish the functions of any agency is limited in this measure to the objective set forth in subsection (4) of section 1, namely:

To reduce the number of such agencies by consolidating those having similar functions under a single head.

I rise now merely to give notice that after the roll shall have been called it will be my purpose to offer an amendment on lines 20 and 21 of page 4, so that clause (c) of section 4 shall read:

The abolition of the whole or any part of any agency-

And this is the new language—whenever the functions thereof have been transferred to the jurisdiction and control of another agency or agencies.

With that amendment, the entire debate which was carried on heretofore this afternoon with respect to the meaning could, in my opinion, be eliminated.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BYRNES. The Senator from Wyoming has discussed with me the amendment—

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. It is not in order for our distinguished friend—I dislike to call him to order—to proceed with an argument upon this question. We all yielded to what the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'Mahoney] had to say, because we saw him on his feet endeavoring to obtain recognition, and we thought it was but just that he should have recognition; but it is not appropriate that the entire question should be reargued now. That is my point of order.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President-

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, to me the statement I was about to make is not a matter of great importance; but when the Vice President held that he was in error in having started the roll call, because he did not know that the Senator from Wyoming was addressing him, I believe any Senator had the right to address the Senate regarding the matter suggested by the Senator from Wyoming. My purpose only was to say that I intend to accept the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President— SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote! Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does any other Senator now wish to speak? If he does, the Chair will recognize him. [Laughter.] If not, the clerk will call the roll on the adoption of what is known as the Wheeler amendment.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRNES (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], who is absent. I understand that if present he would vote "yea." I transfer that pair to the Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ANDREWS. I repeat the announcement of my pair. I have a pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holl], who is absent. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. FRAZIER. My colleague the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Nye] is absent because of illness. On this vote he is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Green]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea," and, I understand, that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Green] would vote "nay" if present and voting.

Mr. LEWIS. I am authorized to announce the absence of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holf] on account of illness in his family.

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Green] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Truman] are absent on public business.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] is absent because of illness.

I am not authorized to state how these Senators would vote if present and voting.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I inquire how am I recorded?

Andrews

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is recorded as voting in the negative.

Mr. BYRNES. I change my vote from "nay" to "yea." The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 43, as follows:

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wyoming gave notice to the Chair-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I desire to make a motion in regard to the vote just taken.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President-

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion is not debatable. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri moves to reconsider the vote, the Chair understands. Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I moved to reconsider the vote, and I also moved to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. BYRNES. On the motion to lay on the table I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I rise to a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules of the Senate, the Chair understands the motion is divisible. Therefore, the motion to reconsider will be voted on first.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. A parliamentary inquiry.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.
Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Do I understand the Chair to rule that a motion to reconsider takes precedence of a motion to lay on the table?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There has to be a motion to reconsider before it can be laid on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I understand that, but a motion to lay on the table takes precedence of any preceding motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly. The Senator from Missouri is correct, but the precedents in the Senate are different from those in the House of Representatives. This is the first time, so far as the Chair knows, and so far as the Parliamentarian knows, when any Senator has made a motion to reconsider and has himself made a motion to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I can recall to the present occupant of the chair an occasion when he himself was in the chair and I made those two motions.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to lay the motion on the table.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was seeking recognition from the Chair to make a point of order that no Senator could make a motion which was debatable and then, without giving any other Senator an opportunity to be recognized, make a motion the effect of which would be to cut off all debate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is correct from one standpoint; a motion to reconsider and a motion to lay on the table are not usually made by the same Senator, so far as the Chair knows, though the Senator from Missouri says it has been done in the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President—
The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair recalls that a number of times one Senator has moved to reconsider and another Senator has risen and moved to lay that motion on the table
